Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I had intended to speak on the Senate floor on American policy in the Middle East today. As a result of the tragic events of this morning in Beirut, I debated whether it would be appropriate to go forward with this statement. But on balance, Mr. President, and at the risk of being misunderstood over my intentions—which were, and are, to highlight my deep concern over the direction of American policy in that region—I have decided to make my views known now. I believe that what I am about to say does relate in many ways to the tragedy this morning, but the issues I am about to raise need to be examined above and beyond the events of this morning. I hope that my remarks will be taken at face value and on their merits, and in that light, seriously considered by all who are concerned about the future of the Middle East and America's role there.

Terrorism has become a habitual practice in the Middle East and is of grave concern to all of us. But, at bottom, terrorism is basically a symptom of the deeper currents of conflict that course through the Middle East.

Once again Americans are awakened to the news of another tragedy in the Middle East. Terrorists have attacked the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, setting off a truck bomb which injured our Ambassador. The final casualty count is perhaps unknown at this moment. I join with all my colleagues and the American people in deploring this hateful terrorists act and in offering condolences to the families of those killed or injured.

In the midst of this latest horror and agony, it is only appropriate to raise questions regarding our present role and policy in the Middle East. At the very least, we owe it to those who have died in the past and for the safety of those who remain to undertake a probing examination of where we are in the Middle East and where we are going.

Terrorism has been a habitual practice in the Middle East and is of grave concern to all of us, but at the bottom terrorism is basically a symptom of deeper currents of conflict that course through the Middle East.

This latest tragedy in Lebanon is not an isolated incident. It is but the latest in a series of events which have served to remind the American people that little, if anything, is going right for the United States in that region of the world. It is time to ask why.

There is a growing frustration and concern on the part of myself and my colleagues with what appears to be a drift in American policy toward that region. I think it is time for the U.S. Government to get back to basics. We need to begin focusing once again on what is required to build upon the accomplishments of the Nixon-Ford and Carter administrations in moving age-old adversaries toward a peaceful resolution of their differences. To do this requires that we reflect honestly upon what has transpired in the region over the past 3½ years. This exercise, of necessity, requires that U.S. policy, or a lack thereof, be given close scrutiny. I think the facts that I speak of today are obvious for themselves.

Last week, one of America's closest allies in the Arab world, Morocco, signed a treaty of political union with Libya, catching U.S. Government officials completely off guard.

Some 45 commercial vessels have been attacked over a 7-month period in the Persian Gulf as the Iran-Iraq war takes on a new dimension which threatens directly a major oil lifeline of the world.

Last October, 241 Americans lost their lives in one terrorist act, and a total of 264 Americans lost their lives in Lebanon before today, including those 241.

Warring intercommunal factions in that country, along with Syria, forced the withdrawal of U.S. Armed Forces in order to prevent further national involvement and national embarrassment.

Progress on the continued normalization of relations between Israel and Egypt, in which a major breakthrough was scored with the Camp David agreement and the subsequent Israeli-Egyptian Treaty of Peace, has come to a virtual standstill.

King Hussein of Jordan, once considered by U.S. policymakers as pivotal to broadening the Middle East peace process, is turning to the Soviet Union for arms.

Past U.S. diplomatic activity was instrumental in achieving cease-fires in the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars and assisting in crafting the Sinai I disengagement agreement in 1974 and the Sinai II agreement in 1975. If results are any measure, U.S. diplomatic activity today appears to be either fruitless or nonexistent in the region.

The Soviet occupation of Afghanistan is more brutal today than ever, while the Soviet presence and role in Ethiopia, South Yeman, and Libya continue unabated.

What I have just outlined is the present state of affairs in the Middle East—a region of the world that the President characterized in a recent speech as being closer to peace than when he took office nearly 4 years ago.

The problems in the Middle East today cannot be laid at the feet of any one administration. I say this only because of the present administration's penchant for blaming all of the ills of the world, domestic and foreign, on past Presidents.

Yet, in the real world, the Middle East is a much more volatile and unstable region than it was when this administration came to office. Some of the problems in that region would have been uncontrollable for any administration. However, many of the problems may have been avoided or at least ameliorated had the administration been stronger on substance and more cautious in its rhetoric.

The last time Congress and the American people heard anything remotely resembling a policy for the Middle East was in September 1982, when the President announced his comprehensive peace plan for the region. What happened to that plan? Where have been the special envoys or Secretaries of State actively pursuing the substance of public pronouncements? Or, did the President's plan and diplomacy go down with the administration's debacle in Lebanon? Ignoring the flames that burn in the region is no substitute for Camp David or other major peace initiatives.

From the very beginning, the administration lacked a policy which has responsive to the realities of the Middle East. The Camp David process, a rare breakthrough in bringing any of the parties in the Middle East together, was jettisoned in favor of the ill-conceived strategic consensus that was to unite Israel and moderate Arab States against the common enemy of Soviet aggression. It should not have surprised anyone that this strategic consensus failed to materialize. Anyone who knows anything about the Middle East understands that the Soviet threat is of secondary concern to the players in that region who viewed the Arab-Israel dispute as the primary threat to peace and stability in the region.

Thus, when the administration's original, misperceived policy framework did not produce consensus in the region, it was back to the drawing boards. After nearly 2 years in office, a new Middle East initiative was developed which, in fact, was an attempt to build upon President Carter's Camp David agreements. This approach had at its core a central role for Jordan. The administration touted Jordan as being the key to its plans for a comprehensive peace, implying that King Hussein could be delivered as a peace process participant.

In addition to the serious complications resulting from the nature of the U.S. military role in Lebanon, there was a basic flaw in the administration's September 1982 initiative. Jordan was not in any position to play the role envisaged by the President. The administration was proceeding on the assumption that Jordan would come around if it received certain arms and weapons systems. The administration was repeating the same mistaken assumption it had made regarding the sale of AWACS to Saudi Arabia a year earlier. It was argued that the sale of AWACS to Saudi Arabia was vital to enlisting the Royal Kingdom's active participation in the Middle East process. In turn, weapons sales to Jordan were thought to be the determining factor in bringing King Hussein into the peace process with Israel. Reality proved both assumptions wrong.

By symbolically placing the mantle of a U.S. client state on Saudi Arabia, the Saudis were forced to demonstrate they were not a U.S. client. Far from demonstrating the ability to play an active and decisive role among moderate Arab States to come to terms with Israel in order to focus on the threat of Soviet expansionism, the Saudis moved quickly to distance themselves from U.S. policy. In the case of Jordan, the King was never in a position, whether weapons were forthcoming or not from the United States, to renounce unilaterally the Arab League's October 1974 Rabat Conference decision to grant only to the Palestinian Liberation Organization the authority to negotiate the status of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Thus, the administration lost nearly 2 years of valuable time trying to reinvent the wheel in the Middle East. And despite the fact that the September 1982 initiative was a grudging acceptance that the Camp David process had at least some merit, diplomatic miscalculation and the quagmire of Lebanon snuffed out quickly any promise that set of proposals might have had.

In the end, the administration has had to settle for the Egyptians allowing the United States to participate in clearing the approaches to the Suez Canal of mines, as evidence of American influence in the region. And while the Saudis' antiaircraft capability has been enhanced by U.S. arms sales which serve as a deterrent to Iranian air strikes against critical oil installations, commercial vessels operating in the Persian Gulf have taken an astounding toll over the past 7 months.

And how could any U.S. policymaker believe that the United States, by landing the Marines in Lebanon and firing the New Jersey's 16-inch guns, could stitch that country back together again? Neither Israel nor Syria, two countries which certainly understand Lebanon and the intercommunal rivalries in that country better than any American, have had much success in influencing the internal situation.

With the formation of a new government of unity in Israel, it appears to be only a matter of time before a total withdrawal of Israeli defense forces from southern Lebanon will begin.

Even the Syrians are being forced to relearn that while it is easy to cause problems and wage war in Lebanon, it is difficult to make peace. Syrian pressure has succeeded in the reopening of the Beirut Airport and the race track. However, reality has not changed. The country continues to drift toward disintegration as sectarian divisions increase. What has been for some years a de facto intercommunal partition of Lebanon, may in fact become a politically-accepted reality on the part of most Lebanese.

The situation in Lebanon is indeed a tragedy. Outside influences, particularly since the 1944 national pact, have preyed upon age-old enmities and divisions, exacerbating hostilities that may be now irreconcilable. However, within the overall context of U.S. interests in the region, the preoccupation with Lebanon resulted in lost opportunities.

What did drawing the line in Lebanon against the Soviet-Syrian axis produce? Some 264 Americans were killed, U.S. prestige was squandered, valuable time was lost, and perhaps, most important of all, momentum toward a more comprehensive peace settlement built up by the Nixon-Ford and Carter administrations was stalled for the indefinite future.

As if U.S. prestige had not suffered enough as a result of misperception, patchwork policies, and ad hoc responses to crises in the region, we have had to endure another recent policy embarrassment in the region. I am referring to the recent announcement that Morocco and Libya had agreed to form a political union.

According to published reports, the agreement took the administration by surprise despite the fact that 15 months ago a rapproachment was underway between Morocco and Libya. On Morocco's side, King Hassan was interested in drying up support for the Polisario guerrillas fighting his forces in the Western Sahara. On Libya's side, Qadhafi was concerned that Morocco might send troops to Chad to prevent Libyan-backed rebels from overrunning that country. When Qadhafi agreed to stop funding and arming the Polisario, King Hassan agreed not to send Moroccan troops to Chad. This set the stage for Moroccan-Libyan cooperation, which was a warning signal that was missed completely by the administration.

During the critical period this summer when the treaty between Morocco and Libya was being negotiated in secrecy, our Ambassador, a political appointee, was out of the country on vacation. Therefore, when the agreement was announced, the administration was taken by complete surprise.

It is my understanding that the United States had not expressed any concern to King Hassan over the obvious warming of relations between Morocco and Libya. In other words, there might have been an opportunity to head off this agreement, had the administration been on its toes and minding the store.

In sum, Mr. President, nothing of substance has been achieved in the Middle East over the past 3½ years. In fact, there has been a marked deterioration in what stability had been built up in the region prior to 1981.

Does this mean we should give up because things look so bleak in that part of the world? Quite the contrary. We have demonstrated in the past that we have the capability, if we have the understanding of the complexities of the region, to make positive contributions in bringing a measure of peace to the area.

It would behoove us to reflect upon the 1973 Middle East war when, were it not for the Nixon administration's emergency airlift of U.S. weapons, Israel's very survival could have been threatened. And with Israeli Armed Forces moving unimpeded toward Cairo, it was American diplomacy which was instrumental in arranging a cease-fire.

The intense efforts of the Nixon administration led to the Sinai I and Sinai II agreements, both of which contributed to a lessening of tensions between Israel and its major adversary in the Arab world—Egypt. The Carter administration took advantage of the groundwork laid by the previous Nixon-Ford administration by following up with the Camp David accords and the subsequent Egypt-Israel Treaty of Peace.

In the aftermath of the 1973 Middle East war, the problems seemed more intractable than ever. But patience, persistence, and understanding moved Egypt and Israel away from their traditional adversarial relationship.

Nobody ever said this process of bringing peace to the Middle East is without its difficulties. But, Mr. President, as Edward R. Murrow so poignantly observed: "Difficulty is one excuse history has never accepted."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Lou Cannon, Washington Post staff writer, entitled "President Addresses B'nai B'rith—Reagan says United States, Israel 'Forever United'," which appeared in the Washington Post on September 7, 1984; an article by Jonathan C. Randal, Washington Post foreign service, entitled "United States, Moroccan Misperceptions Led to Shock Over Libyan Union"; and an article in the New York Times of September 17, 1984, entitled "Two Tankers Struck by Missiles in Gulf."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESIDENT ADDRESSES B'NAI B'RITH—REAGAN SAYS UNITED STATES, ISRAEL 'FOREVER UNITED'

(By Lou Cannon)

President Reagan told a Jewish service organization yesterday that "the United States and Israel stand forever united" in the task of providing "permanent security" for Israel, and he claimed that the U.S. Military buildup during his administration has made Israel more secure.

"Today the United States has stopped wringing its hands apologetically and once again begun to play its rightful role in the world—with faith, confidence and courage," Reagan said, "And that means Israel can depend on us."

In a campaign speech to the B'nai B'rith international convention here, the president said that peace in the Middle East is closer than when he took office.

"When I spoke to you four years ago, peace was eluding the Middle East," Reagan said. "It still does. But now we and the state of Israel have far greater cause for hope."

Reagan did not mention Israel's rejection of his Middle East peace plan, which remains stalled after two years. Nor did he discuss other U.S. difficulties in the Middle East, which has proved both a military and diplomatic troublespot for his administration.

In his 1980 speech to the organization, Reagan charged that the "weak and confused leadership of Jimmy Carter" had placed Israel in "grave danger" and had encouraged terrorism.

Reagan echoed that assertion yesterday when he referred to the "weak and muddled" leadership of the Carter administration, which he said reached a low point on March 1, 1980, when the United States voted in the United Nations for a resolution condemning Israel.

"Some 48 hours later, President Carter disavowed the vote, announcing to the press that it had all been a mistake, a bad mistake," Reagan said, "And it certainly had."

Reagan said that the United Nations "has too often allowed itself to become a forum for the defamation of Israel" and repeated a pledge that the United States would walk out of the international organization if it ever expelled Israel.

Appearing on the same podium that Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale had occupied three hours earlier, Reagan suggested that Israel would be safer, and the U.S.-Israel alliance more secure, if he is reelected.

Reagan never mentioned Mondale by name, and the President's managers did not alter the thrust of the speech to answer Mondale's charges that recent comments by Reagan linking politics and religion have breached the wall of separation between church and state. Reagan strategists believe that the President's high card with the Jewish community is long support of Israel, which he has backed since the formation of the Jewish state in 1948.

In the 1980 election, Reagan made a strong showing in the traditionally Democratic Jewish community following a similar strategy. A CBS-New York Times Poll gave Carter 45 percent of the Jewish vote, Reagan 39 percent and independent candidate John B. Anderson 15 percent. In 1976, Carter won nearly two-thirds of the vote among Jews.

Reagan was applauded warmly several times yesterday, particularly when he reaffirmed his support for an international treaty against genocide. The treaty, which the United States has never ratified and which Reagan declined to support until Wednesday, has been bottled up in the Senate for 35 years.

The president acknowledged that he had taken "a cautious view" toward the issue, "in part due to the human-rights abuses performed by some nations that have already ratified the documents. . . ." But Reagan said he now will "vigorously support" ratification.

"And I want you to know that we intend to use the convention [against genocide] in our efforts to expand human freedom and fight human-rights abuses around the world," Reagan said. "Like you, I say in a forthright voice, 'Never again.' "

The phrase is a reference to the Holocaust, the Nazi extermination of much of the Jewish population of Europe during World War II.

Reagan yesterday linked his support for "the free nations" in Central America with his opposition to anti-Semitism. He quoted from a Jewish refugee from Nicaragua, Isaac Stavisky, who said that the country's leftist Sandinista regime had discriminated against Jews, confiscated their property and forced them into exile.

Reagan said that U.S. politicians who "take a position of weakness" in Central America "would give free rein to Marxist-Leninists who would persecute Central American Catholics and Jews, leaving them defenseless against Sandinista intolerance."

The president said his administration had strengthened the U.S.-Israeli alliance by adopting a "formal strategic relationship" with Israel, cooperating in military research and procurement, increasing economic assistance and undertaking negotiations for a trade agreement to open the markets of the two nations to each other's goods.

"These measures have made our relations with Israel closer, and our friendship stronger, than at any time in the history of our two nations," Reagan said.

UNITED STATES, MOROCCAN MISPERCEPTIONS LED TO SHOCK OVER LIBYAN UNION

BOTH SEEN DISTRACTED BY NARROW GOALS

(By Jonathan C. Randal)

RABAT, MOROCCO.—U.S. diplomats missed key signals of Morocco's intention to join Libya in a political union that now has caused the United States considerable embarrassment and raised official concern in Washington that Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi may be breaking out of his diplomatic isolation, according to sources here.

Moroccan King Hassan II, for years one of America's closest allies in the Arab world, is reported, in turn, to be genuinely taken aback by the Reagan administration's sharp reaction in opposition to the union with Libya. According to observers, especially worrisome to Hassan is the realization that Congress could cut back or even stop not just direct military and economic aid, but the hundreds of millions of dollars worth of electronic and other U.S. materiel that Saudi Arabia has purchased for Mococco's armed forces.

The still-vague unification—announced by Hassan and Qaddafi on Aug. 14 and since ratified overwhemingly by referendums in the two countries—was promptly criticized by the Reagan administration, which expressed concern that Qaddafi's Libya, which the United States has been trying to quarantine as a supporter of world terrorism, was trying to seek international legitimacy through alliance with the more respected Morocco.

In retrospect, many diplomats and analysts are convinced that at the heart of the misunderstanding between the United States and longtime ally Morocco lay American failure to denounce a key Moroccan decision 15 months ago to move closer to Libya and the ensuing Moroccan conviction that U.S. silence signaled at least passive acceptance of Hassan's strategy.

Contributing to the problem, they said, were cultural misperceptions on both sides that led to the Reagan administration's concentration on its own narrow objectives in Morocco and Hassan's singleminded pursuit of national goals even at the potential expense of the special relationship between Washington and Rabat.

Spurred by Ambassador Joseph V. Reed Jr., a former Chase Manhattan Bank official, the administration concentrated here on securing landing rights for its rapid deployment force and construction of the noncommunist world's largest radio transmitter for the Voice of America.

"The Americans didn't see—or didn't want to see—anything that failed to fit into their onwards-and-upwards approach to Morocco," an Arab analyst said.

During the crucial month between mid-July and mid-August when the treaty with Libya was being negotiated in secrecy, Reed, who enjoys unparalleled access to Hassan, was out of the country, on vacation in the United States much of the time.

Reed met in Washington with Secretary of State George P. Shultz on Aug. 15, the day after the Libyan-Moroccan treaty was announced, in what officials said was a meeting arranged before the announcement, and returned here this week.

In the personalized world of Arab politics, Reed's absence apparently deprived Washington of its best chance of smoking out what Hassan says was his personal initiative.

The spokesman at the U.S. Embassy here has refused to discuss the matter publicly, saying, "This subject has been treated in Washington and we will have nothing to add."

Had the administration known of Hassan's intention, it may not have succeeded in dissuading him, but diplomats here reason foreknowledge could have left relations between the United States and Morocco less bruised.

Instead high-ranking Moroccan officials were reported to have assured American diplomats that nothing was afoot when queried about rumors of an impending treaty with Libya.

A month after the signing of the treaty, Hassan appears to have overplayed his hand, or at least underestimated some of the risks involved.

For although Americans were not the only ones taken by surprise by the treaty, serious signs of rapprochement between long-estranged Hassan and Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi became visible in June 1983.

"The Americans should have started yelling when the king and the colonel got into bed," a veteran observer remarked, "not when they decided to get married last month."

The rapprochement was dictated by converging Moroccan and Libyan interests on two key long-running North African problems—the wars in Chad and the western Sahara—and their shared sense of diplomatic isolation and pique at mutual neighbor Algeria.

President Hissene Habre of Chad apparently set the rapprochement in motion in June 1983. He asked Morocco to send troops to prevent Libyan-backed rebels from overrunning his country—much as Hassan had saved the Zaire government by sending soldiers to thwart invasions from Angola in 1977 and 1978.

But instead Hassan dispatched his key adviser, Ahmad Reda Guedira, to Tripoli. He returned with a plan for switched alliances and Moroccan-Libyan cooperation.

Qaddafi agreed to stop funding and arming the Polisario rebels, who since 1975, with Algerian backing, have contested Moroccan sovereignty over the former Spanish Sahara.

In return Hassan turned down Habre's request.

The reconciliation was out in the open and Qaddafi spent four days in Morocco in July 1983 discussing a number of joint ventures that since have come to fruition.

In the past 15 months the arrangement has provided a boon for Morocco. Archrival Algeria has been left alone to shoulder the waning Polisario cause with negligible battlefield success.

More important, according to analysts, was Hassan's conviction that a formal union with Libya would guarantee Quaddafi's crucial continued diplomatic support in black Africa.

For if Moroccan troops have the upper hand in the Sahara—to the extent that military analysts believe Algeria is powerless to challenge them—Libyan money and diplomatic influence are still needed to counter the pro-Polisario majority in the Organization of African Unity.

Such Moroccan pragmatism, however, ran afoul of the Reagan administration's efforts to isolate Qaddafi as a leading international terrorist paymaster and troublemaker.

Diplomats here are convinced that the Reagan administration is especially upset that moderate Morocco should have lent its respectability to Qaddafi just when he was isolated in the Arab and African worlds and worried by a coup attempt in his capital last May.

Nor does Hassan's argument that he can tame Qaddafi impress Washington. The Reagan administration has worked long and hard to prevent its European allies from doing business with Libya and now fears that effort may be compromised.

French President Francois Mitterrand's recent three-day visit here was interpreted by Moroccan officials as an effort to help Hassan prove his usefulness. Their secret talks are believed to have dealt with eventual mutual disengagement in Chad of Libyan troops and French forces sent to support the Habre government.

Qaddafi's poor image in the United States could cause Morocco problems in Congress.

Yet faced with ever-growing population pressures and unemployment, a growing oil bill outpacing its phosphate export earnings and foreign debt repayment problems, Morocco desperately needs Libyan largesse, markets for its products and job opportunities.

Hassan apparently realized that the United States—which sent $58 million in military aid, $20 million in economic aid and $37.6 million in Food for Peace this year and plans a total of $153.5 million in aid next fiscal year—could not provide the kind of cash handouts needed to stave off a recurrence of the riots that have shaken the kingdom in recent years.

While the United States recognizes that several previous Libyan alliances with other countries have collapsed, one diplomat said, "the danger is that the Moroccan treaty with Libya will last longer than the United States would like, and even if it ended soon it may still take a toll on relations between Rabat and Washington."

Diplomats and analysts questioned Hassan's wisdom in sending Reda Guedira to Washington a week ago to feel the pulse of the Reagan administration in the wake of American expressions of "profound concern" over the treaty. Guedira's trip followed a trip to Rabat by U.S. special envoy Vernon Walters, a frequent visitor to Morocco. Walters met with Hassan in late August and then stayed here until Sept. 4 for private visits.

Guedira, Hassan's closest collaborator, is virtual co-architect of the Libyan treaty and as such his presence in Washington drew unwelcome attention to the controversial union.

Analysts worry about potential Libyan leverage. They say that Qaddafi could denounce Hassan's decision to allow transit facilities for the U.S. rapid deployment force, or he could pressure the 16,000 Moroccans now working in Libya or the hundreds of thousands Hassan would like to send there.

Hassan's government has denied rumors that Morocco handed over Libyan dissidents to Quaddafi as part of the treaty deal. Most of the Libyan dissidents left Morocco six months ago, according to analysts who noted that they apparently were quicker to see the potential dangers of the 1983 cooperation pact than were most diplomats.

TWO TANKERS STRUCK BY MISSILES IN GULF

MANAMA, BAHRAIN, Sept. 16 (AP).—Two oil tankers were struck by missiles in the Persian Gulf today. Six seamen were reported wounded.

The planes that fired the missiles were not positively identified, but an officer on one ship was said to have seen Iranian markings on the aircraft.

Shipping sources said the attacks may have been an Iranian response to recent strikes by Iraq against ships going to and from Iranian oil terminals.

Extensive damage was reported to both ships, one a Greek-owned vessel chartered by Texaco and the other a South Korean ship carrying oil for Sri Lanka.

The attacks brought to 45 the number of commercial vessels attacked in the gulf over the last seven months, according to the Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit in London. Most of the attacks were by Iraq within 50-miles of Kharg Island.

IRAN SAYS OIL PLATFORMS HIT

Shortly after the two tankers were hit, Iran said it had attacked an Iraqi oil installation at the northern end of the gulf, setting oil platforms ablaze and causing considerable casualties.

Iran and Iraq also reported new fighting today in the 733-mile war zone along their border.

The official Iranian press agency quoted a military communique from the Iranian high command as saying 110 Iraqi troops had been killed or wounded in 24 hours of border fighting. It was the heaviest casualty toll reported by Iran in more than five weeks.

[In Baghdad, the capital of Iraq, a military communique said that Iraqi helicopter gunships attacked Iranian positions along the border and that all returned safely "after destroying 10 Iranian infantry bunkers."]

Meanwhile, Arab radio stations in the gulf region said the defense and foreign ministers of the Gulf Cooperation Council would hold an emergency conference in Saudi Arabia on Tuesday to discuss protection for commercial shipping. The nations in the Council are Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman.

NO COMMENT FROM IRAN OR IRAQ

The tankers hit today were the Greek-owned, Liberian-registered Medheron and the South Korean-owned Royal Colombo, which was chartered by the Ceylonese Shipping Corporation, a line owned by the Government of Sri Lanka.

The attacks drew no immediate comment from either Iraq or Iran. Ordinarily, Iraq issues statements claiming responsibility almost immediately after it has attacked a ship.

In addition, Iraq usually attacks ships near Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal, while Iran's retaliatory attacks are usually against ships in neutral Arab waters. Both attacks today were in neutral, central gulf waters more than 200 miles south of Kharg Island.

The 122,000-ton Medheron was on its way to Ras Tanura, Saudi Arabia, to pick up crude oil for Texaco.

"My chief officer sighted the plane which carried the Iranian colors and markings visibly," the captain, Charalamsos Koliatis, said in an interview on ship-to-shore radio.

He said his chief officer and two other seamen suffered minor injuries.

SERIOUS DAMAGE REPORTED

"The damage to my ship is serious," Mr. Koliatis said. "There has been no fire, but the missile destroyed the bridge of my ship and about 30 percent of the accommodation quarters."

He said the Medheron was sailing toward Bahrain for repairs.

The 126,998-ton Royal Colombo was hit by a missile at about the same time but 70 miles to the west. Several marine salvage companies sent tugboats to rescue it.

Sources in radio contact with the Royal Colombo said the missile ripped through the engine room and injured three seamen, one critically.

DAMAGE NOT YET ASSESSED

COLOMBO, SRI LANKA, Sept. 16 (AP).—The chairman of the government oil corporation said the full extent of damage to the Royal Colombo had not been assessed. The official, Daham Wimalasena, said the ship had just picked up $25 million worth of oil.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have been notified that the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania wants me to yield to him briefly. Could I ask the minority leader, since I have given him my time, after he completes his statement, he might yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, does Mr. FORD or Mr. BUMPERS wish me to yield to either of them?

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I have a statement to make and some amendments to file. It will take approximately 1 minute.

Mr. SPECTER. I would be delighted to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished minority leader and the majority leader if there is a problem with my taking that minute?

Mr. BAKER. None whatever, Mr. President.

AUTHORIZATION TO FILE AMENDMENTS TO SENATE RESOLUTION 66

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, before I yield to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, may I ask the distinguished majority leader if he will make a recommendation as to the final resolution of the TV in the Senate measure?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding that the Senate will be in recess between 11:30 and 12:30, it be in order to file amendments to Senate Resolution 66.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR TRANSFER OF SPECIAL ORDER FOR SENATOR PROXMIRE TO SENATOR BUMPERS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader make a request for the transfer of the time of Senator PROXMIRE to Senator BUMPERS?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President; I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECESS AT 11:30 A.M. TODAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I must leave the floor in order to make preparations for the briefing at 11:30 a.m. I ask unanimous consent that, after the Senator from Pennsylvania has concluded, the Chair recognize the Senator from Kentucky and that, at the hour of 11:30, the Chair automatically place the Senate in recess.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, did the distinguished majority leader say after the Senator from Pennsylvania is finished he is going to yield to me?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President; to be followed then by the Chair recognizing the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. May I inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania how much time he desires?

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the majority leader for yielding. I would appreciate 10 minutes. I may do it in less. Would the majority leader permit us to remain in session slightly past 11:30 a.m.?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, let me urge that we not do that. We are going to have the Under Secretary of State and staff present in a closed room under secure circumstances. I would very much like to urge Senators to be there and present on time. At 12:30, I shall be happy to provide an additional brief period for routine morning business if that will help. I had not known the Senator from Pennsylvania wanted 10 minutes. That is all the time I have under the standing order. Maybe we ought to make some other arrangement.

Let me suggest that I recommend to my friends and colleagues that they each take, equally divided, the time between now and 11:30 and that we recess at 11:30 and, if we need more time after that, I shall provide it after we return.

Mr. SPECTER. I agree to that.

Mr. BAKER. On that basis, could the Senator from Pennsylvania settle for 5 minutes?

Mr. SPECTER. I do.

Mr. BAKER. Within that 5 minutes, could he yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SPECTER. I will.

Mr. BAKER. And the balance of that time will go to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

(The remarks of Mr. FORD relating to the submission of amendments are printed later in today's RECORD under routine morning business.)

PROSECUTION OF TERRORISTS

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought this time this morning to express some concrete ideas as to how the Congress of the United States might appropriately respond to the terrorist attack on the U.S. Embassy in Beirut this morning where 23 people were killed and some 60 were wounded, including the U.S. Ambassador.

We have seen repeated occurrences of terrorism. For instance, last year the U.S. Embassy in Beirut was attacked and 63 people were killed, then the twin bombing attacks on U.S. Marine and French peacekeeper troops in which 299 servicemen were killed, occurred. We have been able to identify some of these terrorists.

Mr. President, it is my belief that action is long overdue. Earlier this year, Senator DENTON and I introduced a resolution calling for a revision of the Vienna Convention which provides for diplomatic immunity, and that revision was thought to be necessary in light of the murder of the English policewoman by the Libyans. Further legislative proposals were introduced to make it a crime under U.S. criminal law for a diplomat to commit murder or assault with intent to kill with a firearm. Hearings have been held on the former resolution and another hearing is scheduled tomorrow at 10 a.m.

In studying the matter—and I make these comments this morning, although I shall embody them more formally in an appropriate resolution—it seems there is an effective way to deal with terrorism by treating it as an international crime. There is precedent for doing so under international law relating to the acts of piracy.

Piracy has long been regarded as an international crime, and pirates may be tried wherever they are found. It is the customary law that a criminal prosecution may be lodged against an individual only in the jurisdiction where the crime was committed, but piracy is an exception to that rule. That is ample precedent for dealing with terrorism in the same manner—as international crime, with the provision to try a terrorist wherever he may found. If a pirate or a terrorist may be tried wherever found, it is my suggestion that there would be adequate precedent to arrest a pirate or a terrorist wherever that pirate or terrorist might be. There is precedent in the Supreme Court of the United States; nearly 100 years ago the State of Illinois prosecuted an individual who had been kidnaped in Peru. Surprising as it may seem, the Supreme Court of the United States said it was appropriate to take the individual charged with the crime into custody even by kidnaping for trial in the State of Illinois.

The decision of the Supreme Court of Israel in the Eichmann case contains an elaborate explanation of the precedents in international law for trial regardless of the means of apprehension, and it is my suggestion that we ought to hold the terrorists responsible for their acts even when they are committed vicariously; that if the leader of the Libyan Government, Mu'ammar Qadhafi, is responsible for the murder of the British policewoman, then he ought to be subject to trial either in an international tribunal like Nuremberg or in a court in the jurisdiction where he may be found after having been arrested.

S. 3010—BRUCELLOSIS-FREE STATES

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, when I was Governor of my State, we made a very massive effort to make it what we called brucellosis free. To cattle farmers, brucellosis is customarily and popularly known as bang's disease. It not only infects cattle, it can affect people. It causes them to have a low-grade fever for long periods of time. Sometimes people have recurrences of it. It can go on for years. We were within an eyelash of becoming a brucellosis-free State when I left the Governor's office, but while Mr. Nixon was President, he and the Agriculture Department decided to quit vaccinating calves.

Calves must be vaccinated between the age of 4 months and 1 year to really get this under control. And for reasons which certainly are not clear to me, they chose to discontinue this vaccination program. As a result, my State is now downgraded to a class C State. There are four classifications: brucellosis free, A, B, and C. Arkansas is now a class C State, and unless we make substantial improvement in our State within the next 12 months, it will be quarantined. That means it will be virtually impossible to transport cattle in or out of my State, which would be a tremendous economic loss to the cattle farmers of Arkansas. I think there are other States similarly situated. We have a task force which will start to work on October 1 in my State, going into the counties where we have the worst cases of brucellosis and trying to do this on a massive basis, not only to demonstrate our good faith in trying to bring about control but, more importantly, to eradicate it.

Brucellosis is like trying to get rid of measles in this country. Many people know that my wife has been deeply involved in immunizing children in this country since 1973, and it is always easy to get rid of 99 percent, but the last 1 percent is the toughest. The laws of the States need to be amended so as to give them more flexibility in this brucellosis program.

The bill I am introducing this morning—and incidentally, this bill is largely the idea of Jim Baker, head of the Arkansas Cattleman's Association. I want to pay tribute and give credit to him for what allows the States a lot of flexibility in how they use this brucellosis money.

No. 1, if they do not need their indemnification money—incidentally, right now, if a cow has brucellosis, the State will normally pay $50 to $100 to have that cow slaughtered—under this bill the money that would normally go for indemnification may be transferred to the vaccination and testing program.

No. 2, if the State wants not to indemnify for the cow to be slaughtered, they can put it on the calf. A calf of a brucellosis mother is almost certainly going to have brucellosis, but oftentimes they slaughter the cow and do nothing with the calf. That calf, by the time she is 3 years old, will almost certainly have brucellosis. So we are trying to give the States more flexibility and more options in how they spend their money. Therefore, Mr. President, I am introducing this bill this morning. Hopefully, some appropriate vehicle will come through this Chamber before we adjourn on which

I can put this program because I feel it will be universally approved.

I encourage all Senators, especially those Senators from cattle-growing States to join me in this effort to get this bill passed.

Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today a bill that will give the States more flexibility in battling brucellosis, a disease of animals—most importantly cattle—that causes abortions, infertility, weight loss, and reduced milk production.

Their bill is mostly the idea of Jim Baker, president of the Arkansas Cattlemen's Association, and I want to publicly thank him and the cattlemen's association for their cooperation and help on this bill.

Since 1934, both Federal and State animal health authorities have cooperated in a concerted effort to eliminate brucellosis in the United States. Throughout the 1950's and 1960's the eradication program was aggressively pursued and animal health experts predicted complete eradication by 1972. During my tenure as Governor of Arkansas, from 1970 through 1974, the State of Arkansas came within an eyelash of reaching total eradication, otherwise known within the industry as free status. Unfortunately, with eradication of brucellosis from the Nation within our grasp, President Nixon, in concert with Federal APHIS officials, recommended the abandonment of the calfhood vaccination program. For many States, such as Arkansas, this was a fateful decision.

Infection rates nationwide began to skyrocket, forcing the USDA to adopt a new brucellosis eradication program, including the adoption of a free, A, B, and C classification system. Yet for Arkansas the increase in infection rates had already begun to jump and the new program was not effective. From less than 100 infected herds in the late 1960's, the infection rate jumped to 476 such herds in June 1983, forcing the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service to announce on June 29, 1983, that Arkansas had been demoted from class B to class C status, a status Arkansas shares with Mississippi, Louisiana, and parts of Texas and Florida. A "C" rating is applied to States with infection rates in excess of 15 herds per 1,000 or with an adjusted market cattle identification [MCI] program reactor prevalence rate in excess of three reactors per 1,000 head of cattle tested.

After its demotion to class C in late June 1983, Arkansas was given 2 years to show substantial progress in reducing the prevalence of brucellosis or face a Federal quarantine. A quarantine, which would severely limit the exportation of cattle, would be devastating to Arkansas because Arkansas is largely a cattle exporting State. Recognizing the crisis the Arkansas State Veterinarian and the Livestock and Poultry Commission, the Arkansas Cattlemen's Association, the Arkansas Farm Bureau, AMPI and other dairy co-ops or organizations, practicing veterinarians, and other farm organizations and industry groups have joined with the Federal APHIS officials in an effort to seek the most effective solution to the brucellosis disaster in my State.

The Animal Plant Health Inspection Service, through its veterinary service agency, has recently dispatched a brucellosis task force to Arkansas to aid in the control and eradication program in our most brucellosis-infested counties, and Arkansas Veterinary Service personnel are being relocated in high incidence areas in order to be more effective in the continuing control and eradication efforts.

The State, through the State Veterinarian and the Livestock and Poultry Commission, is also seeking greater authority in designing an effective program. Arkansas wants expanded authority in the use of designated indemnity funds provided to the State by APHIS. In this effort I have gladly agreed to help.

My bill is a State's option bill giving the States, or their political subdivision responsible for carrying out the brucellosis program, the authority to transfer indemnity funds into other brucellosis control programs in cooperation with the USDA. My bill would allow the States, upon notification of the Secretary, greater flexibility in designating how funds originally allocated for the indemnity program are utilized. States could use such funds for an indemnity program that would pay dairies for the destruction of nursing female calves of reactors instead of for the reactor cow itself. States will be allowed to choose whatever combination of options they believe to be the most effective.

Currently, the Animal Plant Health and Inspection Service is allowing States to transfer indemnification money into the testing and vaccination program. In fiscal year 1984, Arkansas took advantage of this by supplementing the calfhood vaccination program with $191,000 out of indemnity funds when the original allotment of $120,000 was exhausted. For fiscal year 1984, Arkansas has requested no indemnity funds be transferred to the vaccination program. My bill will simply codify the option presently allowed by APHIS and would allow a State to exercise this option at any time.

My bill also recognizes that an indemnity paid on reactor beef cows sent to slaughter is in most cases a premium for having brucellosis. Since the presence of brucellosis in a beef cow does not often affect its quality as a slaughter cow, the indemnity paid may constitute a monetary advantage to the cattle farmer whose cow has brucellosis. This indemnity program, except in the cases of pure bred or dairy cows, does little to encourage cattle farmers to eliminate brucellosis from their herds. However, the nursing female calves of the reactor cows, which themselves have a very high likelihood or becoming reactors, usually will not bring their worth as slaughter animals. Cattle farmers are reluctant to bring in such animals for slaughter and will continue to raise these potential reactors on the farm until they can be sold for slaughter at a more favorable price. Of course, this practice assures that the brucellosis infection will remain on the farm. My bill would simply give the States the option to pay indemnity claims on the nursing female calves in lieu of claims on the reactor cows, for the purpose of encouraging farmers to bring in for slaughter more nursing calves exposed to brucellosis.

Again, my bill allows maximum flexibility. The State could adopt a program that would pay claims on the offspring of some kinds of cattle but not others. Or, paying claims for offspring could be substituted for the current indemnity program being conducted in the State. And, of course, a State could choose to reject this option altogether.

Finally, my bill will allow the States to continue or begin a program of whole herd depopulation, if justified, even if a State opts to divert all of its funds out of an indemnity program. Often whole herd depopulation is the best tool for eradicating brucellosis outbreaks, especially in States with free or "A" ratings.

I want to emphasize that my bill is a State's option bill. No State will be required to implement any particular program. Passage of my bill will simply allow the States, in cooperation with the USDA, more flexibility in combating brucellosis, a disease that annually costs cattlemen and dairymen millions of dollars.

The State could implement any or all of the four options my bill authorizes, in whatever combination it chose, testing and vaccination, whole herd depopulation, indemnity for reactor cows, and indemnity for offspring.

Even though the United States is 99 percent free of brucellosis, the last 1 percent will be the most difficult to eradicate. It poses a serious continued threat to the cattle and dairy industry nationwide, and I hope my colleagues will join with me in giving the States added flexibility, especially the "C" States like Arkansas, to help assure the complete eradication of brucellosis.

I hope all Senators from States where brucellosis may be a threat will join me in cosponsoring and pressing for passage of this bill. The situation in Arkansas is critical. I urge Congress to act on this measure quickly.

I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3010

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 11 of the Act of May 29, 1884 (23 Stat. 31, Chapter 60; 21 U.S.C. 114a) is amended—

(1) by designating the first and second sentences as subsections (a) and (c) respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) (as designated by clause (1)) the following new subsections:

"(b) If the Secretary, in cooperation with a State or political subdivision thereof, conducts a program to control and eradicate brucellosis of domestic animals and provides money to such State or political subdivision under such program for the payment of claims growing out of the destruction of animals, and of materials, affected by or exposed to brucellosis, upon notification of the Secretary, such State or political subdivision may use such money for any of the following purposes or combination of purposes:

"(1) to test and vaccinate animals for brucellosis; and

"(2) to pay claims growing out of the destruction of female animals affected by or exposed to brucellosis; and

"(3) to pay claims growing out of the destruction of nursing female animal offspring of female animals affected by or exposed to brucellosis, in lieu of claims growing out of the destruction of female animals; and

"(4) to pay claims growing out of the destruction of entire herds of animals.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I'm pleased to support the bill being introduced today by my colleague from Arkansas, Mr. BUMPERS, to give the States more flexibility in attacking the problem of brucellosis. This bill will put the emphasis on eradication of the disease at the State and local level, and will give our State officials much-needed flexibility in designing a program that will effectively carry out this objective.

Mr. President, brucellosis is a serious problem in certain parts of the country. This disease, which affects animals, causes abortions, infertility and other problems. As my colleague from Arkansas has pointed out, even though the Nation is 99 percent free of the disease, the last 1 percent will be very difficult to eradicate. If this effort is to be successful, it seems to me that we should give our State officials a lot of leeway in designing these programs. The bill being introduced will allow them to use Federal money for any one of four purposes:

Testing and vaccination of animals;

Paying claims for destruction of female animals affected by the disease;

Paying claims for the destruction of nursing female animals; and Paying claims associated with depopulation of an entire herd.

Mr. President, brucellosis is a serious problem in some States in this country, including the State of Arkansas. For many years, we almost had the disease completely eradicated. However, the situation got progressively worse, until last summer Arkansas was classified as a class C State, and joined Louisiana, Mississippi, and parts of Texas and Florida. Our State needs to show substantial progress in reducing brucellosis, or in another year or so we could have a Federal quarantine. Since Arkansas is a cattle supporting State, such a quarantine could pose serious problems for our producers. This bill will help us in that effort, and will not diminish the Federal effort at all. It is a good proposal, and one which I hope my colleagues will support.

RECESS UNTIL 12:30 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until 12:30 p.m.

Thereupon, at 11:29 a.m., the Senate recessed until 12:30 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. GORTON].

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 12:45 p.m. in which Senators may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. KASTEN]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROFESSIONALISM OF THE SECRET SERVICE

Mr. HART. Mr. President, earlier this year, during about 6 months of Presidential campaigning in which I received Secret Service protection, I came to know and develop tremendous respect for the U.S. Secret Service and the talented and skilled agents who serve in it. I was fortunate to be surrounded—literally, much of the time—by men and women whose job performance was, despite long hours, chaotic conditions, and great pressure, consistently marked by courage, exemplary leadership qualities, good humor, and the highest degree of professionalism.

Four individuals in partiuclar, the detail leaders and assistant detail leaders, respectively, were extraordinarily competent, cooperative, and helpful. They are Mr. Steve Ramsey, Mr. Tom Farrell, Mr. Art Dalton, and Mr. Pete Donald. I am personally grateful for their selfless efforts on my behalf, their constant cooperation, and their friendship. I commend them, Inspector Todd Dillard, and Secret Service Director, John R. Simpson, for building an organization marked by such first-rate talent and so dedicated to serving its country.

THE DEPORTATION OF VALERIAN TRIFA

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, a recent article in the Washington Post recounted the deportation of Nazi war criminal, Valerian Trifa. The Justice Department became interested in Romanian-born Trifa when it was learned that he had obtained his U.S. citizenship illegally.

When he became a U.S. citizen in 1957, Trifa swore that he had never been a member of any Nazi or Fascist organizations, including the Iron Guard. By 1980, according to the Washington Post, the Justice Department had proven that:

Trifa was a leader from 1936 until 1942 of the notorious Romanian Iron Guard, an anti-Semitic organization whose members dressed in uniforms almost identical to the Nazi Gestapo's. Trifa was also editor of the Romanian newspaper Libertatea, whose editorials openly called for the persecution of Jews.

The article went on to say:

On Jan. 20, 1941, according to historical records and eyewitness court testimony, Trifa issued a manifesto and made a speech to the Iron Guard calling for the replacement of "Judah-like-Masons" in the government. Three days and nights of rioting followed in Bucharest, and as many as 4,000 Jews were killed.

The deportation of former Nazi war criminals like Trifa, who are residing illegally in the United States, shows this Nation's strong commitment to justice and human rights. The Justice Department has demonstrated its desire to prosecute Nazi war criminals by establishing a special office to deal with these criminals. The Department is determined that there be justice for the helpless victims of the Holocaust who cannot speak for themselves about the injustices they have suffered.

The U.S. Senate must also demonstrate its commitment to preventing genocide and punishing its perpetrators. We have had the opportunity to ratify the Genocide Convention since 1950, yet the U.S. Senate still has not taken action to declare this heinous crime a violation of international law. More than 90 countries including every major nation in the world except the United States have ratified the treaty. Two short weeks from today the Congress will adjourn sine die. That means after today the Senate will be in session only 10 more days. These 10 days represent a golden opportunity for ratifying the Genocide Convention. Yesterday, the Foreign Relations Committee reported the treaty to the floor without one dissenting vote. The committee also took the unprecedented step of unanimously recommending that the full Senate act on the threat this year. President Reagan has expressed his full support for the treaty. That means that every one of the last six Presidents—three Democrats and three Republicans—have called on this body to ratify the treaty. The time has come to act, Mr. President, and to act now.

6 WEEKS BEFORE THE ELECTION IS ANY ECONOMIC NEWS GOOD NEWS?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the Presidential and congressional elections will take place 6 short weeks from next Tuesday. Will that do something to the quality and especially to the fairness of the crucial economic news we will read in our papers and hear on radio and television? It sure will. Here is why: the news reports will not be intentionally biased. Most of them will be as objective and fair as conscientious reporters can make them. Do I charge that they will be subjective and unfair? I do. Why? Consider: as the election has come closer, hard economic data has become perverse. The data has been reported. Its significance has not. For instance, unemployment in the latest reporting month—August—was at the same level as last May. Unemployment improvement seems to have stalled out at a 7.4-percent level, leaving more than 8.5 million Americans out of work.

The economic indicators have been adverse, that is negative, for the past 2 months, suggesting that the growth the country had enjoyed since November of 1982 may not only be slowing down but very possibly moving into recession. Retail sales actually fell in August. Housing starts dropped very sharply, more than 12 percent below the preceding month and a big 18 percent below the level of a year ago. Personal income in nominal terms, that is before adjustment for inflation, rose but at a much slower rate. It might not have risen at all if allowance were made for inflation, but the inflation adjustment was not available. Finally, the flash figure out today on the growth of the economy in the current quarter, that is the 3 months that will end a week from Sunday, shows a very sharp drop in the growth of the economy down to 3.6 percent.

So why do I say we should watch out for bias from these conscientious, fair-minded and competent reporters? The answer is that reporters do not generally provide their own interpretations of economic data. They deliberately avoid such subjectivity by seeking out the economic experts. The first place they go is to the administration. Mr. President, 6 weeks before the election we all know what every administration is going to say about the significance of the economic data whatever the data shows. They will call it good news, "just what we want," "the economy is in great shape," and so forth. Of course, this will almost always be the reaction of any administration to economic news even if an election is not pending. But without an election coming up, the economic reporters have other sources that will give a more objective view. They can find economists in the big investment and commercial banks, in the brokerage houses, and elsewhere throughout our varied economy who will provide a more objective, a fairer answer. So the reporters balance the administration's views with the view of the economists in American commerce and industry.

Now, Mr. President, that is not a bad balance most of the time. But this year—6 weeks before this election—that kind of inquiry will provide no balance at all. Here is why: From the standpoint of compensation, economists in industry are the spoiled darlings. A $100,000 a year industry economist these days is considered a kind of poor little waif. These are big buck boys. And to find a big buck boy who does not favor Ronald Reagan's reelection, and with enthusiasm, is like trying to find a defensive tackle in the NFL who weighs less than 150 pounds. There just are not any. And 6 weeks before the election of the Presidential incumbent the big buck industry economists enthusiastically favor, to them any news is great news or at least good news.

So what is the result? The result is that when housing starts were reported down this past week, the reports that came through loud and clear in the newspapers and on television were: This is good news. The economy is cooling. When retail sales fell in August, Jim Lehrer, a fine and fair reporter on the public broadcasting system, reported that it was generally regarded as good news, so did most other radio, TV, and newspaper reporters. Senator JIM EXON put all this in the right perspective when he asked, "How can it be great news or even good news when retail sales rise and equally good or great news when retail sales fall?" Mr. EXON is right. How can it be good news when unemployment improvement stalls out at a level that leaves 8.5 million Americans out of work? How can it be good news if the leading economic indicators point up and good news when they point down?

Many political experts contend that the big issue in this election is the economy. They may be right. If it is, it is hard to see how President Reagan can lose, no matter what happens in the next 6 weeks. The media is striving to be fair, but they are caught in a trap. No matter what happens to the economy the administration will call it great news. American industry's top economists will agree. And that is the way the American public will hear it. After the election we may find out that the economic news was not so good after all. That will be interesting. But after the election it will not be of much value to the American voter.

ARMS CONTROL: THE VERY FLAWED ROAD TO NUCLEAR PEACE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on June 27, the Defense Department threw the arms control advocates into understandable consternation. How? By announcing that it had started to deploy cruise missiles on Navy ships, allegedly including submarines. Two Senators, MATHIAS and DURENBERGER, protested. They charged that this action by the Navy could prove to be a setback for nuclear arms control. Mr. President, this incident dramatically illustrates what a painfully difficult and treacherous path this Nation must follow as both a nuclear superpower—threatened by the immense and growing nuclear power of the Soviet Union—and a country dedicated to advancing verifiable arms control that will end the arms race.

Those of us who vigorously promote arms control as the principle road to survival have to face the fact that nuclear missiles, even those with great power, have already become small. They are, skillfully equipped with evasive and deceptive delivery capability. Most serious of all, they are easily transferable with conventional weaponry. So what does this mean? It means verification has become extraordinarily difficult. Cheating has become easier than ever. This is especially true of the cruise missile. It is quite a weapon. It is small, but it delivers a devastating knockout punch, an explosive power equal to 200,000 tons of TNT—10 times the size of the explosion that devastated Hiroshima and Nagasaki. That explosive power smashes home with even more force because of its pinpoint accuracy: It strikes within 300 feet of a target 1,500 miles away. And it zooms in, hugging the ground, sliding under radar or any defensive net.

But so what? What makes the cruise missile any more of a problem for arms control than any other nuclear weapon system? The crucial fact: Nuclear and conventional versions look almost exactly the same. The only way the Soviet Union or the United States could verify any limit on stockpiling or deployment of cruise missiles would be by meticulous, detailed, on-the-spot inspection. What a dilemma for arms control. Some Members of Congress have vigorously criticized the Defense Department for deploying the cruise missile on submarines. They have argued that such deployment frustrates any real prospect of arms control. Why? Because the Soviets would have no way to verify whether these missiles carried the devastating nuclear warheads on the one hand or conventional weapons on the other.

Does this mean this country cannot deploy this extraordinarily effective nuclear weapon until we negotiate an arms control treaty with the Soviet Union establishing limits? If so, how would we provide effective verification provisions for such a treaty at any time ever? If we cannot develop such verification procedures, we are left with two cruel alternatives. Both would be impossible, in the judgment of this Senator. Alternative one: Forget about arms control for the cruise missile. Proceed ahead, deploying it in submarines, bombers, wherever our military exports can find the most effective mode. Alternative two: Forget about the cruise missile, until and unless we can find a deployment that will permit reliable verification. Why is that alternative so bad? Because it would constitute a unilateral determination by our country to forgo the use of a weapon system which the Soviets could and would develop soon. This would hand the other side a nuclear advantage that would make future arms control negotiations far less effective, because the Soviets would be able to maintain and deploy a limitless number of cruise missiles outside of any agreement. We would be consistent losers in whatever balance our negotiations achieved between the two superpowers. They would have a powerful nuclear weapon system of indeterminate size, range, and power completely outside any limits we might design for nuclear arms.

But this gets worse. Once we accept the principle that we will not produce or deploy a nuclear weapons system that both sides can not verify, we hand the Soviets the assurance that if they develop weapons similar to the cruise missile that we cannot verify, they are home free. They have our warrant to become the overwhelmingly dominant nuclear power.

So what do we do? Do we throw in the sponge on effective arms control? Or do we accept the other alternative—embrace an all-out arms race and drift along in the hope that somehow this rush to ever more awesome power will continue to buy nuclear peace because of the every increasing assurance of universal destruction flowing from nuclear war?

Mr. President, this Senator is really shaken by the remarkable properties of the cruise missile and the promise that even more devastating and more difficult to verify weapons will be on their way as the nuclear arms race continues. This terrible quandary should lead us to push our resources toward exploring and developing verification procedures that can keep pace with on-rushing nuclear weapons development. If we will put a small fraction of the amount we will be pouring into SDI of "Star Wars" research into developing methods of arms control verification—starting with the cruise missile—we might still give arms control a chance. Arms control will always be risky; it will always be dangerous; it will always be fraught with the dangerous possibility of failure. It may not catch cheating by the other side. Churchill said that democracy is the worst form of government except for all the others. Well, arms control is the most dangerous, risky, and least promising path to peace, except for all the others.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article to which I have referred, headlined "Amid Congress Debate, Navy Gets Cruise Missiles," by Wayne Biddle, in the June 28 New York Times, as well as two additional articles from the New York Times on the cruise missile, one by William Broad and the other a special report.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMID CONGRESS DEBATE, NAVY GETS CRUISE MISSILES

(By Wayne Biddle)

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The Defense Department announced today that the first long-range nuclear cruise missiles had been deployed on Navy ships in recent days.

The deployment comes at a time when the missiles, known as the Tomahawks, are a subject of debate in Congress. A Senate-House conference is trying to reconcile differences on deployment as part of the 1985 military budget authorization bill.

Two Republican Senators who led the campaign against deployment, Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland and David Durenberger of Minnesota, said the Administration had shown "bad judgment, if not a breach of faith," in deploying while Congress was still deliberating the issue.

ARMS CONTROL IS AN ISSUE

The Congressional debate centered on arms control problems posed by the missiles, which can reportedly carry a nuclear warhead with explosive power of 200,000 tons of TNT to within 300 feet of a target 1,500 miles away.

Since nuclear and conventional versions are externally indistinguishable, critics say that it would be difficult to verify any treaty restrictions on the nuclear version.

A Pentagon spokesman, Michael Burch, in announcing that the missile "became operational a few days ago on a number of combatants," declined to specify whether it had been placed on submarines or surface ships. Sources in Congress familiar with the program said initial deployment had been planned for submarines.

Representative Berkley Bedell, Democrat of Iowa, said:

"At least, if we were going to deploy them, we should have put them on surface ships where there was some opportunity for verification. This seriously threatens arms control efforts."

COULD BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Burch said that if Congress decided to restrict the weapons now being deployed, they could be removed from Navy vessels.

Representative Les Aspin, a Wisconsin Democrat, said:

"We knew they were going to deploy, but the assumption was that a few would not change things much. The number is important."

He added that if the deployment were limited, it would be easy to withdraw the weapons if Congress approved a restriction this year.

In the recent consideration of the 1985 military budget authorization bill, the House of Representatives called for a ban on deployment unless the President certified that the Soviet Union has fielded a similar weapon.

The Senate did not support a ban, but urged the President to include such missiles in arms reduction talks. The House-Senate conference this week was seeking to reconcile the differences.

The Reagan Administration, calling the naval cruise missiles the "cornerstone of our effort to increase and diversify the striking power of the fleet," requested $593 million in fiscal year 1985 for 180 Tomahawks, about $240 million of which was believed intended for 75 nuclear versions.

FINANCED FOR 1983 AND 1984

In his statement today, Mr. Burch noted that President Reagan told the Navy in October 1981 to proceed with deployment of nuclear Tomahawks. Congress then approved financing in the 1983 and 1984 fiscal years, with no strings attached.

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said in April in an annual report on Soviet military power that the Russians would probably deploy a sea-launched cruise missile this year. The Soviet missile, similar to the Tomahawk, has been designated SS-NX-21 by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Earlier nuclear cruise missiles in the Soviet arsenal were said to be of shorter range, inferior accuracy and mostly intended for use against targets at sea.

In a study of the Tomahawk program released last month, Congress's Arms Control and Foreign Policy Caucus estimated that out of a total budget of $13 billion measured in dollars from 1977, the year the project began, $1.8 billion was reserved for 800 nuclear land-attack versions of the missile.

PLANS FOR CONVENTIONAL VERSION

About 600 conventionally armed anti-ship Tomahawks, which have a range of only 300 miles, will eventually be built, according to the study. Some 2,600 conventional Tomahawks having a range of about 700 miles and designed for attacking targets on land will also be acquired, a few of which are already aboard the battleship New Jersey.

While air-launched cruise missiles were part of the weapon ceilings established in 1979 by the second treaty on nuclear arms limitations, the treaty merely placed a three-year moratorium on deployment of new ground- and sea-launched cruise missiles. The Reagan Administration has abided by the unratified treaty, but considers the moratorium to have lapsed.

THE U.S. RESPONSE ON CRUISE MISSILES

WASHINGTON SAYS THE KREMLIN PROGRAM PRECEDED NATO DEPLOYMENT IN EUROPE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—The Reagan Administration said today that the Soviet Union had been developing cruise missiles "long before" the deployment of new American-made medium-range missiles in Europe last December.

On Saturday, the Soviet Union announced that it had conducted successful tests of ground-launched cruise missiles in response to the deployment of the American cruise missiles and Pershing 2 ballistic missiles.

Today John Hughes, the State Department spokesman, said the Soviet announcement came "as no surprise."

"The Soviets have long had an active cruise missile program and have already deployed a substantial force of shorter-range cruise missiles," he said. The cruise is a pilotless, ground-hugging craft designed to evade radar. It evolved from the German Buzz Bomb of World War II.

"This program was under development long before United States Pershing 2 and ground-launched cruise missile deployments began," he said.

When asked why the Soviet Union made such an announcement, he said, "I guess you'll have to ask them."

"I guess it's the same old scare tactic," Mr. Hughes said.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is proceeding with plans over the next few years to deploy 572 new American missiles in Europe—464 cruise missiles and 108 Pershing 2's—to counter what it asserts is a Soviet advantage in medium-range missiles in Europe.

Negotiations on seeking mutual curbs on medium-range missiles collapsed last November when Moscow quit the talks and said it would not resume them until NATO halted the deployment program, which began in December, and dismantled those already erected. The Soviet Union said that there was already a balance in Europe and that the new missiles were giving the West an advantage.

To counter this, the Russians said they would take appropriate steps, such as deploying Soviet missile-launching submarines closer to American shores and putting missiles in East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

On June 29 the Soviet Union proposed that the two sides send delegations to Vienna on Sept. 18 to discuss banning the militarization of outer space. Moscow called for a moritorium on the testing of antisatellite weapons. The United States agreed to hold discussions on space weapons but said it would also discuss medium-range and strategic weapons.

The Soviet side said the United States was trying to evade the issue by introducing the other weapons. There seems to be little likelihood that any talks will be held in Vienna, State Department officials said. But Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said the United States was proceeding with planning for the Vienna meeting "as if it is going to take place."

At one point, Mr. Speakes said, "The United States will be represented in Vienna," but officials later said he did not mean to suggest that there would be a delegation there regardless of whether the Russians attended.

CRUISE MISSILES: WHAT THEY ARE AND DO

(By William J. Broad)

The cruise missile is an advanced type of military technology that is playing an increasingly important role in the arsenals of both superpowers, according to weapons experts.

The recent Soviet announcement of successful tests of long-range ground-launched cruise missile should come as no great surprise, they said. The Soviet military has been improving the technology of cruise missile for more than a quarter century.

Rather than a startling development, these experts suggest, the episode illustrates how the arms race and the acquisition of new weapons is often governed for both sides by the quiet evolution of technology.

A cruise missile is low-flying torpedo with stubby wings that is powered by a turbojet or turbofan engine. It is able to hug the ground or treetops while it seeks out a target with the aid of a built-in guidance system. It can be launched from the ground, from planes and from ships. Its low flight path minimizes detection by radar.

OFFSHOOT OF GERMAN BUZZ BOMB

Stored inside an American cruise missile is a set of computerized maps displaying the contour of the earth's surface over which the missile is meant to fly. The missile's radar, pointed downward, sends out a constant beam during flight and compares the echoes it receives to its computerized maps. If the missile goes astray—as it usually will over a long flight—an on-board computer steers it back on course.

Cruise missiles, cousins of the German V-1 Buzz Bombs of World War II, have taken on an increasingly prominent role in the arms race during the last quarter century. According to William M. Arkin, a weapons expert at the Washington-based Institute for Policy Studies, the Russians deployed their first ones—which had a far shorter range than those now being tested—in 1958 and are now thought to have cruise missiles on more than 600 ships, aircraft and submarines.

During the last decade the United States has developed a series of high-technology models that are widely thought to be superior to those of the Soviet Union.

"Ours are much better," said Kosta Tsipis, a weapons expert at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "There's no doubt about it. We're ahead in terms of electronics, guidance and small efficient engines."

DWARFS HIROSHIMA BOMB

Last year the North Atlantic Treaty Organization began deploying the first of 464 American ground-launched cruise missiles in Western Europe. Each carries a nuclear warhead equivalent to 200,000 tons of TNT, or about 15 times bigger than the atom bomb dropped on Hiroshima. In late June Washington announced that the first long-range cruise missiles for ships, known as Tomahawks, were being deployed by the United States Navy. Both these types of American cruise missiles have a range of about 1,500 miles.

In general, American cruise missiles have longer ranges and are more accurate, smaller and more versatile than their Soviet counterparts, according to weapons experts. Nevertheless, Soviet cruise missiles are said to be formidable because they are able to fly faster than American ones, making them more difficult to shoot down. According to some reports from Washington, the Soviet Union began developing longer-range cruise missiles in 1981 that are meant to fly up to 2,000 miles.

By some standards of arms control, cruise missiles are thought to be good because—in contrast to ballistic missiles that can speed between continents in a few minutes—they fly at subsonic speeds and therefore cannot easily threaten a first strike. Small, mobile and able to ride out an attack and retaliate, they are sometimes seen as a good weapon for a defender rather than an aggressor.

PROBLEMS FOR ARMS CONTROL

But arms-control advocates also worry about being able to keep track of them. "Cruise missiles can be carried by boats, tankers, cargo ships, even a fishing trawler," said Dr. Tsipis in a telephone interview. "They rule out any kind of verification." Opponents of cruise missiles also say nuclear and conventional versions cannot be readily distinguished so that treaty curbs on the nuclear version cannot be verified.

New developments in cruise missiles will make them even more formidable, according to weapons experts. The advanced cruise missiles on the drawing boards at the Pentagon will have better engines for longer flights, better ability to penetrate Soviet radar because of the use of "stealth" and deceptive electronic technology, and better accuracy and maneuverability.

The Air Force in 1983 ordered a stop to the production of its current air-launched cruise missiles so that a higher-technology version could be developed.

But some critics have said the high technology of cruise missiles is too complex and will never allow them to achieve the kind of accuracy and reliability advertised by the Pentagon. Dust, soot and smoke from a large nuclear conflict, for instance, might clog their engines and prematurely end their flights.

THE BOMBING IN LEBANON

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today's bombing in Beirut is only the latest reminber that Lebanon remains a tinder box of civil and sectarian strife in which Americans remain a prime target for terrorists.

Today's bombing, which killed two Americans and injured a score or more others, including Ambassador Bartholomew, is an outrage perpetrated by a group loyal to the most radical regime in the Mideast—that of Iran. All Americans are united in shock and anger at this cowardly attack upon the men and women who serve our Nation in such dangerous outposts as Beirut.

But we must not allow international terrorism to deter us from our efforts to help the Lebanese and others in the Mideast find peaceful solutions to the many problems which beset that region of the world.

THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT ANTITRUST ACT

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, S. 1578 is pending on the Senate Calendar, the Local Government Antitrust Act. This bill was reported by my distinguished senior colleague for the Committee on the Judicary on June 15, 1984. This Senator is one of the 22 cosponsors of S. 1578, yet there are disturbing reports that the junior Senator from South Carolina is holding up the bill.

Mr. President, nothing is further from the truth. Immediately after the Senate debated the role of the Federal Trade Commission on June 28, I indicated that I supported without reservation, S. 1578, as reported. I am ready, willing, and able to assist my senior colleague in getting his bill approved by the Senate.

Apparently, there are others who have other plans and are blocking consideration of S. 1578 until they get their way. It is my understanding that the Senators holding up this vitally needed relief for our city officials are demanding a unanimous-consent request that provides for an amendment to the bill that negates the rider in the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Act (H.R. 5712). That act was approved by the President on August 30 (Public Law 98-411) and restricts the FTC from bringing antitrust actions against cities.

As I indicated earlier, we debated this issue when the appropriations bill was before the Senate on June 28. Without repeating the debate, let me emphasize a few major points:

First, in reporting out H.R. 5712, the House Appropriations Committee included section 510 offered by Representative SABO of Minnesota. Section 510 prohibited any of the funds in the bill from being used to bring antitrust actions against cities.

Second, in passing H.R. 5712 on May 31, the House of Representatives decisively rejected an attempt to delete section 510 from the bill. The final vote is not available since the House voting system broke down, but those observing the vote said it was 360 to 60 against deletion when the computer went down.

Third, when the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, and State met on June 7, I offered an amendment to section 510 to limit its application to only the FTC and the Department of Justice. That amendment prevailed by a vote of 6 to 5 and no attempt was made to alter section 510 when the full Committee on Appropriations met to report out the bill on June 12.

Fourth, when H.R. 5712 was before the Senate on June 28, an amendment was offered by my senior colleague and the acting manager of the bill that inserted the provisions of S. 1578 and negated section 510. Admittedly the proponents of the amendment prevailed, largely, in my opinion, because the amendment was described as being supported by the committee. As I have just recounted, that was certainly not the case.

Fifth, we had the conference on H.R. 5712 on August 2 and extensively discussed section 510. Finally, the chairman of the House conferees proposed deleting all of the legislation taken from S. 1578 and amending section 510 to limit the FTC from taking antitrust action unless specifically authorized by law hereafter. This was brought back in disagreement so that each House had the opportunity for a separate vote on that provision.

Mr. President, even though the opportunity was present to challenge the action of the conferees, without endangering the conference report, no Member in either body rose to make that challenge. Instead, those that favor the FTC "National Nannie" injecting itself into local matters, are holding up the relief in S. 1578 that our city fathers so desperately need.

Now let's talk about Government in the Sunshine. We worked the appropriation bill through Congress out in the open with full debate and votes. Now we are faced by opponents who want to rig it up in the back room and shove it down our throats by unanimous consent.

No way, Mr. President, no way. They can call up the mayors and tell them that "Senator HOLLINGS has to give way or they won't get their relief." That's not true and they know it.

This Senator is strongly committed to the relief to the cities in S. 1578. I want to help my senior colleague get his bill approved and I am ready to agree to any time agreement that any one wants on S. 1578. However, I am not ready to commit hari-kari and sell out Federalism to appease those who seemingly can't rest without the unelected Federal Trade Commission usurping the authority of our elected local officials.

Mr. President, during the debate on June 28 there was confusion in some minds regarding the position of the National League of Cities on section 510. On August 24, Mr. Alan Beals, the executive director of the league wrote me of their appreciation that the appropriation bill "included a provision precluding the FTC from bringing antitrust action against cities, such as the recent lawsuits involving the regulation of taxicabs in Minneapolis and New Orleans." He closed his letter as follows:

> We look forward to working with you to ensure that Congress completes action this year on legislation exempting cities from damages under antitrust laws and that the legislation is not weakened by the addition of an amendment authorizing injunctive action by parties such as the FTC.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE OF CITIES,
Washington, DC, August 22, 1984.

Hon. ERNEST HOLLINGS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLINGS: I would like to express the gratitude of the National League of Cities for your leadership in the Senate on the issue of municipal liability under the antitrust laws. Your leadership in bringing the issue of whether the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) should be permitted to bring antitrust actions against cities before Congress has focused attention on the broader issue of municipal liability for damages under the antitrust laws as well as the problems associated with FTC intervention in local matters.

We are grateful that your effort resulted in final congressional approval of appropriations legislation (H.R. 5712) which included a provision precluding the FTC from bringing antitrust actions against cities, such as the recent lawsuits involving the regulation of taxicabs in Minneapolis and New Orleans. We hope that Congress will complete action on legislation to address the broader question of liability for damages under the antitrust laws now facing cities as a result of the Supreme Court's unexpected ruling in the Boulder case.

We believe that the compromise (H.R. 6027) approved by the House, while limited to the question of damages, goes a long way towards meeting the essential concerns of cities. It is our hope that the Senate will complete action in early September on similar legislation (S. 1578) which has been reported by the Judiciary Committee. We look forward to working with you to ensure that Congress completes action this year on legislation exempting cities from damages under the antitrust laws and that the legislation is not weakened by the addition of an amendment authorizing injunctive actions by parties such as the FTC.

Sincerely,

ALAN BEALS,
Executive Director.

THE DANGERS OF COCAINE

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, people are waking up to the dangers of the recreational drug, cocaine.

In 1 week, in Washington, DC, three local television stations, all network affiliates, have had feature stories on drug abuse, focusing on cocaine, and area treatment centers. Newsweek's cover story was a lengthy article on drug abuse, again dealing mainly with cocaine, and the various programs across the country which presently exist to treat its victims.

The Washington Post featured a series of articles, excerpted from a recently published book, on the tragic life and death of the comedic genius, John Belushi. While the details of his drug-filled life are horrifying to read, one revealing statement in the second of these eight articles stuck with me. Judy Belushi, the comedian's wife, was comforted by his continually turning back to cocaine after using other "more dangerous drugs." She felt this way because cocaine was "not addictive" and "safe." We have only to read the rest of the articles detailing John Belushi's destruction because of cocaine, to see how safe this drug is.

Mr. President, cocaine is in our Nation in such plentiful supply, and at such a low price, that it is becoming a street drug, and no longer a drug of the affluent. The cocaine that is in the United States now is of such purity that emergency room admissions, and recorded deaths, from severe physical reactions to the drug, have nearly doubled in the last year.

While it is heartening to see signs that the public is waking up to the real dangers of this safe drug, cocaine is still entering our Nation at record rates. We must continue to encourage efforts to cut off the supply of this drug at its source, while we continue to educate our citizens to the true perils of cocaine.

SENATE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

THE 8-YEAR LIMITATION ON COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP AND RELATED MATTERS

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, when the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence was established in the spring of 1976, it was decided then that Members would not serve on the committee for more than 8 consecutive years. This decision was contained in section 2(b) of Senate Resolution 400, and has been referred to as the 8-year rule.

In accordance with this provision, more than half of our Members will be required to rotate off the committee at the end of the second session of the 98th Congress on January 3, 1985. I believe that the abrupt departure of these nine Members, and their designated staff, from the committee would have far-reaching negative consequences for Senate oversight of the intelligence community.

On February 9, 1984, Vice Chairman MOYNIHAN and I appeared before the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration to present the fiscal year 1984 committee budget request. At that meeting, I mentioned the 8-year rule, and told Senator MATHIAS that I would be consulting with the membership of the Intelligence Committee on this situation. On July 25, the full committee met in closed session on this matter. As well as the 8-year provision, we discussed recommendations related to the organization and function of the committee and the committee staff.

OPPOSITION TO 8-YEAR "RULE"

For the record, I opposed the 8-year limitation of membership on the Senate Intelligence Committee. No other committee of the Senate has such a limitation on membership, the only other precedent being the 6-year rule of the Ethics Committee which was done away with in 1979. While I believe that some rotation of the membership may be healthy, most Members will agree that the committee has experienced a natural rotation where 15 Senators from both sides of the aisle have left the committee for one reason or another over the past 8 years. This is an average of two per year. Furthermore, the business of overseeing the intelligence community is a complicated one where experience makes a difference. I do not think we can afford to lose over half of our committee at one swoop. Finally, what happens 8 years from now? Do we continue to rotate Members, or is this just a one-time operation?

In my judgment, section 2(b) should be amended so that the first sentence of this provision is removed. In this way, we eliminate the requirement for rotation without removing language which suggests that some rotation might be healthy. However, it is my understanding that some Senators are prepared to fight such an amendment throughout the remainder of the year. Since time is running out, this option may not work.

An alternative to amending section 2(b) would be to allow the provision to stand, and for Members of each party to appeal to the Senate leadership for continued service on this committee after January 3, 1985. Section 2(b) is part of the standing orders of the Senate. These orders have less status than the Standing Rules of the Senate, or the general and permanent laws relating to the Senate. Granting a waiver to the standing orders of the Senate is not uncommon, in my judgment.

ROTATION OF MEMBERSHIP

Mr. President, many members of our committee spoke at the closed session which we held on July 25, and a number of good ideas were proposed at that time. Other Members can speak for themselves on these issues, but I would like to mention a few more thoughts about committee membership and staffing.

First, it is my recollection that at the time of the committee's formation, the leadership intended to have the 8-year limitation on service supported by a definite rotation of membership, which is also provided for in the rule. Specifically, there were to be three classes of members, whose terms would run out at different times. This was meant to provide for regular rotation. If for some reason the terms of the committee membership became unbalanced, then there would be appointments made for a shorter period in order to reestablish regular rotation.

On a number of occasions in the past, we also tried to establish, not only by word but by action, the principle of rotation chairmanship. For example, the frist chairman of our committee, Senator INOUYE, stepped down after serving 2 years as chairman. It is my understanding that he did this because he felt that it would help to ensure that the intelligence community, as in the case of other Federal agencies, did not deal exclusively with the committee chairman and vice chairman. I must admit that over time this practice has fallen into disuse. But I can assure my colleagues that I, for one, have not yet fallen under the spell of the intelligence community. Nor have my colleagues, in my judgment.

COMMITTEE BUDGET REVIEW

Mr. President, at our meeting on July 25, it was also proposed that the committee's review of the annual budget submission be restructured. Originally, the subcommittee structure of the committee was created in response to important committee functions that evolved over time. The Budget Subcommittee has, over the years, taken on more and more of the committee's general oversight functions.

Accordingly, it was proposed that the functions of the current Budget Subcommittee be divided up among the other subcommittees. There were a number of ideas on how this could be done, and the recommendation received some favorable response from the members of the committee.

SUMMARY

In summary, Mr. President, I believe that the so-called 8-year rule should be eliminated. In this regard, I am pleased to see that this is one of the recommendations of Senator QUAYLE who is currently serving as chairman of the Temporary Select Committee to Study the Senate Committee System.

As well, I believe that there are some other recommendations which were made to us in our closed session on July 25 which merit favorable attention. It is my expectation that most of these matters can be taken care of internally by the committee when it goes through its reorganization following the general election in November of this year.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Because the end of this Congress is merely days away, I want, by this insertion in the RECORD, to indicate the honor that has been mine in having been chairman of this committee and to elaborate on that also.

I don't believe in all of my experience in this body that I have ever served with Senators so dedicated to their charge of duty and so honest to their responsibilities. There have been charges made of classified leaks from this committee. With one exception, these charges are not true. Secrets have been better kept by this committee, not only by its elected members, but by its appointed members, better than by the Senate itself.

If I were to cite one particular member of the committee who has been or particular value to the chairman it would be Senator MOYNIHAN of New York. In the few times it has been necessary for me to be absent, he was carried on in perfect fashion. I would also like to thank the Senator from Hawaii, Senator INOUYE, for his unswerving help in getting the chairman through some difficult decisions and times. Also, I would particularly like to point out Senator MALCOLM

WALLOP of Wyoming, whose diligent work on the budget has probably never been equaled in the history of any committee in this body.

I would not like to leave without mentioning the staff. There are 42 members of this staff and they have done a particularly fine job in ferreting out the information that we need, putting it into language that we can understand, and in advising the committee on all matters of importance to the country.

I close my tenure as chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee with a great deal of personal pride because, throughout most of my adult life, spent in the military and in politics, intelligence has been one of my main interests. In fact, if you don't have good intelligence, from the cradle to the grave, you're not going to get along very well in whatever your pursuits might be.

So I am prepared to say goodbye to this committee but, in spirit, I will always be with you.

I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed report be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF A MEETING OF THE SENATE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE TO DISCUSS THE 8-YEAR LIMITATION ON COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP AND RELATED MATTERS

On June 22, 1984, Senator Barry Goldwater, Chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, sent a letter to all Members of the Committee inviting them to attend a closed session of the Full Committee at 10:00 a.m. on July 25, 1984, in Room 385 of the Russell Office Building. The purpose of this meeting was to discuss Section 2(b) of Senate Resolution 400, the so-called eight-year "Rule," and other matters related to Committee organization, activity and staffing.

Chairman Goldwater indicated at the meeting that he would ask the staff to draft a summary that would assist the Members to further define their views on these subjects. This report of the meeting contains summaries and excerpts of the Members' comments prepared in most cases by their staff designees. The Chairman's letter of invitation and the letters sent in response by the Members are attached.

REMARKS OF THE CHAIRMAN, SENATOR GOLDWATER (SUMMARY)

The Committee Chairman, Senator Goldwater, began by providing some background on the eight-year "rule." He noted that when the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence was established in the Spring of 1976, it was decided that Members would not serve on the Committee for more than eight consecutive years. This decision was contained in Section 2(b) of the founding Resolution, S. Res. 400 (1976). In accordance with this provision, more than half of the Members of the Committee would be required to rotate off the Committee at the end of the Second Session of the 98th Congress on January 3, 1985. Senator Goldwater stated that, in his judgment, "The abrupt departure of these nine Members and their designated staff from the Committee would have far-reaching, negative consequences for Senate oversight of the Intelligence Community."

Chairman Goldwater went on to say that he opposed the eight-year limitation of Membership on the Intelligence Committee for the following reasons:

No other Committee of the Senate had such a limitation on Membership, the only other precedent being the six-year limitation of the Ethics Committee which was abolished in 1979.

Over the past eight years, the Committee has experienced a natural rotation where 15 Members from both sides of the aisle have left the Committee for one reason or another. From 1976 to 1983, the following Senators left: Case, Hatfield, Mathias, Pearson, Schmitt, Scott, Stafford, Thurmond, Bayh, Hart, Hathaway, Jackson, Mansfield, Morgan, and Stevenson. Also, Senator Baker became an Ex Officio Member.

The business of overseeing the Intelligence Community is a complicated one where experience makes a critical difference.

The rule is poorly framed in that it suggests a one-time rotation without any provision for future rotation eight years hence.

Senator Goldwater went on to say that in his judgment Section 2(b) should be amended so that the first sentence of the provision is removed. In this fashion, the Committee would eliminate the requirement for rotation without removing the language which suggests that some rotation might be healthy. The drawback to this approach, according to Chairman Goldwater, was that some of the Members of the Committee might fight such an amendment throughout the remainder of the year.

An alternative to this amendment process, according to Senator Goldwater, would be to allow Section 2(b) to stand, and for Members of each Party to appeal to the Senate Leadership for continued service on the Committee following January 3, 1985. He noted that Section 2(b) is part of the Standing Orders of the Senate and, as such, has less status than the Standing Rules of the Senate, or the general or permanent laws relating to the Senate. Granting a waiver to the Standing Orders of the Senate is not uncommon.

REMARKS OF THE VICE CHAIRMAN, SENATOR MOYNIHAN

I am disposed to continue with the eight year rule. If we do so, however, I would hope that the Senate leaders in the 99th Congress might consult with us on how the Committee is to be reconstituted.

I am especially concerned that the new Members be thoroughly briefed on our agreement of June 6 with the Director of Central Intelligence in which we stipulated matters that will automatically be considered "significant anticipated intelligence activit[ies]" and, hence, must be disclosed to the Committee in advance. The one great breakdown in our relationship with the Intelligence Community during my eight years service was the failure by Mr. Casey to notify us in advance of the mining of the Nicaraguan harbors. He subsequently apologized and the new reporting procedure—actually the first formal understanding—was agreed to by the President personally. (I am informed of this by Mr. McFarlane.) I regard the agreement of June 6 as quasi-legislative in nature and to be adhered to as such. I believe the Intelligence Committee agrees.

The plain fact is that, while the Intelligence Oversight Act requires that the committee be informed of any "significant anticipated intelligence activity," What is it? We never got around to defining in the statute what is intended by the term "significant." No one need feel culpable. The term seemed to speak for itself. However, the time came when the Central Intelligence Agency embarked on an activity which it did not deem "significant" at the time, but which the Committee, when it learned of it afterwards, thought very significant indeed.

Our new, written procedure does as much to resolve this difficulty as procedures can do. Within the Executive Branch there is a simple test of this matter. If an officer of the government has in mind an initiative which he or she considers genuinely "significant," he or she will see to it that the President has approved before going forward. The Committee's written and signed agreement with the Director of Central Intelligence provides, among other things, that any such activity receiving presidential approval will be reported in advance to the Committee.

There is also, I believe, a problem with the present "designee" system. We got into the business of—the practice of—stating that a designee worked for the individual Members. That is not in the rules of the Committee. Our rules of practice state that the Committee staff works for the Committee as a whole, under the general supervision of the Chairman and the Vice Chairman of the Committee. If there is going to be a big change in personnel and Membership, I hope that before the new Members take their places it would be possible for us to state designees work for the Chairman and Vice Chairman as the rules provide, so that new Members don't come aboard, acquire a staff person, as it were, and then find they were being asked to give him up.

REMARKS OF SENATOR INOUYE (SUMMARY)

Senator Inouye began by saying that in all likelihood this would be his last statement before the Committee, since he intends to leave the Committee at the end of the year. Senator Inouye indicated that although he had not participated in any major way in the Floor debate on S. Res. 400, he worked closely with Senator Mansfield during the formation of the Committee. Senator Inouye said that it was Senator Mansfield's intention in supporting rotation of Membership first, to prevent an overly close relationship between the Intelligence Community and its overseers; and second, to have a regular infusion of fresh perspective—new outlooks and views on the role and conduct of intelligence activities. It would be beneficial, furthermore, to have as many Members of the Senate as possible exposed to the workings of the Intelligence Community.

Senator Inouye commented that he was unwilling at the beginning to take over as Chairman of the new Committee. After accepting, he reached several conclusions about the functioning of the Committee—which of course had no precedent.

First, the Committee should not have a partisan organization. To that end, Senator Inouye had agreed with Senator Baker that both the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member should have full authority to hire and supervise the staff. All the Members could propose staff, but once their nominees were accepted by the Committee, they would function under the staff directors.

Senator Inouye commented that his original intention concerning staff organization has been lost somewhat. The Committee staff was not supposed to be composed of personal staff members, but rather should be a corps of professionals functioning under the direct authority of the Chairman and the Vice Chairman through the staff directors. Members were to have little to do with the privileges and responsibilities of their designees on the staff, and the staff were to remain answerable directly to the Committee as a whole.

Second, the Leadership at the time of the Committee's formation intended to have the eight-year limitation on service supported by a definite rotation of Membership, which is also provided for in the rule. Specifically, there were to be three classes of Members, whose terms would run out at different times. That was meant to provide for regular rotation. If for some reason the terms of the Committee Membership became unbalanced, then there would be appointments made for a shorter period in order to re-establish regular rotation.

Senator Inouye also mentioned that he had tried to establish, not only by word but by action, the principle of rotating Chairmanship. He felt that this would help ensure that the Intelligence Community, as in the case of other federal agencies, did not come to deal exclusively with the Committee Chairman and Vice Chairman.

Senator Inouye indicated that he believes, therefore, that at the end of the year the eight-year rule should be applied and that the Leadership should make the next series of appointments in the necessary classes to re-establish regular rotation in line with the original intention of S. Res. 400. He stated that, in order to provide for the creation of a more professional staff, he assumed that demonstrably competent and experienced staff would remain under the new Membership—since the staff should not be viewed as personal to their principals. Such continuity on the staff would be especially important in core areas of the Committee's responsibilities.

Finally, Senator Inouye proposed that the Committee's review of the annual budget submission be restructured. He said that the Subcommittee structure of the Committee had been created in response to important Committee functions that evolved over time. The Budget Subcommittee has, however, taken on more and more the Committee's general oversight functions. Senator Inouye heartily commended Senator Wallop for his dedication and expertise in the review of the budget, but he also stated that he felt more Members should be brought into this important process.

Accordingly, Senator Inouye proposed that the functions of the current Budget Subcommittee be divided up among the other Subcommittees. He indicated he had some ideas on how this could be done, and hoped that this would be taken up next year when the new team comes on the Committee.

Senator Inouye concluded by saying that he had enjoyed his service on the Committee, and that it had been a great challenge. He stated that he had learned a great deal about intelligence matters as a result.

REMARKS OF SENATOR CHAFEE (SUMMARY)

Senator Chaffee began by saying that Senate Resolution 400 is not a Senate Rule; rather it is a Standing Order of the Senate. Further, the eight year "rule" has not been strictly followed. For example, Senator Chafee stated that two Members on the Democratic side represented the Judiciary Committee on the Intelligence Committee as opposed to one representative per Party. Chafee also noted the rules had not been followed with respect to the one-third rotation off the Intelligence Committee in each Congress.

Senator Chafee said the eight year rule doesn't make "a great deal of sense" and disagreed with the sentiment when the Committee was originally set up with respect to the fear of Members being suborned by the Intelligence Community. Senator Chafee said that at present there is a natural rotation which has occurred and will continue to occur through retirement or for other reasons.

Senator Chafee disavowed the theory that the Members are becoming "handmaidens of the Intelligence Community;" rather the problem is really Members' failure to devote enough time to the problems at hand. He said that there could have been more Committee hearings, and also that Committee Members should meet on a more regular basis with the Director or other members of the Central Intelligence Agency. This problem is one of being spread too thin; Members are bogged down by serving on too many Committees. We then reiterated a suggestion made in an earlier letter to the Chairman that anyone who is on the Intelligence Committee should only be allowed to serve on two major Committees.

With respect to the criticisms of the Budget Subcommittee, Senator Chafee pointed out that all of the Members can attend the hearings. Given the press of time and business, many do not. Hence, the Chairman and the Minority Ranking Member of the Subcommittee "carry the ball."

Senator Chafee was critical with respect to the designee system, saying that with designees reporting to their individual Members the staff director's authority was diluted. He noted that no other Committee has such a system and he felt it was time to put an end to the designee system on the Intelligence Committee as well.

REMARKS OF SENATOR LUGAR (EXCERPTS IN SUMMARY FORM)

It is my judgment that the eight year "rule" provision needs to be approached again as I believe Members of this Committee and the Senate as a whole are likely to suggest that the Intelligence Committee no longer warrants special protection given the historical independence it has exercised since its formation.

Although the idea of a fresh perspective and new views which might be caused by more frequent turnover of Membership that Dan Inouye has mentioned today is an important one, I would suppose that the same could be said for any Committee. In fact, perhaps if such a massive turnover would occur on the Foreign Relations Committee, then we might take a look at foreign policy issues from a different, fresher, perspective. I believe, however, that this is a philosophical issue for the Body as a whole to debate; yet I don't see a uniqueness of this quality for our particular Committee.

Leaving aside these two problems, I believe that a turnover of nine people out of 15 is not really in the best interest of the Senate or the country. Whatever failures to enforce the class system have led us to this year's difficulties, I believe it would be irresponsible of us to jeopardize the Committee's ability to analyze intelligence issues from a historical perspective by such a rapid turnover.

These thoughts lead me to believe that we ought to repeal the eight year "rule" at the earliest possible time and in the interim, if repeal cannot occur instantly, that the appointments to the Committee or the filling of vacancies ought to be left to the disposition of the individual Members themselves. If for various reasons Members wish to leave, they are free to do so and then it should be up to the Majority and Minority leaders to determine who ought to be appointed or reappointed to fill those vacancies.

REMARKS OF SENATOR WALLOP (SUMMARY)

Senator Wallop stated that the eight-year rule had never been observed but, rather, that the leadership over the years had determined both new and continuing appointments to the Committee. Senator Wallop commented that concerns about the Membership growing too close to the Intelligence Community were overblown, and that the Members had actually begun to shape intelligence programs in positive ways, that the Intelligence Community opposed. He said that losing expertise on the Committee, including that of the staff, could result in Committee Members becoming captives of ignorance. Time was necessary before things in the intelligence world really began to come together in Members' minds.

There would be a special danger, in Senator Wallop's view, if development of a permanent, professional staff were coupled with rotation of the Membership. This could really produce an intelligence clique, and new Members would essentially be receiving little more than basic courses in intelligence matters year after year.

Senator Wallop thanked Senator Inouye for his compliments and said that if they contained any truth, it was due to his willingness to take the time necessary to direct the activities of the Budget Subcommittee. Many of the defects in Senate oversight of intelligence programs result from the inability of Members to find time to participate more fully in the oversight process.

Rotation of Committee Membership or other changes that would cause major changeover in the Committee's review of the annual budget submission would be of special concern, according to Senator Wallop. He commented that Senator Leahy, as another regular participant in the budget sessions, also realized the great complexity of the yearly budget review, and the need for continuity in this especially important area of the Committee's functions.

Senator Wallop also addressed the designee system governing the Committee's professional staff. He said the benefits of this arrangement outweigh its drawbacks. Normal staff changes and Membership changes have resulted in considerable turnover in the staff over the years. Perhaps the influence of staff is actually even less in the Intelligence Committee than elsewhere, because of the possibility of direct Senatorial communication when intelligence or other highly classified matters are involved.

Senator Wallop stated that, in sum, the Committee had done a good job despite any perceived setbacks. The country has been strengthened by the work of the Committee, ensuring that another Church Committee exercise will never occur. Service on the Committee has created a regular corps of people in the Senate who understand intelligence activities, despite their occasional disagreements over them. This has enriched public and private debate on these matters.

REMARKS OF SENATOR LEAHY (SUMMARY)

Senator Leahy began by urging that the informal policy of having Members from the Armed Services, Foreign Relations, Judiciary and Appropriations Committees continue. He referred to the fact that in addition to himself, Senators Inouye and Durenberger had written the Chairman of their support for maintaining the eight year rule of S. Res. 400, and that Senator Moynihan had also written of his disposition to continue abiding by the eight year rule.

Senator Leahy noted that while those who support extending the eight year term or abolishing it altogether argue that we need to preserve expertise, there are many in the Senate who do not believe the present Committee Members are irreplaceable. Some of these Senators may defend the eight year rule in the Rules Committee and on the Floor if there is an attempt to change it. He hoped the Committee would avoid a situation where the motives of those wishing to change the rule might be questioned.

Senator Leahy believes there are many excellent candidates in the Senate for Membership on the Committee. As a Member of the Steering Committee, Senator Leahy is aware of many fine Democrats who want to serve on the Committee.

Senator Leahy referred to the strong support of Senator Mansfield and others for a limited tenure on the Committee during the debates on S. Res. 400 in 1976. He believes Senator Mansfield and Senator Hugh Scott as well should be invited to testify should there be any effort to change the eight year rule.

Senator Leahy emphasized the importance of a regular rotation on a Committee of the unique sensitivity of the SSCI. He said that because of the bipartisanship and special nature of the Committee, public trust and confidence in the intelligence agencies are greater today than before the Committee was formed. He believes tampering with the rules could shake that public confidence. He is concerned that the extraordinary support and assistance the Committee has been able to give the Intelligence Community could be threatened by a divisive debate in the Rules Committee and on the Floor.

Senator Leahy observed that with the exception of the covert action program in Central America, he is one of the strongest supporters of the Intelligence Community on the Committee. He is concerned that the consensus across the political spectrum could be jeopardized by an attempt to change the eight year rule and prolong the terms of Members due to leave.

On the idea of restructuring the Committee's budget oversight process, Senator Leahy supported the suggestion that Senators Inouye, Wallop and a couple other Members prepare a general proposal for the Full Committee to examine. He noted that he would be willing to give up some other responsibilities to devote more time to budget oversight.

REMARKS OF SENATOR COHEN (EXCERPTS)

"It seems to me that the problem is not so much with the eight-year rule as with the fact that we have so many leaving in the coming year. And, had there been a better distribution, a better rotation arrived at, we wouldn't be, I don't think, here discussing the issue.

"I've listened to the arguments about drawing a parallel between the Committee and the Armed Services Committee. It sounds like there is some sort of parallel, but the fact of the matter is, our Armed Services Committee generally conducts its business in the open. So there is not the same kind of parallel situation.

"If you make this sort of permanent Committee . . ., what you are doing is you are creating an appointed, or almost anointed 15, who will sit in secret deliberations on our secret missions, and so forth, and, then, go to the other 85 Members of our colleagues and say: Please accept the judgment without question. . . . But I think we would have less credibility, ultimately, by having a closed society of 15 Members that only rotates upon the defeat or retirement of individual Members.

"It is also, it seems to me, an inherent tension, a necessary tension, between oversight and maintaining an arms length relationship. . . . I'm not sure it's even desirable to reduce that tension. Familiarity may breed knowledge; it may also breed familarity. And, I have the feeling from time to time, when you start to get close, too close, to these agencies, be it the CIA, be it DOD, it's almost like a Venus Fly Trap. You start to reach in and touch it, and suddenly it closes on you. . . . The only point I'm making is that in order to effectively exercise oversight, we have to have some distance. [This] is one of the benefits[,] I believe, by having new Members on [this Committee].

"But, secondly, . . . the more Members who are exposed to the Intelligence Community, the better off the Intelligence Community is going to be. It's much better to have more informed . . . Members of the Senate on the Floor passing judgment on votes dealing with budgetary matters and other matters who have some access to this closed circle here. So, I think it's a mutually beneficial thing to have more Members having access, hopefully on a basis that would preserve continuity, while infusing newer Members on the Committee itself. And, so, it strikes me that there is nothing inherently wrong with the eight years, but there is something, perhaps, wrong that so many Members are going to be lost in the coming year. . . .

"What I . . . suggest, as one possible option, would be to have the six Members (not affected by the eight-year rule remain), and then four of the nine (affected by the rule) could remain, or should remain, at the direction of the Leadership for an additional year or two, whatever the Leadership decides, which would leave way for five new Members. That . . . would provide a more orderly rotation.

"And if those Members who, in fact, were extended would have to give up their Chairmanship, or their Ranking position, to still stay on the Committee, that would, at least, preserve the kind of continuity [we need] and have a few more Members who do have the expertise without locking that Membership in. . . .

"Secondly, . . . it seems to me you could have a . . . division or jurisdictional authority on the Budget Subcommittee, along the lines we have in Armed Services . . . That might involve more Members, and I think it [would] give everybody a broader perspective on the Agency activities."

REMARKS OF SENATOR BENTSEN (EXCERPTS)

". . . [I]f I don't have a designee of my own, then I have to put someone [on as liaison to the Committee] to keep me informed. . . . [The current designee system] has served us as individual Members very well, but has not worked for the collective advancement of the Committee. So we have to balance that out. . . .

"I think [Senator Inouye] is probably right that we ought to divide up [the budget] responsibility [on the Committee].

"[On the eight-year rule], I finally come down on the side of trying to keep the experience there. . . . [H]aving all of that experience by those Members is terribly important to me. And when you've been had a few times by Intelligence, then you become more cautious, and more concerned. When you have a mining incident happen, that's a part of your collective judgment in arriving at the next decision, when they are talking to you. It may give you a little bit of cynicism in the process, and that isn't all bad. . . .

CHAIRMAN'S SUMMARY

At the conclusion of the meeting, Chairman Goldwater attempted to summarize future actions the Committee might take on the basis of what was discussed.

First, he commended Senator Inouye for his suggestion to have three classes of Membership and stated he felt that the Senate Leadership would welcome this suggestion.

Second, he endorsed Senator Inouye's recommendation regarding dividing the responsibilities of the Budget Subcommittee among various Subcommittees of the Full Committee, and asked if any Members had objections to that recommendation. Senator Wallop posed an objection asking that the matter not be resolved by the Committee at that time. On the basis of Senator Wallop's objection, the question was left "in abeyance," and the Chairman added that "we have four months to make decisions" on these matters.

Third, regarding the suggestion of Senator Chafee that Members of the Committee meet more regularly with the Director of Central Intelligence, the Chairman stated that he felt this would not be a problem. In fact, he indicated that most Directors of Central Intelligence "would welcome that opportunity."

Fourth, regarding the designee system, the Chairman said that "the designees should work together," He indicated that in his judgment, the designees do work together more than many Members may realize and that as Chairman he was "very pleased with the designees," noting that he had watched them work on assignments and do "a good collective job."

Fifth, with regard to the eight year "rule," which was the principal motive for having the session in the first place, Senator Goldwater stated that this issue like that of the Budget Subcommittee should probably be left "in abeyance." He indicated that in his view, Senators Scott and Mansfield were "very reluctant about the eight year rule," and that he did not vote for it when Senate Resolution 400 came to the Floor in 1976.

In concluding the meeting, Senator Goldwater thanked all of the Members for the time and effort they had expended in preparing either letters or statements for the record on these important organizational issues.

U.S. SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, DC, June 22, 1984.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
Vice Chairman, Select Committee on Intelligence, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR PAT: When the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence was established in the Spring of 1976, it was determined that Members would not serve for more than eight consecutive years on the Committee. This provision of Senate Resolution 400 is contained at Section 2(b) and states as follows:

"No Senator may serve on the Select Committee for more than eight years of continuous service, exclusive of service by any Senator on such Committee during the Ninety-fourth Congress. To the greatest extent practicable, one-third of the Members of the Senate appointed to the Select Committee at the beginning of the Ninety-seventh Congress and each Congress thereafter shall be Members of the Senate who did not serve on such Committee during the preceding Congress."

In accordance with this rule, more than half of our Members will be required to rotate off the Committee at the end of the Second Session of the Ninety-eighth Congress. By my calculation, the Members of the Committee who are affected by this eight year service rule are as follows: Senators GOLDWATER, GARN, CHAFEE, LUGAR, WALLOP, MOYNIHAN, HUDDLESTON, BIDEN, and INOUYE.

In my judgment, the abrupt departure of these Members and their designated staff from the Committee would have far-reaching negative consequences for Senate oversight of the Intelligence Community. On this basis, I am calling for a meeting of the Full Committee to discuss this matter at 10 o'clock a.m. on July 25, 1984, in Room S-407 of the Capitol.

If you cannot attend that session, I ask that you convey to me in writing your thoughts on the eight year rule so that I can have the benefit of your views. This issue is very, very important to our Committee and I urge you to give it all due consideration.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

BARRY GOLDWATER,
Chairman.

U.S. SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, DC, July 24, 1984.

In response please refer to 84-2527.

Hon. BARRY GOLDWATER,
Chairman, Select Committee on Intelligence, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BARRY: I shall look forward to our meeting Wednesday to discuss the organization questions concerning the Intelligence Committee which you raise in your letter of June 22.

I am disposed to continue with the eight year rule. If we do this, however, I would hope that the Senate leaders in the 99th Congress might consult with us on how the Committee is to be reconstituted.

I am especially concerned that the new Members be thoroughly briefed on our agreement of June 6 with the DCI in which we stipulated matters which will automatically be considered "significant anticipated intelligence activit[ies"] and, hence, must be disclosed to the Committee in advance. The one great breakdown in our relationship with the Intelligence Committee during my eight years service was the failure by Mr. Casey to notify us in advance of the mining of the Nicaraguan harbors. He subsequently apologized and the new procedure—actually the first formal understanding—was agreed to by the President personally. (I am informed of this by Mr. McFarlane.) In the immediate aftermath of the revelation of the mining in the press on April 6, 1984, a number of painful events occurred from which I do not feel we have yet recovered. All we have to show for that pain is the new oversight procedure. It would be a setback, indeed, if it were somehow lost sight of in the changeover. I regard the agreement of June 6 quasi-legislative in nature and to be adhered to as such.

There is also, I believe, a problem with the present "designee" system. It would seem to me that designees should be primarily responsible to the staff director, or if you like, the majority and minority staff directors. If such a change is to be made, I would urge that it be done now, which is to say in this Congress, in order that the new Members in the next Congress arrive with such arrangements already in place.

Lastly, in his letter to you on May 2, Senator Chafee proposes that "we meet with the Director in S-407 on a regular basis . . ." I think this is a sensible idea but if adopted the prospects are that we will do just that: meet in S-407. The Architect's Office now states our new hearing room will be completed in September. I'll believe it when it happens!

Best,

DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
Vice Chairman.

U.S. SENATE,
May 2, 1984.

Hon. BARRY GOLDWATER,
Chairman, Select Committee on Intelligence, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BARRY: In connection with the meeting of the Intelligence Committee on Thursday, you asked that we come forward with suggestions on how our Committee could do its oversight work in a better fashion, especially in connection with covert actions.

Here are some proposals for consideration by the Committee:

1. We meet with the Director in S407 on a regular basis at which time he will discuss activities of the Agency and we will have an opportunity to question him about those or other matters.

I propose that these meetings be every three weeks on a schedule laid out several months in advance. Where a recess prevents a meeting from occurring on schedule, then the meeting should occur in the week we return from recess.

Obviously, the DCI will be unable to attend some meetings, due to being out of the country or conflicts, and in such instances, which we hope will be few, his deputy should fill in.

It may be that every 3 weeks is not the correct interval, but I suggest that as a starter.

2. Members of the Intelligence Committee shall serve on only 2 major Senate Committees.

One suggestion might be to make the Intelligence Committee a major committee, but I did not think that a good idea. However, in order to make sure Members time isn't too consumed by meetings of committees, the limitation of service on 2 major committees seems sensible.

3. Staff of the Committee must have closer communications with Members. Activities in the intelligence area must be more rapidly brought to Members' attention.

4. The rotation rules in S. Res. 400 should be abolished so that there can be built and retained an expertise of Members and staff. If there are objections to changing the rules at this time, a possible compromise might be to have one-half of next year's retirees leave and one-half stay, with that determination made by drawing straws.

In addition there are undoubtedly suggestions for improving staff organization as it applies to covert activities. The staff director could be helpful here.

I hope these suggestions are useful.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN H. CHAFEE,
U.S. Senator.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 25, 1984.

Hon. BARRY GOLDWATER, Chairman,
Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
Vice Chairman, Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, Washington, DC.

DEAR BARRY AND PAT: I have been informed that a meeting of the Intelligence Committee has been scheduled immediately after the Recess to consider the eight-year limitation on membership under Sen. Res. 400 (1976), which established the Committee. It seems to me that, as several of the members come to the end of their maximum terms under the rule, it is indeed a good time to consider not only the implications of the upcoming membership rotation, but also related matters affecting the organization and functioning of the Committee:

(1) Rotation of Committee Membership under the Eight Year Rule:

I remain firmly committed to application of the eight-year rule and the principle of rotation of Intelligence Committee membership. I believe that the value of fresh perspective and representativeness outweighs, in this case, any advantages that might come from following the ordinary principles of seniority. This is because, in the area of secrecy that surrounds intelligence activities, it is especially important that the public not perceive that there is a special relationship between a certain group of legislative overseers and the Executive Branch agencies.

It could be argued that the public, since the days the Church Committee investigations uncovered substantial abuses in the conduct of intelligence activities both at home and abroad, has become more cognizant of the need for effective intelligence and more assured—to a considerable degree through the existence of legislative oversight procedures—that intelligence activities are being conducted wisely and properly. While I feel this is true, I also believe that this perception can quickly change. Recent developments in Congressional oversight, especially the public disagreement about notification of certain activities in Central America, make this moment singularly inappropriate to effect any changes in organization that would lead the public to believe that Congressional vigilance in this area is declining.

It can also be argued that rotation of membership, especially the large turnover that we will be faced with at the beginning of the Ninety-ninth Congress, will detract from the continuity of the Committee's work and the expertise that has been attained by the current members. I well remember, however, how after the formation of the Committee in the Ninety-fourth Congress, all the members were new at the business of regular oversight of intelligence activities. I as chairman, Senator Goldwater as vice chairman, and the rest of the members were quickly challenged by this situation to achieve a level of expertise sufficient to exercise effective oversight. Our newness to the field also gave us fresh perspective into the problems that needed to be pursued by the new oversight committee.

(2) Structure of the Committee:

Since the time of my chairmanship, the Intelligence Committee has had a separate subcommittee to review the budget for intelligence programs. This separate unit was created in large part to allow compartmentation of the details of the complex and sensitive technical systems that dominate the intelligence budget. As the Committee's organization has evolved over time, however, details concerning such systems has become widely available to the staff, while access to informaton on other, more politically sensitive matters has been more strictly compartmented.

Over the years, in addition, the Budget Subcommittee has come to exercise an increasing influence over all aspects of the Committee's oversight functions. A wide range of legislative issues have become linked with the annual budget authorization, and the classified report accompanying the authorization bill usually contains many recommendations of a general nature which arise in connection with consideration of the budget. As a result, the Budget Subcommittee has come to dominate proceedings at the subcommittee level, while the other current subcommittees exercise few concrete functions. This result has been strengthened in recent years by the tendency toward greater disparities between the budget initially submitted by the Administration and the version finally approved by the Congress. More and more, general issues are considered in the context of authorization review, and resource decisions are deferred for later, political resolution.

The increasing importance of the budgeting process in general oversight has placed an undue burden, and overly great responsibilities, on the chairmen and members of the Budget Subcommittee. I would propose, therefore, that consideration of the entire budget be returned to the full Committee, with its component parts to be reviewed by all the subcommittees. I believe that the following subcommittee structure would achieve the various aims referred to above: Technical Intelligence; Foreign Operations; Security and Rights of Americans; and Analysis and Production. I am prepared to explain at greater length precisely what programs would fall under the supervision of each of these subcommittees—which largely parallel those in place today—and how more effective review of the budget could also be accomplished within this proposed organization.

(3) Responsibilities of Committee Staff:

Committee professional staff have been chosen, from the beginning, largely by the individual members and have been referred to as their members' "designees." I originally decided upon this method of selection because, in our then novel enterprise, there was a shortage of established, competent Congressional personnel in this field. My feeling was that the best staff could be retained at that time through the collective choice of the membership.

Committee designees, it would appear, have more and more become almost solely accountable to their principals. This has detracted from the ability of the staff directors to organize projects at the professional staff level. It has always been my view that the designees are primarily accountable to the Committee, and only secondarily serve as a channel of communication with the members.

I recommend, therefore, that the role of the professional staff be redefined to emphasize their primary responsibility to carry out the instructions of the Committee as a whole.

Thought should be given to assigning the professional staff duties related to the activities of the subcommittees, in connection with the reorganization proposed above.

The idea of core staff should also be seriously explored, especially with an eye toward building up advanced staff competence in a few of the areas of special concern to the Committee in its oversight function—e.g., in the areas of safeguarding the rights of Americans, conducting investigations of foreign operations, reviewing the adequacy of technical systems, and analyzing the conclusions of the Intelligence Community in such complex areas as verification of arms control agreements. The Committee should continue to have a bipartisan budget staff responsive to all the members under the direction of the Chairman and Vice Chairman.

I am happy that we shall have a chance to discuss the eight-year rule and related issues prior to the beginning of the next Congress. I would be cautious, however, about attempting to change the rule during the current Congress, before the views of the members of the Ninety-ninth Congress can be heard through their respective Leadership and Party Caucuses. On the structure and staffing issues also discussed in this letter, however, some immediate attention could be appropriate. It would be unfortunate if a basis were not created now for the ranking members to address these issues speedily at the beginning of the next Congress—before necessary changes might be prevented by inertia.

I hope these comments will be useful to you and the other members of the Committee in deciding what action, if any, to take on these matters during the current Congress.

Aloha,

DANIEL K. INOUYE,
U.S. Senator.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, August 8, 1984.

Hon. BARRY GOLDWATER,
Chairman, Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BARRY: I am sorry that I was unable to attend the Committee meeting to discuss the issue of the eight year rule and other matters relative to the operation of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. I have, however, reviewed the transcript of the meeting, and would like to share with you some thoughts I have concerning the future membership and structure of the Intelligence Committee.

I do not support a mandatory eight year rule. I have no quarrel with those who argue that the rotation of new members on the Committee is generally a good thing. Yet, as you indicated in your opening remarks, the Intelligence Committee has enjoyed the benefit of new members as a result of the natural committee membership selection process, without having to resort to imposing the eight year rule. In addition, I agree with Senator Lugar who pointed out that the Intelligence Committee should not be viewed as unique with respect to the benefit of new members. If we would benefit, is there any reason not to require other committees to operate under a similar system of rotating membership?

Personally, I have enjoyed my membership on this Committee, and would like to remain a member after my eight year term expires. While my other committee responsibilities often conflict with scheduled meetings of the Intelligence Committee, I continue to find that my membership is extremely valuable to me on many policy issues ranging from Central America to arms control. In addition, my position on the Appropriations Committee provides me an opportunity to support key programs of vital interest to the intelligence community.

With respect to the designee system, let me say that this system is absolutely essential if all the members of the Intelligence Committee are to remain informed concerning pertinent intelligence issues. For security reasons, individual Senators cannot rely on personal staff to monitor developments of the Intelligence Committee; designees are the only ones who can fulfill this responsibility. Nonetheless, I would expect the designees to serve the Chairman, Vice Chairman and staff director, as well, to ensure that the work of the Committee—as distinct from the work of its individual members—is carried out professionally.

While I read with interest the suggestion by several of our colleagues in support of dividing up the budget review responsibilities among the existing subcommittees, I would recommend a degree of caution in moving to implement such proposals. The cohesive, integrated budget review process forged by Senator Wallop constitutes a major strength of this Committee's budget oversight. Any effort to divide this responsibility in order to involve more Senators should take care not to do damage to the integrated framework Malcom has promoted.

I appreciate this opportunity to convey my thoughts on these issues, and would be happy to discuss them further with you personally.

Sincerely,

JAKE GARN.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 13, 1984.

Hon. BARRY GOLDWATER,
Chairman, Committee on Intelligence, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BARRY: I appreciate your June 22nd letter on the 8-year rule. The July 25 meeting conflicts with a previous commitment to cochair a hearing, but I hope to take part in some of the discussion on this subject and on Dan Inouye's suggestions.

I support the 8-year rule, as you know, and intend to defend it. The difficulties and dislocations that it may cause are outweighed, in my view, by the benefits that will accrue from firmly establishing the principle of rotation in the responsibilities of Committee membership and leadership. Such rotation will help the Committee maintain its vitality in a difficult and demanding job.

Senator Inouye's proposals merit very serious consideration. I look forward to hearing people's reactions to them. They would adjust the distribution of reponsibilities among our members, but need not, I would argue, require changes in the designee system for our staff.

I would hope that the Committee might also discuss the work of the Quayle Committee, which has begun to meet and will shortly hold hearings. I hear that they will consider toughening the rules on the number of committee assignments for each member. Such actions could seriously affect the Intelligence Committee, which depends upon its members' ties to other committees in performing some of its most vital functions.

Sincerely,

DAVE DURENBERGER,
U.S. Senator.

U.S. SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, DC, June 27, 1984.

Hon. BARRY GOLDWATER, Chairman,
Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
Vice Chairman, Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, Washington, DC.

DEAR BARRY AND PAT: Thanks for your letter about the Committee meeting on July 25 to discuss S. Res. 400 and the eight year rule. I will be there to give my views in person, but I also want to state them briefly in writing ahead of time.

I have carefully read the testimony and floor debate in 1976 about the Committee's rules and structure. Frank Church, Abe Ribicoff, Mike Mansfield and other leaders of the Senate clearly explained why limiting the terms of members on the Intelligence Committee is essential. They wisely insisted on the eight year rule for important purposes. They wanted to inhibit co-option of Committee Members by the Intelligence Community. Recognizing the special sensitivity of intelligence, both for national security and for civil liberties, they intended to bring fresh viewpoints to bear from time to time on the oversight of the CIA, NSA, FBI and other intelligence agencies, and to involve a wider cross section of Senators in this unique responsibility. Had Members rotated off the Committee in the past at the times and in the proportions intended by the rule, we would not have this big turnover ahead of us. Failing to do what we should have done in the past does not justify continuing bad habits now.

The main argument for extending the present eight year term seems to be the negative impact on oversight when nine of the current fifteen Members leave, presumably accompanied by their staff. With all due respect to those due to leave, I think we would all agree no one is irreplaceable, and there are many qualified Senators interested in serving on the Committee who would come up to speed quickly. The example of Sam Nunn stepping in for Scoop Jackson is a guide to what can be done in selecting replacement.

Of course, six current Members, three Republicans and three Democrats, all with substantial experience on the Committee, would remain to ensure continuity of oversight in the short period while new Members learn the ropes. In addition, while I think the idea of unique staff "expertise," with the exception of the budget and certain technical subjects, can be overdrawn, it is not impossible that some of these staff would be retained by new Members as their designees. There are examples of this from the past. Moreover, I am impressed by Danny Inouye's ideas for strengthening the core staff as a professional resource. Staff of departing Members with special experience and capabilities in aspects of oversight might be considered for retention as core staff rather than as designees.

The case for retaining a limited term on the Intelligence Committee is so compelling that I would have to oppose any attempt to change S. Res. 400. In any event, an action of this significance involving rules, privileges and prerogatives would required a major debate on the floor and would be hotly contested. There is not sufficient legislative time left to hold the necessary hearings in our Committee and in Rules, and have a full floor debate. So, while there is no reason not to have a preliminary airing of opinions on July 25, as a practical matter S. Res. 400 and the eight year rule are clearly issues for the next Congress and Leadership, as Danny Inouye pointed out in his letter of June 25.

Best regards,
Sincerely,

PATRICK LEAHY,
U.S. Senator.

THE CYPRUS QUESTION AND U.S. AID TO TURKEY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, the fiscal year 1985 foreign aid authorization, as reported by the Foreign Relations Committee, included an important provision restoring the traditional 7:10 ratio for Greece/Turkey military assistance and linking U.S. grant military aid for Turkey to cooperation in resolving the Cyprus conflict.

I am introducing this same amendment to House Joint Resolution 648, the continuing resolution. I ask that this amendment, incorporating technical changes as are required for the continuing resulution, be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. Given the continuing tragedy that plagues the island nation of Cyprus, the Senate must take effective action that could help resolve that conflict. We cannot afford to wait until next year for the enactment of an authorization bill. When the Senate considers the continuing resolution, I intend to call up this amendment for myself and a number of cosponsors.

This provision reflects the bipartisan view of the Foreign Relations Committee. In all, 11 members of the committee voted in favor of this approach to military assistance for NATO's southeastern flank.

I urge all Senators to join us in including this important language in the continuing resolution. There are many good reasons for doing so. First, restoring the traditional 7:10 Greece/Turkey aid ratio is an important signal of the U.S. commitment to evenhandedness in dealing with these allies. Evenhandedness is especially important at the current time, when leftist elements in Greece hope to push Athens away from the United States and closer to the Soviet Union. We must take this reasonable action to avoid this risk.

Second, the United States has worked vigorously through diplomacy to bring an end to the Cyprus conflict in which Ankara is a key player. Our previous approach of words rather than deed has failed. We must now look toward concrete U.S. actions to demonstrate our commitment to the peace process. The United States possesses few sources of leverage in Turkey beyond foreign aid. We must therefore use our aid program constructively to bring about movement toward a settlement on Cyprus.

Third, both the Turkish Government and the Turkish-Cypriot leadership have previously stated that a return of Varosha to Greek Cypriot control would improve prospects for a resolution of the Cyprus conflict. Unfortunately, both Turkey and the Turkish Cypriots have backed away from taking steps to implement such a policy. Indeed, the Turkish Cypriot leadership has inflamed the situation in recent months.

Finally, this provision on aid to Turkey is not punitive. Rather, it rewards Turkey for taking actions that will assist in a settlement on Cyprus. Turkey would continue to receive adequate assistance should the provision dealing with Varosha not be complied with.

Mr. President, I urge Senators to support this Foreign Relations Committee-adopted amendment. It deserves to be included in the continuing resolution, and I hope many Senators will agree to cosponsor and vote for it.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other Act, not to exceed $215,000,000 of the amounts appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act or any other laws to carry out chapter 2 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 for the fiscal year 1985, may be obligated or expended on assistance for Turkey unless the President has certified to the Congress that the formerly Greek-Cypriot occupied area of Famagusta/Varosha has been returned to the Government of Cyprus under the auspices of the United Nations for the immediate resettlement of refugees.

(b) No credits may be extended and no guarantees may be issued under the Arms Export Control Act for Turkey for the fiscal year 1985 if the extension of such credits or the issuance of such guarantees would cause the sum of such credits and guarantees provided for Turkey for such fiscal year to exceed $500,000,000.

ASSISTANCE TO POLISH FARMERS

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I held a hearing of the Senate Foreign Relatins Committee this afternoon on a bill to assist the Polish farmers. My bill (S. 3000) is endorsed by President Reagan and is fully supported by Pope John Paul II. The bill would provide $10 million in U.S. contribution to a fund to be administered by the Polish church, which is beginning this pilot project in an effort to improve the private agricultural sector in Poland. I expect that the Foreign Relations Committee will act on the bill on Wednesday, September 26.

At today's hearing, the committee heard from Edward Derwinski, counselor of the Department of State. The committee also called to testify witnesses from three organizations. The committee heard Alfred L. Abramowicz, auxiliary bishop to His Eminence, Joseph Cardinal Bernardin, the esteemed Archbishop of Chicago; Rev. Joseph F. Mytych, of Sts. Peter and Paul Church, South Paulina Street, Chicago; and Ms. Myra Lenard, executive director of the Polish American Congress, the umbrella organization of 3,000 Polish organizations in the United States.

Ms. Lenard stated that the Polish American Congress strongly supports the foundation and urges U.S. contribution. Reverend Mytych, who has been actively involved in the good works of the Catholic League for Religious Assistance to Poland, eloquently stated at the hearing:

I ask that favorable consideration be given to the passage of this legislation which will allow the Polish people to move forward to a day when, thankful for the help we have given them in their hour of need, they may find themselves in a position of such sufficiency that they in turn can help another people in need.

And Bishop Abramowicz stated that President Reagan's decision to support this bill was received most joyfully by the Polish nation.

The testimony presented today on S. 3000 is very thoughtful. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the full texts of the statements by the distinguished witnesses who appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT TO THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE BY THE MOST REVEREND ALFRED L. ABRAMOWICZ

Gentlemen, I am Alfred L. Abramowicz, auxiliary bishop to His Eminence, Joseph Cardinal Bernardin, archbishop of Chicago. His Eminence Cardinal Bernardin is most grateful for the invitation to testify before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in behalf of the support of the Polish Agricultural Foundation. Regretably, the short notice did not permit him time to reschedule previously made commitments so as to be able to appear in person. He asks that I rely to you this message of complete support for the Polish Agricultural Foundation, to express his plea that the United States support this foundation with a most substantial grant, and to state that he as Archbishop of Chicago has assured the Foundation that he is confident that Chicago Catholics and the Archdiocese of Chicago will contribute generously to the Foundation. He has requested that I and the Rev. Joseph F. Mytych of Chicago appear at this hearing and speak in favor of the Foundation.

I speak as a private citizen of the United States and am of Polish ancestry. My mother and father immigrated to the United States as teen-agers. I do not speak in behalf of the hierarchy of the United States, the National Conference of Catholic Bishops or the United States Catholic Conference. I speak as an American bishop who is knowledgeable of Polish affairs and the condition of the Church and State in Poland. As national executive director of the Catholic League for Religious Assistance to Poland for the past 24 years.

I am in close contact with the present Primate of Poland, Joseph Cardinal Glemp, as I had been with his predecessor, the late Stefan Cardinal Wyszynski. In these past 24 years I have visited Poland perhaps 15 times, always to be in contact with the Catholic hierarchy of Poland. A month ago during the visit of Cardinal Bernardin in Poland (August 10-20, 1984), the Cardinal together with the Revs. Joseph F. Mytych and Matt Bednarz we spent several hours with the Rev. Alojzy Orszulik, plenipotentiary of the Polish episcopate and head of the Agricultural Foundation going over details of the pilot project and the global aspects of the Foundation.

The concept of an Agricultural Foundation to help private farmers was conceived as the Primate of Poland, the hierarchy and its people marvelled at the tremendous good will and the sacrifice of the United States and governments of Western European nations—marvelled at the sacrificial generosity of Americans and peoples all over the world as these came to relieve the critical shortages of foods clothing and medical supplies which afflicted the Polish nation a couple of years ago. They judiciously observed took note of the splendid cooperation of the Polish government as the Polish hierarchy efficiently, justly and charitably distributed these benefactions. As the received these gifts gratefully, they became fully aware of their own human dignity. They considered how they would rather be in a position to give rather than to receive, prefer to work than be on a dole. A conviction rose to supercede all emotions that there was a way that they could feed and clothe themselves. They had the land, the ability and will to work. What they needed was aid of another kind: modern machinery, tractors and repair parts. Their land needed chemicals: fertilizers, pesticides, preservants and disinfectants. They needed barns, repair shops, processing plants for fruits and vegetables—field services, water systems developed for life-support and irrigation, sewage treatment, improved milk production, and sanitary and safe processing equipment. With such materials and equipment they could become self-sustaining, stand proudly on their own feet and be enabled eventually to extend a helping hand to others less fortunate than they.

Thus, the Polish Agicultural Foundation became established by the Polish episcopate as sanctioned under legislation passed by the Polish parliament on April 6, 1984. The Foundation will be operating independently of the authorities of the Polish State, and as a separate entity but under the patronage of the Catholic Church in Poland.

The Foundation seeks to pursue three principal activities: provide selected services (field operations, mechanical maintenance, water and sanitation equipment and repairs, provided by the farmers themselves with provided equipment and supplies), increase agricultural production (milk, fruits, vegetables) and sale or production implements (tractors, machinery, tools, spare parts, component and pesticides).

The Polish episcopate established the Foundation only after receiving commitments from ecclesiastical bodies in Western Europe, even Australia, as well as from certain Western governments, private organizations and individuals, and on a solid hope of a ten million dollar grant from the United States government.

The Catholic church in the United States is ready to make a substantial commitment toward the 28 million-dollar fund which is needed to support the pilot program through 1985.

The Catholic Relief Services—CRS—a branch of the United States Catholic Conference has already appointed the Rev. Terremce J. Mulkerin, to work with the foundation and has pledged to cover the costs of his labors for an initial period of six months. John Cardinal Krol of Philadelphia has made public statements asserting his support of the Foundation. He has further solicited a solid commitment from many members of the American Catholic hierarchy. I repeat that Cardinal Bernardin of Chicago expresses full support of the Foundation.

It is imperative now that the declaration of intention which was recently given by President Reagan and which was received most joyfully by the Polish nation and the universal world, become a reality.

I therefore request that favorable consideration be given to enact appropriate legislation making possible this grant of ten million dollars to the Polish Agricultural Foundation.

STATEMENT TO THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE BY THE REVEREND JOSEPH F. MYTYCH

I express heartfelt gratitude to the Chairman and Honorable members of this committee for allowing me to present a statement in support of the legislation aiming to provide a grant in support of the Polish Agricultural Foundation.

I am a priest of 45 years of service in the Archdiocese of Chicago, largely in ministry to the Polish and Polish-American community. I too have been involved in the works of the Catholic League for Religious Assistance to Poland, and have had the opportunity of visiting Poland five times in the last seven years.

I come not as an expert witness on matters of agricultural, technical or political content. These I leave to persons with prominent qualifications, many of whom have already made their views known to members of this committee or other pertinent governmental agencies. I would rather direct my remarks to the question—why does the Catholic church in Poland involve itself so deeply in a temporal matter, especially of such ramifications in the social and political order, why does the church feel that it must be involved in this as an indepensable agent, even the one, the only agent with promise that the project will succeed only with its involvement, what essential single element can it offer which would encourage interested and concerned church authorities, civil governments and private humanitarian bodies to offer aid and be assured that such largesse would not be misapplied or be made to work against the very principles of social justice and human rights to which they are committed. The mission of the church is religious and spiritual. But the church nor the people exist in a vacuum. By its nature the church must be concerned with the whole man, his social, economic being as he lives in human society with its abundances and wants, prosperity and need, its successes and frustrations, its comforts and distresses.

Chief among today's needs of the Polish people is food. For countless generations the Polish people have been a people of the soil. They provided for their daily vitals out of their personal labors and of their own bit of land. Even in the darkest days of World War II despite the repressive actions of occupying forces they managed to survive, even overt efforts to starve the nation to death.

Mindful of this need, an idea was conceived in the minds of the Polish Catholic hierarchy to seek aid not just for the temporary relief of a crisis, but for long ranged development of the sources of food so as to be able to tend to the future needs of the steadily increasing population. In a word, the basic concept of Polish agriculture would have to undergo a major restructuring out of which both the human effort and the productiveness of the soil could reach a level of efficiency needed to tend to the needs of a nation which population has increased by a third, at least, since the end of the war.

The church in Poland is very conscious of its singular role in the national life of its people. It senses deeply the people's reliance upon it for the preservation of its basic rights. It is especially mindful of the singular trust the people place in its works, leadership and protection.

In developing the concept of the Agricultural Foundation the church sees itself as the single national entity for the improvement of the people's temporal well-being.

Without entering more deeply into the question, I note the concerns of many agencies in and outside Poland as to the credibility of the effort. There concerns are real. To these agencies they are most justified.

I wish to offer an answer to this. The church in Poland is standing up to offer all of its institution to the extent that its religious mission allows to help lift the Polish people in the hour of need and give them assurance of a better tomorrow.

The credibility of the need is obvious. Agricultural experts tell us that there is great need of basic reconstruction in the whole agricultural community, 75% of which is privately owned and yet is able to produce 87% of the nation's food supply, the whole of which is becoming increasingly short of the total need. Modern methodology is a major part of the answer. The availability of modern agricultural equipment equipment with resources for its proper maintenance will help improve efficiency. The development of food processing will help insure its temporal distribution so as to avoid periods of unnecessary abundance and shortage. A distressed people makes an unfortunate church.

In a totalitarian society there is little or no opportunity for a private effort to insure human need, right and dignity. In Poland's totalitarian society the church enjoys a unique role both of opportunity and responsibility. Thus, in and for the development of this agricultural foundation the church alone offers a measure of credibility. And the church is offering to assume this before all those who are concerned with the sorry plight of the Polish people. It is ready and willing to place all its resources of person and institution to assure the success of this venture and thus fulfill its mission of social justice.

Unique is such societies is the fact that the Polish government is expressing willingness to offer its position to help achieve the goal of a reconstructed agricultural community. In addition to those agricultural experts already active under church auspices in the development of the reconstruction program, the state is ready to offer its own in collaboration. What remains is to reach and conclude an adequate agreement and those steps which will be needed to assure the total and final fullfillment of the conditions of that agreement.

Supporting evidence can already be drawn from the recent experience of handling emergency aid in food and medicines—the church was given a sufficient liberty in administering the gifts from abroad so that the suffering of a crisis was overcome at the earliest possible time.

The concerns of the church are not limited to the church in Poland. Other ecclesiastical bodies outside Poland, including those of other theological conviction, are expressing favorable reaction to appeal for help. While the American bishops have not yet had a full opportunity to study and respond to the appeal, they are expected to do so in the very near future.

Perhaps the most important single element assuring credibility to all concerned is the humanitarian dimension of all participating agents and institutions. It is my belief that the pilot program, as the beginning of a great effort for the betterment of a nation's life and the preservation of its tradition of human rights and dignity, deserves our support.

Therefore, I ask that favorable consideration be given to the passage of this current legislation which will allow the Polish people to move forward to a day when, thankful for the help we have given them in their hour of need, may find theselves in a position of such sufficiency that they in turn can help another people in need.

Thank you very much.

TESTIMONY OF MYRA LENARD, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE POLISH AMERICAN CONGRESS

Mr. Chairman, distinguished members of the Committee:

My name is Myra Lenard, I am the Executive Director of the Polish American Congress. I am testifying on behalf of our President, Mr. Aloysius A. Mazewski, who is unable to be present today. The Polish American Congress is an umbrella organization of approximately 3000 organizations, numbering millions of Americans of Polish descent. Thank you for giving us this oportunity.

The Polish Episcopate proposed Foundation to assist private farmers to expand and modernize their agricultural production, deserves full consideration and support. Despite official decollectivization, private agriculture has been consistently discriminated against in the supply of fertilizers, pesticides, machines, spare parts, tools, fuels and other imputs.

Favoring the socialized sector the government's policy in effect devastated rural area and is directly responsible for its backwardness; never-the-less, Poland's private farming sector accounts for over 70% of the country's agricultural output. Modernized and fully developed it will be able in a comparatively short period of time, to at minimum, significantly increase Poland's self-sufficiency in agricultural production, eliminating or greatly reducing the costly hard currency imports of food, grain, and other agricultural commodities essential to assure sustenance level of food supplies for the polish people. The Church project entails procurement in the western countries of critically needed agricultural machinery, spare parts, fertilizer and other supplies which would be sold to individual farmers, paid for in polish currency. Proceeds will be used to finance development of intrastructures such as: milk processing plants and distribution facilities, water drainage and sewerage systems, repair shops, vegetable and fruit processing plants and many others.

The project's objective is to create a comprehensive modern market oriented agricultural industry to replace the grossly outdated and inefficient system, the legacy of four decades of bureaucratic controls, neglect and discrimination.

It must be noted that it represents a "first" in effort to establish effective cooperation in the specific economic area between the independent sector of the Polish society led by Poland's church and the government. Its successful implementation would set a precedent and stimulate further efforts to expand market economy of other fields.

It is indeed unprecedented that this project is sponsored by Poland's Episcopate. Over the past several years, the Polish Episcopate's charitable foundation was the main recipient and distributor of the multi-million dollar western assistance programs, designed to alleviate critical shortage of food and deficiencies in the Polish diet. Since January 1, 1981, the Polish American Congress Charitable Foundation, has played a significant role in this respect, contributing food, medicine, medical supplies, and clothing for a value of $50 million . . . This effort continues today.

The proposed project aims to replace charitable assistance with a production oriented effort. Further, consistent with the Church's teachings, it aims to restore and enhance people's sense of value, dignity of work and self-reliance by providing the means to engage in a productive and cooperative effort, beneficial, not only to the individual, but to the society at large. The exceptional nature of the Episcopate's initiative dictates its cautious approach. Poland's primate Joseph Cardinal Glemp has appointed several outstanding experts to serve on the Foundation's organizing committee. Their task is to develop the organizational framework of the Foundation.

The pilot project will cost $28 million, is designed to prove the concept's effectiveness. The response of the farmers and other interested parties must be carefully gauged. The practical application of the foundation's structure and mechanism within Poland's current political and economic realities must be tested and the donors must be assured that their money is used properly and efficiently.

Mr. Chairman—The Polish American Congress strongly supports the foundation and urges United States contribution to its initial limited pilot project.

Thank you.

STATEMENT OF EDWARD J. DERWINSKI, COUNSELOR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

I am very pleased to be here today to provide the Administration's views on this bill to authorize a U.S. Government contribution to the Polish Catholic Church plan to aid private farmers in Poland. As you know, the President has announced his support for a U.S. contribution to the pilot phase of this very creative and worthwhile endeavor. The Administration would welcome the authority embodied in this bill. We believe that the Church's program offers an unusual opportunity to help Polish family farmers help themselves, and thereby to strengthen the private agricultural sector in Poland.

Mr. Chairman, I know that you understand very well the conditions in Poland and that you have been following the development of this project with great interest. It might be useful for the record, however, if I could begin by providing some information on Polish agriculture in general and on the background to this program.

BACKGROUND

More than 75% of Polish agricultural land is in private hands. This situation is unique in Eastern Europe. It stands as vivid testimony to the resilience and persistence of Poland's private family farmers, supported by the Church. A Polish Government drive to collectivize agriculture in the early 1950's failed. Since then, the family farms in Poland have shown irrefutably that they are more efficient and productive than those in the state sector. Nonetheless, government pressures toward collectivization continue, and private farmers tend to be last in line to obtain important agricultural inputs, machinery and implements, and other assistance.

The idea of a Church-sponsored program to assist and strengthen Poland's private farmers can be traced back to the late Stefan Cardinal Wyszynski, Primate of Poland for thirty years. Two years ago the Polish Episcopate began to put this idea into more concrete form. Since then, the Church, assisted by Polish and West German agricultural specialists, has been hard to work on the details of the program.

HOW THE PROGRAM WILL FUNCTION

The program is intended to help private farmers become more efficient and more independent by giving them access to agricultural services and supplies not now available in Poland in sufficient quantities, and which Poles lack the hard currency to import from abroad. The program is designed so that it will not—and I emphasize this point—will not substitute for any current Polish Government domestic or foreign spending on agriculture.

The program will be administered within Poland by a private foundation established and controlled by the Polish Church. This foundation will be directed by a board of independent lay persons. The Polish Government will not be represented on any of the foundation's governing bodies.

One or more counterpart private organizations will be set up in the West to accept financial contributions from Western donors. The money collected will be used to purchase equipment and supplies in the West for the projects that the Church has devised. No hard currency will enter Poland through this program—only equipment and supplies.

The equipment and supplies shipped to Poland will be sold by the Church foundation to private farmers for Polish currency, zlotys. The foundation will use the zlotys obtained from these sales to cover its administrative expenses and for social projects in rural areas.

The Church foundation will control the entry of goods into Poland, and all imported goods will remain the property of the foundation until sold. The foundation alone will choose its customers. Foundation representatives, in cooperation with parish priests, will make sure that the equipment and supplies go to the persons intended. Moreover, if at any time the autonomy of the foundation were threatened by governmental interference, the Church could suspend or terminate the program.

State enterprises may obtain some advantages from the program because certain of the projects will unavoidably require state sector participation to a limited extent. There will be adequate safeguards. However, to ensure that the benefits of this program accrue overwhelmingly to the private farmer.

STATUS OF CHURCH/GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATIONS

After extended negotiations between the Polish Government and the church. The Polish Parliament passed a law in April of this year which permits the establishment of autonomous, private foundations for the first time in postwar Poland. This legislation is unique among Warsaw Pact countries. In principle the Government retains certain authority to oversee such foundations, but the Church believes that its foundation will be able to operate satisfactorily under this "umbrella" statute. Negotiations between the Church and Government on implementing regulations specifically to govern the Church-affiliated foundation are nearing conclusion.

TIMING AND COSTS

The Church hopes to establish its foundation and get the program underway this fall. There is to be an initial, pilot project phase lasting until 1986. Pilot projects are planned in the areas of milk handling, tractor tire procurement and repair, rural workshops, food processing, and water supply. The Church estimates the cost of the pilot projects at $28 million. If the pilot projects prove successful, the Church hopes to introduce a larger-scale, five year plan. The size of this expanded program will depend on an evaluation of the pilot projects, as well as, obviously, the willingness of potential donors to support an expansion.

SUPPORT ELSEWHERE FOR THE PROGRAM

The Polish Church has sent several missions to Europe, Canada, and the United States over the past year to explain the program and to encourage contributions from churches, governments, and private foundations. The Episcopate of the Catholic Church in the Federal Republic of Germany, and the West German Government, have been key supporters of the program in Western Europe. In the United States, the National Conference of Catholic Bishops has been active in generating support.

We understand that Catholic churches in the United States, Canada, and West Germany have pledged or will soon pledge specific sums to the pilot phase of the program. Several European governments are expected to make contributions to the pilot program, but no specific amounts have been pledged yet. The European Community is also considering a contribution.

POSSIBLE U.S. GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION

In meetings with Polish Church officials, we in the Administration have made clear that the possibility of a U.S. Government contribution to the pilot phase of their project would depend on a number of factors. These factors include passage of the necessary laws and regulations to ensure sufficient autonomy for the foundation, the development of sound agricultural projects, and the willingness of others to contribute. Based on our examination of the Polish legislation covering the Church-affiliated foundation and our anlaysis of the pilot projects, President Regan announced on August 17 his intention to seek support for a U.S. Government contribution of $10 million to the pilot phase of the program.

The Administration sees the pilot phase as a test, not only of the Polish Government's willingness to let the Church foundation function as it should, but of the foundation's competence and of the efficacy of the projects themselves. A U.S. Government contribution would not be a lump-sum, upfront donation, but rather would be made available in increments. If at any time it appeared that the foundation's autonomy were threatened, our contributions to the program would be stopped.

U.S. GOVERNMENT INTEREST

The U.S. Government has channeled more than $130 million in surplus food to Poland in cooperation with private agencies in the United States and the Catholic Church since martial law was imposed in December 1981. This aid helped the Polish people through an extraordinarily difficult time. The Polish people are still among the best friends America has abroad. The Church plan offers an opportunity to help an important segment of Polish society, the Polish private farmer, directly. It offers a rare opportunity to encourage the traditional, demonstrably more productive, private family farmer in an economy suffering from the excesses of central planning. Strengthening the private agricultural sector in Poland will promote the social diversity that distinguished Poland from the Soviet Union.

Again, Mr. Chairman, we appreciate your long-term personal interest in this issue and the opportunity to present our views here today. Thank you very much.

THE CENTENNIAL OF WEST BLOCTON

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as a Senator from the State of Alabama, I am pleased and proud to congratulate the citizens of the town of West Blocton, AL, on their upcoming centennial celebration.

West Blocton is situated in the middle of Alabama, deep in coal country. In fact, it was coal that was responsible for the town's beginning. The year 1884 saw the opening of Cahaba Coal Mining Co. in the area, and it was not long until industrialist Truman Aldrich named the town "Blocton" after a 1-ton block of coal was removed during mining operations. The post office soon would rename the town Blocton.

Blocton grew rapidly, with the growth of coal operations, and in 1900, the community was officially incorporated as West Blocton. Despite the change in name, the town and its citizens have continuously weathered the ups and downs of the mining industry and of working America.

In 1927, 40 Main Street businesses and 20 homes were destroyed by fire. The town was rebuilt. The next year, the town's leading mining company closed its operations. It would not be long before West Blocton, and all of the country, suffered through the Great Depression. Still, the citizens worked to improve their town.

In the mid-1930's, the town's economy began to recover. The mines were reopened, and the town began to grow, again.

During the last 20 years, the town has moved forward under the leadership of Mayor Frank Ferrire, who is leaving office this year. That time period has seen many streets paved, a modern city hall acquired, and a greatly improved water system, among other community improvements.

The West Blocton centennial celebration will begin September 23. I will be privileged to be there that day to participate in the celebration.

The citizens of West Blocton can take a great deal of pride in the significant and proud history of their town, and, with their continued civic dedication, can look forward to a brighter and more prosperous future.

Thank you, Mr. President.

HEAD START REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the final days of this session draw near, there is one very important piece of unfinished business that we must attend to—passage of the legislation which includes reauthorization of appropriations for the Head Start Program.

The Head Start Program has been of special concern to me throughout my Senate career. As a member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee from 1969 through 1980, I was actively involved in the committee's oversight and legislative activities affecting this program. I was the principal Senate author of the 1978 legislation which extended the authorizations of appropriations for the Head Start Program. In 1981, when the funding of Head Start was jeopardized, I authored the motion adopted by the Senate to instruct the Senate conferees on the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act to include the necessary Head Start authorization levels in that act. As a result of my motion, higher Head Start authorization levels were included in that legislation.

Once again, it appears that Head Start is in jeopardy. I realize that there are efforts ongoing to attempt to resolve the problems that are hindering Senate consideration of a Head Start reauthorization bill. However, the clock is running out. I want to make it very clear that I do not intend to stand by silently and see the Head Start Program authorizations expire.

Reauthorization of appropriations for Head Start is, in my view, a must item for Senate consideration before adjournment. If the majority leader has not committed to bringing up in the next week or so S. 2565, the committee-reported reauthorization bill which is on the Senate Calendar, then another vehicle will have to be used to get this urgent measure before the Senate.

Mr. President, an editorial appeared in the Los Angeles Times on September 18 discussing the failure of this body to act on the Head Start reauthorization. The article discusses some of the new data attesting to the tremendous success and impact of the Head Start Program. Head Start is without question one of the best investments the Federal Government has ever made. The editorial concludes, "Head Start has delivered on its promises. So must the Senate." I couldn't agree more.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from the Los Angeles Times be printed in the RECORD at this point.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 18, 1984]

BOGGED DOWN IN THE SENATE

The federal Headstart program is nearly 20 years old now, tested and proven effective, almost universally approved. But legislation providing reauthorization of the program for a three-year period is in trouble. There is a risk that it will get lost in the election-year rush to adjournment. The bill is too important for too many children to allow that to happen.

Without reauthorization Headstart will expire Oct. 1. With reauthorization, continuation of the program will be assured and with it a strengthened training program, assuring funds to prepare and provide credentials for workers in the program. That task of training is more than the agencies running the program can afford.

The reauthorization bill passed the House overwhelmingly but is bogged down in the Senate as lawmakers study other issues. The time has come for the Senate to approve the legislation without further delay.

Headstart helps those children who need help the most. More than 90% of Headstart families live below the poverty line of $9,862 annual income for a family of four. About two-thirds of the children in these programs are minorities; about 12% are handicapped.

If there ever were doubts about the importance of this sort of preschool education, they were eliminated by the release last week of a 20-year study by the High/Scope Educational Research Foundation in Ypsilanti, Mich. Few programs in all of education are as cost-effective, as socially and economically productive, as preschool education, the Ypsilanti study confirmed.

The researchers compared disadvantaged children who attended preschool with those who did not. They found that those with the additional early schooling had substantially higher high school graduation rates, lower incidence of teen-age pregnancy, markedly less incidence of criminal arrest, and only 18% were on welfare at age 19 compared with 32% of those who did not attend preschool.

Translated into dollars, what today is an investment of $4,000 a child produces net benefits of $28,933 in reduced crime, welfare, special education and other costs, according to this research.

The Ypsilanti study began before Headstart but looked at the same kind of things that Headstart has been doing it. It gives further validity to the importance of the program, recognized by the Reagan Administration in 1981 when it included Headstart among the "safety net" programs not subject to budget cuts. Since then the expenditure has risen from $776 million a year to a projected $1.1 billion next year, an investment with an extraordinary return.

Headstart has delivered on its promises. So must the Senate.

EXCHANGE OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to be able to report to the Senate on the establishment by the Secretary of State of an innovative and useful program designed to enhance the understanding among friendly nations of each others political process. I thank Secretary Shultz for deciding to go forward with this experiment in the face of administrative problems and bureaucratic questions. The program involves the exchange of foreign service officers between the United States and the foreign ministries of friendly nations.

The obstacles to such a program were serious. They included language barriers and anxiety about security. There is, of course, always a question of money to pay the modest but necessary expenses.

Fortunately there were also inducements to going forward. One was the precedent created by the Department of Defense. In spite of similar language and security problems, there has been a frequent and continuing exchange of officers between NATO navies, armies, and air forces. If such exchanges are possible within the Military Establishment, it is hard to believe that they are impossible within the diplomatic establishment.

More importantly, one of our oldest and closest allies was interested in the potential of such an exchange. The Netherlands was willing to try the program as a practical means of extending the commemoration of two centuries of diplomatic relations with the United States.

The problem of money was overcome with the assistance of Charles Z. Wick, Director of the U.S. Information Agency. Mr. Wick properly recognized that there is no way to increase understanding that is better than sharing the experiences of daily life.

Consequently, we now have an historic opportunity to lower a notch in the barriers that separate people with common aspirations and principles from each other. The experiment is now underway.

The Foreign Minister of the Netherlands has designated Peter Le Poole as the first exchange diplomat in American history. He is now in Washington and serving in the Department of State, and at the moment temporarily assigned to the Senate for orientation. I take this opportunity to welcome Peter Le Poole to the United States both personally and as a Member of the Senate. But I am sure that he will understand if I welcome even more enthusiastically the actions of the Secretary of State and the Foreign Minister in advancing the cause of deeper and more comprehensive international understanding.

I look forward to the day when the exchange program, which Peter Le Poole is pioneering, will welcome scores of diplomats to our shores.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

MISCELLANEOUS TARIFF TRADE, AND CUSTOMS MATTERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3398) to change the tariff treatment with respect to certain articles, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 4336

(Purpose: To provide the U.S. Trade Representative with greater authority to negotiate the elimination of export performance requirements, and to provide the authority to impose duties or other import restrictions if such negotiations are not sufficient)

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] proposed an amendment numbered 4336.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

Page 58, strike lines 28 through 34 and on page 59, strike lines 1 and 2, and add the following:

"SEC. 307. NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY WITH RESPECT TO FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT.—

"(a) Paragraph (3) of section 102(g) (19 U.S.C. 2112(g)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) the term 'international trade' includes—

"(A) trade in both goods and services, and

"(B) foreign direct investment by United States persons, especially if such investment has implications for trade in goods and services.

"(b)(1) If the United States Trade Representative, with the advice of the Committee established by section 242 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (19 U.S.C. 1872), determines that action by the United States is appropriate to respond to any export performance requirements of any foreign country or instrumentality that adversely affect the economic interests of the United States, then the United States Trade Representative shall seek to obtain the reduction and elimination of such export performance requirements through consultations and negotiations with the foreign country or instrumentality concerned.

"(2) In addition to the action referred to in section (1), the United States Trade Representative may impose duties or other import restrictions on the products or services of such foreign country or instrumentality for such time as he determines appropriate, including the exclusion from entry into the United States of products subject to such requirements.

"(3) Whenever the international obligations of the United States and actions taken under section 2 make compensation necessary or appropriate, compensation may be provided by the United States Trade Representative subject to the limitations and conditions contained in section 123 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2133) for providing compensation for actions taken under section 203 of that Act."

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this amendment is quite simple. It relates to the growing foreign use of export performance requirements, under which a foreign government can mandate that American companies investing in those countries export back to the United States a certain percentage of goods produced in that country as a result of that investment. For example, Mexico has export performance requirements on automobiles produced by U.S. companies with plants in Mexico. As a result, foreign countries can mandate that cars made abroad must be shipped back to the United States to compete with cars made by American workers.

At the same time that countries such as Mexico, Brazil, and Taiwan have developed large trade surpluses with the United States, they have proceeded to tighten further their export performance requirements. In order to pursue a balanced trade and investment policy with these countries, we need to take further decisive actions against such policies now. Failure to act in order to discourage these export performance requirements will only serve to increase our trade deficit problems and threaten even more American jobs.

Specifically, this amendment states that if the U.S. Trade Representative, with the advice of the trade advisory committees established as part of the Trade Act of 1982, determines that action by the United States is appropriate to respond to export performance requirements that adversely affect the economic interests of the United States, the USTR shall seek to obtain the reduction and elimination of such export performance requirements through negotiations. Most importantly, the USTR would be authorized to impose duties or other import restrictions on these products, including the exclusion from entry into the United States of the products subject to these export performance requirements. Mr. President, this is the type of toughminded trade legislation which we will need if we are to rectify our trade imbalance.

I move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

The amendment (No. 4336) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4337

(Purpose: To require an economic impact report on any import restrictions imposed under title II of the Trade Act of 1974)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 4337.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 41 of the matter proposed to be inserted, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

SEC. . ANALYSIS OF ECONOMIC IMPACT OF IMPORT RESTRICTIONS.

(a) Section 202 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2252) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(1) (A) The Council of Economic Advisers shall prepare an analysis of the economic impact of any increase in, or imposition of, any duty or other import restriction which the Commission recommended in the report submitted under section 201(d).

"(B) The analysis prepared under subparagraph (A) shall include, but is not limited to—

"(i) the effect of the import restrictions on—

"(I) prices,

"(II) pretax revenues, and

"(III) employment, in the industries which are to be protected by the import restrictions,

"(ii) the cost to domestic consumers of the import restrictions,

"(iii) the effect of the import restrictions on output, employment, and profits in all industries other than the industries being protected by the import restrictions, taking into account—

"(I) the effect of the import restrictions on production costs and the international competitive position of such industries, and

"(II) the effect of possible retaliatory trade actions by foreign countries,

"(iv) an estimate of the transfer of income to foreign producers which will occur by reason of the import restrictions,

"(v) the effect of the import restrictions on the current balance-of-payments account of the United States, and

"(vi) the net impact on the economy as a whole of the import restrictions, including the impact on its international competitiveness.

"(C) The chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers shall submit to the President and to the Congress a report within 30 days of the date on which the President receives the report of the International Trade Commission, on the analysis prepared under subparagraph (A).".

(b) Subsection (d) of section 201 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2251(d)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Commission shall submit to the Council of Economic Advisers a copy of the report submitted by the Commission to the President under paragraph (1) at the same time such report is submitted to the President.".

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the amendment that I have sent to the desk would require thorough economic analyses of the impact of the International Trade Commission's recommendations to restrain imports, before the President makes a decision on such recommendations.

Under the amendment, the International Trade Commission is required to submit to the Council of Economic Advisers any reports under section 201 of the 1974 Trade Act relating to import relief. The Council is then required to make an extensive analysis of these recommendations on the industry to be protected, and on the economy at large, and this report is to be submitted to the President and Congress. The analysis is to focus on the net effect of such import restrictions on American jobs, on consumers, and on businesses which use the products of the industry for which protection is recommended. In short, the CEA will analyze the effect of the recommendations on the competitiveness and vitality of the entire American economy.

Currently, there is no such requirement. It is surprising, in fact, that over the years and through a number of major revisions of U.S. trade law, such a requirement has not been imposed because it makes such eminent good sense. It would seem transparently self-evident that the President should have before him the best advice of his expert economic staff before making a judgment on the broad effects of an import restraint decision on the total economy. The ITC currently makes its findings on the basis of studies of the industry claiming relief. The President's obligation, of course, is to bring to bear a higher vision, a broader concern about the national well-being before making his decision. Therefore this amendment requires a thorough analysis of the overall effects of import restraints by the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

In brief, Mr. President, what happens now is when import relief is sought, all that comes to the attention of the public and the President are the terrible things happening to those involved in the petitioning industry; that a certain number of people in that industry are losing their jobs because of imports. But nobody considers—at least not normally—the effect on the American consumer, or the effect on the industries that use the imported product to make other goods which also compete in the world at large.

Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared with both managers of the bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared with the majority. I think that the analysis probably is already furnished by the CEA. But I think this amendment is well-taken, and it is acceptable.

Mr. BENTSEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BENTSEN. The amendment has been examined by the managers for the minority, and we see no objection. We are pleased to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE].

The amendment (No. 4337) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I thank both managers of the bill.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

(c) MODIFICATION OF SCHEDULE B.—The President shall modify schedule B of the Tariff Schedules of the United States to reflect the changes made by this section.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this title shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption on or after the date of the enactment of this title.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this amendment modifies the tariff schedule of the United States for telecommunications products. It does not change tariff rates. The tariff nomenclature contained in this amendment was originally drafted by the ITC. It was introduced on May 1 as title II of S. 2618, the Telecommunications Trade Act. The nomenclature in the original bill has been modified slightly in response to comments presented to the Trade Subcommittee in written and oral testimony.

While further changes in the tariff schedules for the telecommunications products may well be necessary, this amendment represents a major improvement over the outdated nomenclature in use today. The reason for changing the tariff nomenclature for telecommunications products is to facilitate the collection of more accurate data on U.S. trade in this sector.

Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the manager for the minority has examined the amendment, and has no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

The amendment (No. 4338) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, H.R. 3398 maintains the current statute's provisions relating to expropriation. Specifically, section 502(b)(4) requires the President to remove from GSP any country which has failed to act in good faith in resolving a dispute involving the expropriation, and so forth, of property owned by a U.S. citizen.

I believe this is a good provision and I am pleased to see it included in this bill just as it was included in the Caribbean Basin Initiative. As some of my colleagues will remember I planned to offer an amendment to CBI at that time on striking Panama from beneficiary status for the expropriation of American properties. I am pleased to tell my colleagues that through a process of negotiations with our Government and that of the Panamanians this problem was resolved to the satisfaction of all parties involved. Panama acted in good faith in this situation and I want to thank those involved in bringing a problem which existed for 12 years to a successful conclusion.

Today I was made aware of a similar situation where, as a result of the expropriation provision in the GSP statute, Ethiopia was removed from beneficiary country status on March 28, 1980, for its failure to satisfy an expropriation problem. The provision has contributed, I am told, to successful resolution of expropriation problems with other countries.

Mr. President, having said all that, I rise today to offer an amendment which would deny Mexico beneficiary status for its failure to act in good faith in the resolution of a dispute between their Government and Grothair Service, Inc., of Castalia, IA. I submit a copy of the amendment along with a chronology of events which has led up to the Government of Mexico detaining an aircraft owned by Grothair illegally and finally seeing the aircraft destroyed on May 11, 1983. On September 21, 1983, a request was filed for losses sustained.

Mr. DANFORTH. The administration supports the retention of section 502(b)(4) as Senator GRASSLEY described earlier in his statement. This provision has given the President significant leverage in satisfying legitimate expropriation problems. Expropriation problems frequently involve complex factual and legal situations. Thus, it is important that any threats to revoke a country's GSP status pursuant to this provision be made only after the specifics of a given problem have been fully addressed. Since the Senator from Iowa has brought the problem fully to the attention of this body in his statement I would like to ask the Senator to withdraw his amendment on the following basis: assuming Grothair has a legitimate expropriation problem a good faith effort must be made by the Government of Mexico to resolve the conflict. If the conflict is not resolved, the administration must deny beneficiary status or provide the committee a logical reason why agreement cannot be reached and beneficiary status is not denied.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Let me understand what the Senator from Missouri is saying. Is he stating that the provision in this legislation on the matter of expropriation, and so forth, of property owned by a U.S. citizen is rather explicit, and that a review of Mexico's beneficiary status will automatically be carried out in the case of Grothair Service, Inc., or any other similar matters?

Mr. DANFORTH. That is correct.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Then on the basis of the floor manager's assurance that the legislation as enacted already provides language mandating the conditions under which the administration must remove Mexico or any other country which has failed to act in good faith in resolving a dispute involving a dispute over expropriation, and so forth, of property owned by a U.S. citizen, I withdraw my amendment. However, since in the case of Grothair Services, Inc., the aircraft was not returned to its country of origin, expropriation is squarely the issue and contracts and hourly rate approvals approved by the Government of Mexico are in order for satisfaction. I look forward to an early resolution to this problem and thank the floor manager for his assurances.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, based upon the colloquy and the assurances given therein, Senator GRASSLEY has requested that the amendment be withdrawn. Therefore, I request that the amendment be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 4340

(Purpose: To implement the Customs Convention on Containers, 1972)

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I now intend to offer two amendments that are of particular interest to the U.S. Customs Service. Both of these amendments are to the Tariff Act of 1930, have been the subject of hearings, and have been reported favorably by the House Ways and Means Committee. Both passed the full House Tuesday, as part of H.R. 6064.

Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] proposes an amendment numbered 4340.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment (No. 4244) proposed by Mr. DANFORTH.

On page 70 of the matter proposed to be inserted, after line 10, add the following:

SEC. . IMPLEMENTATION OF CUSTOMS CONVENTION ON CONTAINERS, 1972.

(a) Subpart C of part 1 of schedule 8 is amended—

(1) by amending headnote 1 to such subpart by inserting ", accessories and equipment" immediately before the period at the end thereof; and

(2) by amending the article description for item 808.00 by striking out ", and repair components" and all that follows thereafter and inserting in lieu thereof ", repair components for containers of foreign production which are instruments of international traffic, and accessories and equipment for such containers, whether or not the accessories and equipment are imported with a container to be reexported separately or with another container, or imported separately to be reexported with a container.".

(b) Subsection (a) of section 322 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1322(a)) is amended by striking out "granted the customary exceptions" and inserting in lieu thereof "excepted".

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the first amendment would implement the Customs Convention on Containers, 1972, by providing permanent duty-free treatment for repair parts, accessories, and equipment of temporarily admitted containers. The Senate gave its advice and consent to this convention on September 15, 1976.

However, the United States is prevented from being a full participant in the convention until such time as the terms of the Convention are implemented by this amendment to the Tariff Schedules. The amendment is fully supported by the administration.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, if the manager for the bill will defer for just a moment while I have an opportunity to look at it—Mr. President, the manager for the minority has had an opportunity to examine the amendment, and has no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

The amendment (No. 4340) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4341

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] proposes an amendment numbered 4341.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(No. 4244) proposed by Mr. Danforth.

On page 70 of the matter proposed to be inserted, after line 10, add the following:

SEC. . DATE OF LIQUIDATION OR RELIQUIDATION.

"(c) Duties determined to be due on liquidation or reliquidation shall be due 15 days after the date of that liquidation or reliquidation, and unless payment of the duties is received by the appropriate customs officer within 30 days after that date, shall be considered delinquent and bear interest from the date of liquidation or reliquidation at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.".

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect on the 30th day after the date of the enactment of this Act.

"(d) If a determination is made to reliquidate an entry as a result of a protest filed under section 514 of this Act or an application for relief made under subsection (c)(1) of this section, or if reliquidation is ordered by an appropriate court, interest shall be allowed on any amount paid as increased or additional duties under section 505(c) of this Act at the annual rate established pursuant to that section and determined as of the 15th day after the date of liquidation or reliquidation. The interest shall be calculated from the date of payment to the date of (1) the refund, or (2) the filing a summons under section 2632 of title 28, United States Code, whichever occurs first.".

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply with respect to reliquidation determinations made or ordered on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the second amendment would set a date certain that Customs duties determined to be due upon a liquidation or reliquidation are in fact due and payable. It also provides for the assessment of interest on such duties which are not paid within 30 days after the due date.

The amendment would overturn the Heraeus-Amersil case decided by the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals on February 18, 1982. That decision, which overturned a longstanding Customs regulation regarding the due date for increased duties assessed, determined that such duties are not due and payable by the importer for a minimum of 90 days, or if an administrative proceeding was brought, up to 3 months after the administrative determination that such duties are due.

The effect of the proposed amendment would be to allow Customs to resume taking immediate steps to collect moneys determined to be due and payable to the United States. The House determined that the order of magnitude of savings to the Federal Government by passage of this amendment would be in the range of $25 to $50 million.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I understand the objective of the amendment. I must state, though, at this time that I have some concern about Customs, what they have done, the fact that the budgets they send down to us seem to have very little relationship to some of the concerns and problems that we have along the Mexican border, the servicing of those stations, the promotion of trade across that border, and making it more accessible.

I am also concerned about the fact that we have not had any hearings—I do not believe—on this in the Senate. I state that principally for the benefit of the Customs Service. I am going to accept the manager's amendment because of my great respect for him, and the work that he has done in this regard. But my reason for accepting it is not because I am very comforted by what the Customs Agency has done in trying to respond to the inquiries of the Finance Committee. Having so stated that, and having it off my chest, the manager for the minority accepts the amendment.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I want to state my understanding of the comments of the Senator from Texas. He has made similar comments in the Finance Committee. I am in accord with his observations, but I do think that this amendment is significant and clears up a procedural problem which exists for the Customs Service. Therefore, I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4341) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

AMENDMENT NO. 4342

(Purpose: To provide congressional notice of certain reductions in force and reorganizations in the Customs Service during fiscal year 1985)

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] proposes an amendment numbered 4342.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 41 of the matter proposed to be inserted, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

SEC. . NOTIFICATION OF CERTAIN ACTIONS BY THE UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) The Commissioner of Customs shall notify the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives at least 180 days prior to taking any action which would—

(1) result in a significant reduction in force of employees other than by means of attrition,

(2) eliminate or relocate any office of the United States Customs Service,

(3) eliminate any port of entry, or

(4) significantly reduce the number of employees assigned to any office of the United States Customs Service or any port of entry.

(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply after September 30, 1985.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering would tighten our rein on the Customs Service, by requiring that Customs notify the appropriate congressional committees before it closes Customs stations, reassigns Customs officers, or otherwise reorganizes Customs operations. After the haphazard reorganization schemes Customs has hatched over the past few years, we need such notice so that we can keep Customs under control.

The Customs Service performs many important trade-related functions.

These functions are especially important in Montana, which has a 300-mile border with Canada, our major trading partner.

Customs operates 21 border stations in Montana, which process all kinds of imports, including ore concentrates, roofing materials, fertilizer, farm machinery, and oil field equipment. Many of these imports are critical to Montana's economy.

As a result, we are very concerned about the organization and operation of the Customs Service.

Over the past few years, Customs has shifted resources from import processing to drug interdiction. To accomplish this, it has tried to reorganize some of its import-processing operations.

For example, last year Customs undertook a so-called centralized appraisement plan that supposedly would have increased efficiency.

But it backfired. For Montana, centralized appraisement meant that two import specialists were moved from a city of 80,000 served by five commercial airlines and a bus system, to a city of 600 served by no commercial transportation whatsoever. What is more, the import specialists were moved to an entirely different customs district located hundreds of miles away from the District Director who ostensibly supervises them.

This confusing shift was not isolated. A GAO report found that:

"Customs officials * * * have not prepared an official cost/benefit study for the proposed centralization," that "Customs has not prepared an official estimate of savings," that "the total cost of Government will be unknown until a cost/benefit study is prepared," that "[T]he impact of centralized appraisement activities is unknown," and that Customs "did not conduct an analysis regarding the impact of removing import specialists from a given location."

Given these problems, we must keep a tight rein on Customs, to prevent more haphazard reorganizations.

That is why I am offering this amendment. It is similar to an amendment the Finance Committee adopted last year, and it is virtually identical to an amendment that the Finance Committe included in the Customs Service authorization bill, H.R. 5188, which is pending on the calendar.

Simply put, my amendment would require the Customs Service to notify the Finance and Ways and Means Committees 180 days before it undertakes any significant reorganization.

That way, it will not prevent reorganizations; it simply will give us a chance to review them. I should add that, as was stated in the Finance Committee's report on H.R. 5188, the designation of an airport customs station as a user fee station, as under the amendment Senator HUMPHREY offered yesterday (No. 4278) should be considered a reorganization that triggers the notice provisions of the present amendment.

I believe that this amendment makes good sense and is noncontroversial. It will help Congress discharge its oversight responsibilities, and will help Senators from border States assure that reorganization do not disrupt Customs operation in their States.

Mr. President, I understand this amendment has been cleared on both sides. I move its adoption.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this amendment is agreeable to the majority.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the Senator has put into legislative form a cure for some of the frustrations we have experienced in the past with regard to the Customs Service. I am delighted to agree to the amendment and I ask to be made a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I appreciate that. The Senator is now a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4342) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

AMENDMENT NO. 4343

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS], for himself and Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 4343.

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following new section:

SEC. . PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS.

" Photograph albums (provided for in item 256.60, part 4C, schedule 2).	31% ad val.	5% ad val.	On or before 12/31/85"

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, my amendment is intended to provide temporary relief for the photo album industry from imports from Korea and Hong Kong that are apparently being sold at less than cost in the United States. A dumping petition is being prepared by the industry and will soon be filed with the ITC and the Department of Commerce. In the interim it is my hope that raising the tariff from 4 to 35 percent will alleviate the problem of unfair competition.

Mr. President, Canada has already taken action against such dumping. In the late 1960's, Canada imposed a 35 percent antidumping duty on photo albums. Despite this high tariff, Canada has found sufficient evidence of current dumping to warrant opening another dumping investigation.

In response to this investigation, the Korean Government has informed its photo album manufacturers that the Korean Government will impose production controls on albums being exported to Canada.

In the absence of equivalent protection for U.S. manufacturers, this will further aggrevate a situation which is already a very severe threat to the health of the U.S. photo album industry.

Mr. President, in sum, this is an attempt to provide interim relief in terms of the onslaught of the photograph album business from Korea and Hong Kong, which parallels what has been done in Canada, until such time as an antidumping suit can be filed. I understand that both sides have accepted the amendment.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the amendment is agreeable to this side.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the manager of the minority has examined the amendment and has no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4343) was agreed to.

Mr. PERCY. I have some questions I would like to ask Senator DANFORTH regarding section 211(a) of H.R. 3398 which would exempt bicycle parts which are not reexported from the exemption from the customs laws otherwise available to merchandise in foreign-trade zones. That provision would sunset on June 30, 1986. As you know, I introduced S. 1977 which is identical to section 211(a). Unfortunately my bill was not included in the Senate version of the miscellaneous tariff bill which we will be voting upon shortly.

This issue has arisen as a result of the Huffy Corp. applying for a foreign-trade subzone for its Celina, OH, plant. If the application is granted, Huffy will be able unilaterally to reduce, by at least 50 percent, the tariff it pays on imported bicycle parts without the approval of Congress and in derogation of the tariffs established by Congress and our multilateral trade negotiators. This type of tariff avoidance is particularly inappropriate where Congress has already exempted from any import duty all bicycle component parts which are not manufactured domestically—fully 42 percent of the dollar volume of imported parts. A Huffy subzone would undermine the hard fought efforts and conclusions of the U.S. multilateral trade negotiations on bicycle parts and upset the delicate balance between tariffs on bicycle parts and bicycles which Congress has enforced through five duty suspension bills over the last 13 years.

The relative import sensitivity of the two industries is clear: 67 percent of the bicycle parts sold in the United States are imports; 25 percent of the bicycles sold in the United States are imports. If the Huffy subzone application is approved without passage of S. 1977 or section 211(a) of H.R. 3398, Huffy will be allowed to upset the tariff schedule balance, resulting in more bicycle parts for American assembled bicycles being manufactured in Taiwan, Korea, Japan, India, and China. The carefully formulated tariff schedules would be avoided, and so would the intent of Congress regarding those schedules as manifested in the duty suspension bills. It is important to note that Huffy is the only bicycle company opposing this legislation, while eight bicycle manufacturers and 12 U.S. parts manufacturers have gone on record in opposition to Huffy's application. The other bicycle manufacturers do not want to see the domestic parts industry undermined by this back door approach to tariff avoidance.

Subzones have never been authorized by Congress, which contemplated that a foreign-trade zone would include a large enough area to meet the purpose of the act. Instead, they have come about by regulations which allow an individual industrial plant to receive the benefits of a foreign-trade zone by virtue of making one plant a subzone. If allowed to continue, ultimately we may see every plant in the United States seeking subzone status in order to reduce tariffs. The legislative intent behind the Foreign-Trade Zones Act was to expedite and encourage foreign trade, thereby stimulating the U.S. economy and domestic employment. However, as applied to the bicycle parts industry, the Huffy subzone would be counterproductive. It would result in the destruction of the bicycle parts industry, the loss of jobs, loss of tariff revenue, and increase our foreign trade deficit.

The abusive use of foreign trade subzones for tariff avoidance had recently become a great concern to Congress. Currently, the General Accounting Office and the International Trade Commission are conducting studies of foreign-trade subzones and will report to the Congress next year prior to oversight hearings which the Ways and Means Committee intends to conduct in order to review possible abuses of the zone's privilege and loss of tariff revenues. This legislation will preserve the highly import-sensitive bicycle parts industry by maintaining the status quo on tariffs, by preventing the subversion of the intent of Congress with regard to the purpose of the Foreign-Trade Zones Act, and by preventing an upset of the delicate balance which Congress has enforced regarding tariffs on bicycle parts and bicycles. It will prevent an abuse of the foreign-trade zones process by stopping an openly calculated attempt to avoid the tariff on bicycle parts while Congress determines whether foreign-trade subzones should be allowed, and if so, what guidelines should be established for import-sensitive industries and congressional mandated tariffs.

I would like to know whether Senator DANFORTH shares my concerns and, if so, whether the Finance Committee and the International Trade Subcommittee have any plans to study these issues.

Mr. DANFORTH. I would like to assure Senator PERCY that I share his concern about the import sensitivity of the bicycle parts industry and the tariff evasion which could result from granting of a subzone to the Huffy Corp. As you know, this issue has highlighted the overall subzone problem, and the Ways and Means Committee has requested that the International Trade Commission and the General Accounting Office investigate foreign trade zones and subzones. We look forward to receiving the results of those investigations and plan to hold hearings in the International Trade Subcommittee on the overall issue. This may lead to generic legislation in this area. At a minimum, there is a need to determine whether subzones should be allowed at all, and, if so, what criteria should be enacted into law with respect to the impact on import-sensitive industries and inverted tariffs. Likewise, it is my belief that the Foreign-Trade Zones Board should not act on a highly disputed subzone application such as the Huffy Corp. application involving bicycle parts until the Congress has completed its work on generic legislation in this area.

Mr. PERCY. I am concerned about the possibility of a foreign-trade subzone being granted to Huffy prior to generic legislation being enacted, which is the reason for my introduction of S. 1977. What does the Senator anticipate happening in conference with respect to section 211(a) of H.R. 3398?

Mr. DANFORTH. While the Senate miscellaneous tariff bill does not contain a provision involving the importation of bicycle parts, the House bill does. Therefore, the provision will be an issue in the conference. While I cannot speak for all Senate conferees, I fully expect that the conference will agree upon some provision similar to S. 1977 and section 211(a) of H.R. 3398 which will allow sufficient time for us to review the findings of the ITC and GAO investigations and conduct hearings, as well as a reasonable period of time to enact generic legislation, before any further action by the Foreign Trade Zones Board on a highly disputed application such as that of the Huffy Corp.

Mr. PERCY. Then the failure of the Finance Committee to include this provision in the Senate bill does not imply any consent to or approval of action on the Huffy application for a foreign trade subzone?

Mr. DANFORTH. The Finance Committee action does not imply any such consent or approval of Board action. We found that it was not necessary to include that provision in the Senate bill since it was already included in the House bill and would be a subject for conference.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I have a question for my distinguished colleague from Missouri. As you know, I am very concerned about the impact of any United States-Israel free trade arrangement on import-sensitive industries in the United States, especially textile, apparel, leather goods and footwear. When the bill to establish a free trade zone with the country of Israel was first considered by the Finance Committee, I contacted the committee chairman, Senator DOLE, to express my concerns in this area. He responded in a letter to me, and I would like to quote a paragraph from his response. Senator DOLE said:

> As the bill approved by the committee simply approves negotiating authority, and not any specific agreement, the Congress will have opportunity to review the product of the negotiations before any agreement is put into effect. At that time, Members will have an opportunity to ensure that concerns such as yours have been taken into account in the agreement.

I would like to ask my colleague if he could give the Senate further assurance that there will be such an opportunity for the Senate to approve any actual agreement establishing a free trade zone with Israel.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, Congress will have to vote on any agreement establishing a United States-Israel free trade arrangement. At that time, Members will have the opportunity to review the agreement to ensure that the measure does not cause any serious problems for whatever areas of concern they might have.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I would also like to ask my friend from Missouri if it would be possible to ask the General Accounting Office to assess the job impact of any such free trade arrangement with Israel. I understand the Government has not made any analysis of how U.S. jobs will be affected. I believe various domestic industries have testified at committee hearings and have indicated that they anticipate some 75,000 jobs will be lost because of this arrangement. They also estimate that most of those jobs, two-thirds of them, in fact, will be in the import-sensitive industries such as textiles, apparel, leather goods, and footwear. Would it be possible to have such a study done?

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I do not see any reason why we could not move forward with a request to the GAO that such a study be undertaken. I, too, am concerned about the impact on domestic jobs.

Mr. President, my hope is that we are winding down right now. There is one other amendment that I know of.

Mr. President, while we have a moment before we conclude work on this bill, I would like to say that passage of this bill has been the culmination of a couple years of very hard and dedicated work by a number of people. I would like to pay special tribute to my friend and colleague from Texas, Senator BENTSEN, who has really been magnificent in working on this bill, both in committee and on the floor; also, to the staff of the Trade Subcommittee, particularly Len Santos, Ted Kassinger, Jeff Lang, of the minority staff, and, of course, Susan Schwab, of my staff, who has been invaluable in this effort.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the kind of comments of my colleague from Missouri. I must say that with the dedication he has shown in this effort we have been able to resolve an incredible number of differences amongst the Members and I think have made a very positive and constructive piece of legislation that is going to be of great assistance in establishing a better and a more even trading ground for our companies. I have enjoyed very much working with him and I appreciate it.

I want to particularly compliment Jeff Lang, of the committee staff, on his great depth of knowledge in this area and his unceasing efforts to try to bring about a good and effective piece of legislation.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

AMENDMENT NO. 4344

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that the President should initiate a new round of multinational trade negotiations)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH], for himself, Mr. SYMMS and Mr. CHAFEE proposes an amendment numbered 4344.

Mr. ROTH. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 41 of the matter proposed to be inserted between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

SEC. . MULTINATIONAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the President should take action to initiate a new round of multinational trade negotiations in order to strengthen the trading system under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Such negotiations should include discussion of—

(1) trade in services,

(2) high technology trade,

(3) agricultural trade,

(4) protection of intellectual property rights,

(5) trade-related investment problems,

(6) targeting and other issues arising from widespread government ownership of industry in foreign countries, and

(7) institutional reforms—

(A) to strengthen the operation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and

(B) to bring the less developed countries more fully into the trading system.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am introducing an amendment that would call upon the executive branch to begin preparations for a new round of multilatral trade negotiations. I am proposing this as a sense of the Senate resolution, as I believe it is important we give this signal to the executive branch. Today ostensibly U.S. trade interests are fostered by the GATT, the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade, which is the foundation of today's trading system. GATT membership has grown from 25 countries in 1947 to 88 countries, accounting for four-fifths of world trade today. The trouble is that, as we all know only too well, these impressive gains in membership hardly reflect the growing importance of international discipline to the real trade situation.

The erosion of the trading system has a number of facets. Today many trading countries receive special treatment under the GATT. Growing areas of trade such as services are not covered by the agreement, and new barriers to trade are proliferating in traditionally important trade sectors. The relevance of GATT rules, which are based on a presumption that free markets operate in trading countries, is once more open to question. As Bob Hormats pointed out in an article in today's Wall Street Journal:

Therefore, rather than debating or competing for favor on specific trade issues, the candidates ought to focus on improving the world trading system.

That system today—embodied in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)—inspires little confidence and less respect. It is overly legalistic. Its rules do not adequately address key trade problems such as agriculture, investment-related distortions and government support for key sectors and services. It is frequently bypassed or ignored as countries unilaterally, bilaterally or in small groups take actions that violate its spirit and substance.

And dispute-resolution procedures are often slow and cumbersome; grievances take a long time to be resolved if they can be resolved at all. Producers of wheat flour, poultry, citrus, shoes and various other items, here and abroad, have suffered the frustration of long delays in the resolution of differences.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Hormats article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 19, 1984]

TRADE ADJUSTMENTS THAT ALL COULD SUPPORT

(By Robert D. Hormats)

Yesterday's action on steel quotas suggests that trade is likely to become a major campaign issue. It will be a negative issue if it tests which candidate can outbid the other for votes in electorally significant economic sectors. It will be a positive one if the candidates commit themselves to support an international negotiation to improve the effectiveness and credibility of the world trading system.

President Reagan and former Vice President Mondale will both face strong pressures from important constituencies to support imposition of import restrictions. This type of pressure, to be sure, has occurred in past elections. But this year, two factors make it more probable; the super-high dollar and the poor condition of the world trading system.

The high exchange rate of the dollar has put American producers at a more than 25% disadvantage vis a vis their competitors abroad.

But, as much has been said about the dollar already by many of us, it is my purpose here to underscore the second and broader of these two factors. In recent years there has been a major deterioration in the world trading system. Its current weakness has eliminated an important constraint on nationalistic trade actions in virtually every country.

Administration trade officials have tried to generate international support for a new multilateral negotiation. But some U.S. trading partners have been less enthusiastic. And no consensus exists between the U.S. and others as to precisely what would be negotiated if there were a negotiation. The resulting impasse in improving the trading system has enabled domestic interests here and abroad to claim, in some cases understandably, that the only answer to their problems is protection.

In this environment, both candidates will be pressed hard to support sectors that are harmed by imports or perceive themselves to be. And while protection for some may well be appropriate and called for under U.S. law, legislation requires that such decisions be made on the merits—not because candidates for office find actions or commitments to protect certain sectors advantageous for electoral purposes.

Therefore, rather then debating or competing for favor on specific trade issues the candidates ought to focus on improving the world trading system.

That system today—embodied in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)—inspires little confidence and less respect. It is overly legalistic. Its rules do not adequately address key trade problems such as agriculture, investment-related distortions and government support for key sectors and services. It is frequently bypassed or ignored as countries unilaterally, bilaterally or in small groups take actions that violate its spirit and substance.

And dispute-resolution procedures are often slow and cumbersome; grievances take a long time to be resolved if they can be resolved at all. Producers of wheat flour, poultry, citrus, shoes and various other items, here and abroad, have suffered the frustration of long delays in the resolution of differences.]

Over time, free trade has become more of a myth than a reality. Governments in many countries cannot easily claim that GATT rules prohibit them from taking steps to protect or subsidize domestic interests when their constituents see violations of those rules by other nations and cannot obtain an expeditious hearing when they have grievances.

But the GATT itself should not bear all, or even the largest part, of the blame. It is merely a mirror that reflects the policies and objectives of member governments. In recent years, most nations, including our own, have sought to stretch, avoid or unilaterally interpret GATT rules in order to maximize their flexibility to respond to domestic constituencies. And they have failed collectively to come to grips with the need to modernize its rules and procedures. Some have convinced themselves that bilateral solutions are an adequate substitute for multilateral ones.

In their efforts to maintain latitude enough to impose subsidies or other protective measures, however, they have weakened the system's ability, and their own, to encourage restraint and its capacity to restore fair and open trade. They have thus done considerable harm to their own long-term interests.

There is little doubt that a balanced reduction in international trade barriers and subsidies—in which the U.S. and all other major trading countries participate—is needed. Today, however, in the absence of a consensus in this country or internationally on precisely what to negotiate or what sort of reductions can successfully be achieved, it is hard to imagine that a trade-liberalizing negotiation begun in the near future would have much chance of success.

Thus the immediate need—before there can be negotiations leading to a reduction in trade barriers—is to make the system work better.

The last major trade negotiation—the Tokyo Round—was engineered in part by George Shultz and completed by U.S. trade representative Bob Strauss together with Mr. Strauss' counterparts abroad. Its success was based on, and underlined, the bipartisanship that has traditionally characterized U.S. trade policy. That same bipartisan approach is needed during this preelection period both to prevent the trade issue from becoming a political football in a game that no one can win and to ensure that whoever is elected has a mandate to constuctively address the subject.

The candidates, early in the campaign, should endorse an international trade negotiation to incorporate into the GATT simple arrangements to limit trade distortions while avoiding the complex legalities and delays that characterize the current system. New procedures are in order:

Before imposing new trade subsidies or restrictions, or taking other actions that would materially affect trade, governments would be required to notify a GATT, or GATT-affiliated, consultative and monitoring committee that would be continuously in session. The country would be required to justify the proposed measure; work out with other affected countries ways of avoiding or offsetting any injury to them; indicate the planned duration of the measure; provide a schedule for phasing it down and out, and submit a credible (and internationally monitorable) program to improve the competitiveness of the relevant domestic industry while the measure is in place.

In the seven weeks between now and the elections, U.S. interests would be well served were the candidates to campaign on such a platform. Whoever is inaugurated on Jan. 20 would then have a strong and positive mandate to begin the difficult but necessary task of restoring credibility to the world trading system.

Mr. ROTH. I might say, Mr. President, that that is just a few of the areas that need investigation. I think many of us are concerned, for example, by the unfair and inequitable treatment on taxes. But in any event, I believe it is time for this country to make a strong commitment to turning the trade system, the GATT, into a viable and relevant institution for reasons as they exist today. It seems obvious to this Senator that the world economies are interdependent and that none of us will thrive except within the context of an effective and cooperative trade system.

I believe we must assert the political will and leadership that is needed to ensure the survival and strength of our multilateral trading system. The United States must insist on no less of a commitment by our trading nations.

I have taken a good hard look at these issues in hearings I have chaired in the Joint Economic Committee on "how to save an international trading system." I have heard the advice of a broad spectrum of trade experts from both sides of the political aisle—Ambassador Brock, Bob Strauss, Clayton Yeutter, and Fred Bergsten, to mention a few. There was universal agreement that we should move ahead with trade negotiations to make the GATT an institution that can truly support both equitable and expanding trade.

Fifty years ago this year, the United States committed itself to the trading system, with the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements of 1934. I believe that today Congress should recommit this country to the development of effective multilateral trading relations.

This amendment specifically expresses support for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations to stengthen the trading system under the GATT and suggests that the following issues be proposed for inclusion in such negotiations, namely, trade in services, high technology trade, agriculture trade, counterfeiting and protection of intellectual property rights, trade-related investment problems. Targeting and other issues arising from widespread Government ownership of industry in other countries, better rules for safeguard action, institutional reforms to strengthen the operation of the GATT, and ways to bring the less developed countries more fully into the trading system.

We cannot afford to ignore the erosion of the International Trading System. These changes in the conditions of trade create real problems for American traders. They also give rise to protectionist policies. Protectionist responses to the frustration of today's trading conditions are understandable, but they are misdirected.

Let us respond instead in a constructive way, in a way in which we can support both our trade interests—to make trade equitable and to help it expand and create jobs.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I would like to make a few comments about the resolution that I am cosponsoring with Senator ROTH, calling for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations.

Last spring, Senator ROTH and I, as well as number of our colleagues in the Senate, joined in an effort to encourage the President to obtain an agreement from our trading partners at the London Economic Summit to begin a new round of negotiations to address the most pressing trade issues confronting all of our nations.

The resolution being introduced here today will further enhance the President's message that was given at the summit, and it sends a signal to our trading partners that we are willing to confront our trade problems by utilizing the GATT framework to solve our trade problems.

We should recognize that international trade is, and will continue to be, a vital component of our economy. A prosperous, well-functioning trading system has made and will continue to make an important contribution to the success of our economy, and it is a cornerstone of America's national security program.

Trade is an increasingly powerful source of innovation and growth for all economies. Everyone gains from the access to the world's markets and the spur of international competition. Trade clearly reinforces everyone's efforts to reduce inflation, to increase production and to expand employment.

In addition, and very importantly, trade can contribute to mutually beneficial cooperation among nations. Healthy trade relations can strengthen friendships and alliances, and can help integrate countries into the market-oriented trading system which has served us all so well.

The current trade policy of the United States has its roots in historical experience. Following World War II, the major industrial nations recognized that the bilateral agreements and protectionist policies pursued by many nations during the interwar period had done severe harm to their economies, played havoc with the international economy, and contributed to the frictions and tensions which ultimately led to the outbreak of the war. The United States and its partners therefore set out to create a new trading system based on fair trading rules, on nondiscrimination among trading partners, and on the commitment to reduce trade barriers.

That system is embodied in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT]. Despite its imperfections and departures from certain of its principles, this system has brought enormous benefits to virtually every nation in the world and has served American interests as well. The dramatic growth in trade since the war has strengthened our own economy and that of our trading partners. U.S. exports grew from $10.8 billion in 1950 to $221 billion in 1980. This has meant millions of jobs for everyone concerned. And, while we are currently facing some problems with the system, we would be considerably worse off if we had chosen a trading system based on more restrictive principles and rules. Such a system might well have brought prolonged economic weakness to our trading partners, and poorer markets for everybody's exports.

Today, there are strains in the system. Competition among developed countries and with developing nations is more intense than it was years ago. And slower growth in many developed nations increases the difficulty of adjusting to rapid increases in imports.

In the face of keener competition, many countries face enormous pressures to protect individual special interests by restricting imports or supporting noncompetitive exports. They are tempted to work out bilateral trade arrangements which protect certain patterns of trade or limit trade. Investment practices are increasingly used as a means of forcing increased procurement or increased exports. Barriers exist in services, where the United States is very competitive. Certain countries that benefit greatly from the trading system seem to have failed to open their markets adequately, even while taking advantage of open markets in other countries.

We must continue to attempt to solve these problems and distortions with our trading partners. However, simply putting a fence around our own economy will not further the cause of greater international cooperation among our trading partners, nor will it be economically advantageous to us.

I am committed to the support of an open trading system on the basis of agreed upon rules. At the same time, I would expect similar undertakings from other countries. Open trade on the basis of mutually agreed upon rules is in our best economic interests, and is consistent with both of our commitments to strengthen our economies.

Consequently, I believe the most important challenge the United States faces today is making sure that trade is a two-way street. Increased equity and reciprocal market access and opportunities for U.S. exporters and investors is my goal. The United States cannot make a contribution to the goal of free trade by ignoring attacks upon it by others or by not pursuing increased market access for our goods, services, and investment. Clearly, no nation can long sustain public support of any policy unless its people sense that there are equity and tangible benefits for them in the application of that policy.

U.S. adherence to a free trade policy requires that it strictly enforce existing trade agreements and seek expanded coverage of trade issues under the mutually accepted international framework of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT].

The United States cannot afford to lapse into a "fortress" mentality by pursuing a "protectionist" course because such a policy directive connotes economic isolationism which is short-term in scope and short-sighted in application. Protectionism does not create a net economic gain for our country; rather it simply shifts economic burdens by protecting one sector of the economy while endangering another. Within a global perspective, it is a net economic loss because over the long term a protectionist policy exacerbates global and domestic economic problems.

Frustration with the GATT's seeming inability to deal with new forms of barriers and trade distortions is no justification for U.S. abandonment of our commitment to free trade, and certainly no justification for us to take similar negative unilateral actions. On the contrary, it is clearly our best reason for renewed efforts to strengthen the international code of conduct and make it work.

We must work within the framework of our international obligations. The whole reason for the existence of the GATT lies in the desire to eliminate the trade destructive retaliatory practices of the two decades preceding World War II. It has worked, if the expansion of world trade over the past 35 years is any indication.

I would encourage my colleagues to join Senator ROTH and me in supporting this resolution, particularly since this body has not established a record over this past week which would lead any objective observer to believe that we might realize the benefits of a competitive international trading system. The Senate has continually "caved in" to the special interests of various groups that are represented here in Washington during the consideration of the miscellaneous tariff bill. What this body has not recognized is that by acquiescing to the special interests of the minority, we are sacrificing the interests of the majority.

We are working against our own self-interests by passing legislation which essentially erects trade barriers, and which does not try to solve our trade problems within the multilateral framework. We penalize our own consumers; we limit our ability to export; we insulate our own producers from the benefits of international competition; and we will eventually create an economic environment in this country which will produce fewer jobs and opportunities for our own citizens.

Adoption of this resolution will send a strong signal to our trading partners indicating our continued interest and willingness to work through our trade differences within the framework of multilateral negotiations, rather than by enacting piecemeal protectionist measures which, in my opinion, will not further any of our interests.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am not going to call for a vote on this amendment. I just want to indicate on the Senate floor the importance that I attach to a new round of negotiations, to the importance of the executive branch beginning preparations so that, within a reasonable time, we can begin negotiations on a multilateral basis that will update and modernize the GATT rules.

Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Delaware. I am sure that we will want to consider his suggestion next year.

In the opinion of the Senator from Louisiana, before we have any more trade negotiations, we should do some things to arm this country for trade negotiations.

For example, with regard to manufactured commodities, when this Nation has its manufacturers ship them abroad, those commodities bear the full cost of Federal excise and State and local taxes. Practically none of those taxes are rebated, although there is a proposal for an FSC—which would replace the DISC—which would help somewhat on the income tax side, to try to give some small adjustment to help offset the advantages other nations have when they rebate their value-added tax and other taxes impacting on consumption when their product is shipped in this direction.

Mr. President, most of our trading partners raise most of their revenue with a value added tax or other taxes that impact on consumption. When their product is exported, they rebate the tax, and it enters this market unburdened by those taxes. Compared to our system, that is a very substantial advantage.

In America, we have a Social Security tax. It is passed through in the cost of the product to the consumer, just as any cost of doing business is passed through to the consumer in the cost of the product. But this Social Security tax is not rebated on our exports, even though it has about the same impact on the consumer that a value-added tax would, since it must be passed through in the cost of the product.

We have State sales taxes, local taxes, and income taxes, most of which are passed through to the consumer in prices, with practically no adjustments, while foreign countries have a value-added tax of as much as 20 percent that is rebated when they export to us, but is charged as a border tax on our exports when those products enter the foreign market.

That situation results in an unlevel playing field.

The difference in the way they handle their taxes compared with the way we handle ours is as though the playing field were tilted 30 degrees in favor of the other side.

There is nothing in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that would keep us from changing our tax system and giving a rebate as the others do, by conforming to the practice the other countries use. If we had already done that, we would be in a much better position to negotiate, because we would not be starting out from the bottom of a slanted playing field.

The second problem has to do with disparities in the valuation of currencies. There was a time when the United States would peg the value of the dollar at $35 to 1 ounce of gold. Over a period of time, we found that other nations were devaluing their currency below ours and obtaining substantial advantage over us in world commerce, and we found it necessary to permit the dollar to float.

Other nations have pegged their currency below ours, and I am not saying that this situation is all manufactured. We are told that this results from a difference in our interest rates, and undoubtedly it may have something to do with the fact that foreign money feels more secure in the United States. There are many foreigners who feel that the Communists might take over the country in which they live or that the Soviet Union might invade, and therefore they would like to have their money invested here, in a safe haven.

One thing we know for sure is that the American manufacturer and the American laborer are powerless to do anything about that. If the foreign currency is valued at 20 percent below ours, or even more in the case of the yen, such as 25 percent, it would be just as though they were in a position to sell in the market at a 25-percent discount. Even after you allow for the cost of their shipping their product into the United States, by the time you add in the advantage they enjoy because of their tax system and the other factors I have been talking about, that would give them about a 30 percent tilt in that playing field.

We do not necessarily have the best football team in Louisiana. We have a reasonably good one, I think, as college football teams go. We are not depending on beating all the other teams in America this year. But if we could play the game where the tilt was 30 degrees in our favor, we should be able to beat any football team in the United States. Any football team with a 30-degree advantage, where they were marching down a 30-degree slope and the other team is trying to move the ball up a 30-degree slope, would win any day in the week.

You cannot compete against those kinds of disadvantages. It is a shame that nothing has been done to offset this disparity.

We should act in this case effectively. Precisely how to act, others can say better than I. But one suggestion would be simply to say that we would have a council which would study the exchange rates of currencies and undertake to set up a fee where the other currency is priced below ours. It actually could be a fee on imports and a subsidy on exports in order to equalize the situation. If we had such a provision in our law, our people would be in a position to compete evenly. No doubt about it—if we try to negotiate away the kinds of differences from which we suffer, which account for a $140 billion unfavorable balance of trade this year, the other countries will not cooperate. Our deficit is their profit.

If we acted unilaterally, as I think we should, and simply said that we could not stand these enormous deficits on and on into the future—it is costing us 3½ million jobs a year, at a minimum, and is wrecking our balance of payments, making us an international borrower, when the United States should be an international lender—in my judgment, this Nation could get its affairs in order; and we could tell the world that we want to trade evenly, that we want to sell about the same amount we buy.

We are not trying to get rich at the expense of the other nations, but we do not want them to get rich at our expense. We do not want them to bankrupt the United States by using advantages that our manufacturers are powerless to defend themselves against.

If we acted unilaterally and said, "we are ready to negotiate with anybody, but we are not going to do business on the basis that we have done it in the past, where our tax system puts our manufacturers at a disastrous disadvantage, and the exchange rate in currencies fixes it so that Americans cannot compete in the world market," then all these plants on their way overseas would stop moving overseas.

We would be able to hold our position in the world, and then I think, Mr. President, we would be in a good position to start negotiating, but I am reluctant to favor a new round of trade negotiations until we move to get our house in order.

I discussed some of these aspects in a conference in Germany last year, and I said that the reciprocal trade program was sold to the American people on the basis that it was going to be reciprocal and that it was going to be fair. Today, the American people do not feel it is either reciprocal or fair. It is not reciprocal and it is not fair.

A very brilliant lady speaking for the West Germans took issue with me. She said she strenuously objected to my argument that it should be fair. She asked the question, who is going to decide what is fair?

My answer to that would be that until we can work out some better arrangement, we would decide what is fair in our market and let them decide what is fair in their market, and then negotiate from there.

But it is a cinch that the way it is now, they are deciding what is fair in both markets and we do not have any say about what is fair in either market. It is something we should undertake to correct.

I hope, Mr. President, that we would recognize that we cannot continue to run these enormous deficits in our trade accounts just as we cannot continue to run these enormous deficits in our Federal budget. I hope Congress will face up to both problems.

I want to work with the Senator from Delaware in trying to meet these problems. I regret to say that we have not been able to persuade the administration to recognize that something has to be done about this. Until we do, I suspect the situation will continue to get worse.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana that I believe we share the same goals and objectives. Like him I am concerned about the many inequities that exist in the current GATT rules, such as the taxes.

I recall back in 1974 when we were considering an authorization then in our committee and the distinguished Senator was chairman. One of the areas in which we wanted something to be done was in treating in a fair manner the question of taxes.

I think the distinguished Senator from Louisiana would also agree with me that we feel that agriculture must be treated fairly.

In proposing my resolution what I am concerned about is that we do need to revise, change, and add to the rules in order to make them fair and equitable to the circumstances that exist today. This is not the situation and it has handicapped both our industry and our farmers.

It is my feeling that we have to move forward and to correct these inequities.

I am also concerned that there are many areas not covered, such as services, an area of activity which is increasingly benefiting our balance of trade, but if which we do not cover in the near future, we are going to see increasing obstacles being raised in other countries.

So it was my hope that we could just have a simple sense-of-the-Senate resolution directing the executive branch to proceed with laying the groundwork.

But because I have such great respect for the distinguished Senators from Louisiana and Texas, I am withdrawing it at this time because I do want to see this a bipartisan approach as the last negotiations were, and as Senators LONG has indicated I do, of course, intend to raise it again earlier next year.

Mr. President, I yield back the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I just wish to make one comment with respect to the remarks of Senator LONG. Senator LONG has expressed an interest in the question of natural resource subsidies, natural resource pricing, the differential of prices of natural gas, for example, between what is available in Mexico and what is available in the United States, and I wish to say I think that that is a point that is deserving of great consideration on the part of Congress and to state that next year it is the intention of the Trade Subcommittee of the Finance Committee to look at this question very seriously.

I know that has been of particular concern to Senator LONG, and I think that he has pointed out a very serious problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS). The Senator from Maine is recognized.

ISRAEL FREE TRADE AREA

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to announce that an agreement has been reached on one of the most important provisions in this bill, the authority for the administration to negotiate a free trade area with Israel.

As is generally known, I prepared and intended to offer an amendment to this section of the bill to codify the verbal commitments made by our administration and by the Government of Israel with respect to these negotiations.

My amendment had several elements. None created new conditions for either party. But because of concerns, which I share, that the negotiating authority be enacted before sine die adjournment, I undertook to reach agreement with the administration in such a way as to eliminate the need for a lengthy debate and delay.

My amendment would not have exempted any product from a free trade area agreement. Instead, it sought to assure that specific, highly import-sensitive products—textiles, footwear, apparel and leather-related products—would be treated with care and concern in the negotiations with Israel.

My amendment specified that tariff elimination for these items would be phased in over a 5-year period; that Israel would fulfill commitments made by its Government to eliminate export subsidies to its competing industries, and to sign the GATT subsidies code; and it contained a snap-back provision modeled on the 1979 trade bill to assure continued protection for these industries in the event that those commitments were not fulfilled within that 5-year period.

My amendment would not have imposed on either the United States or Israel any commitments not previously stated to be acceptable. It was a moderate middle ground, which found substantial support in the Senate, to assure that highly import-sensitive sectors in our economy have the necessary time to adjust to the changes in our trading relationship that will inevitably follow in the wake of a free trade area agreement.

Given the lateness of the session and the widely shared interest in achieving passage of this important trade bill, I have reached an agreement with the administration that I believe will facilitate passage of this bill—which I support—and that will also make certain that the concerns I and many of my colleagues had will be taken into account in the negotiations.

I express my gratitude for the support and help that I have received in this effort from my colleagues. Senators THURMOND, WARNER, HOLLINGS, and COHEN were involved in the discussions which led to this agreement. The advice and support of Senators MOYNIHAN, SASSER, HELMS, BUMPERS, and PRYOR were most helpful.

The patience and good faith of Senator DANFORTH, the chairman of the Trade Subcommittee and the manager of this bill, helped bring all those mutual efforts to a successful conclusion and I especially express my sincere thanks to him. The same credit is also due the minority manager of the bill, Senator BENTSEN.

I also thank Ambassador Brock and his staff for their courtesy and cooperation.

At the conclusion of my remarks I will request that the text of a letter from the U.S. Trade Representative, Ambassador Brock, be placed in the RECORD so that the position of the administration is made clear.

To explain that letter, and for the benefit of the large number of Senators whose concerns in this area were as strong as mine, I will briefly outline my understanding of the agreement reached.

First and foremost: My concern was for a clear recognition of textile, footwear, apparel and leather-related products as import-sensitive items. The International Trade Commission report on the economic effects of an Israel free trade area did not reflect the very real import sensitivity of these sectors.

That ITC report failed to take account of a number of factors. First, imports in the textile area have risen 44 percent in the first 7 months of this year alone. Evidence of transshipments to evade quota limits established under the Multi Fiber agreement has already led to a substantial revision of country-of-origin regulations. The very real concern that Israel, under nondutiable entry conditions, would have become a new haven for transshipments required a response.

Both the Senate and House versions of the Israel free trade language now contain prohibitions against transshipment identical to those provided in the Caribbean Basin Initiative. I will urge conferees on this bill to retain that language in the final form of the legislation, and will work with other Senators to ensure that the administration vigorously enforces the law in this regard.

Second. Footwear imports this year have risen to over 70 percent of the total domestic market; 51 factories in 19 States have closed so far this year, resulting in the loss of thousands of American jobs, and more closings are in prospect.

Every Senator who has a footwear plant closing knows what the special problem is: The industry's geographic dispersion in largely rural areas means that its workers cannot easily relocate into new jobs when new jobs exist.

While the long-term prospect of prosperity that comes with expanded and freer trade is undeniable, these displaced workers do not live in the long term. They and their families must survive now in the short run.

But in the first 7 months of this year, more factories have closed nationwide than in the entire 12 months of 1983. Six factories have closed in Maine. Five factories have closed in Tennessee. Five more have closed in Pennsylvania. Massachusetts and California have each lost four factories. North Carolina, Arkansas, Missouri have each lost three factories just since January. And we are not even through the first three-quarters of this year.

Domestic production has fallen by more than half in the last 16 years. Imports which in 1968 took 21 percent of the American market today take over 70 percent. The number of jobs in the shoe industry has been reduced by half, and the unemployment rate in the shoe industry was 19 percent last year and this year will go much higher.

Just yesterday, the Senate Finance Committee unanimously agreed that conditions in the footwear industry warrant a review by the ITC of its incomprehensible June decision that the industry has sustained no serious injury because of imports.

Yet the ITC report reviewing the economic effect of a free trade area with Israel concluded that textiles, footwear and the related sectors are not import sensitive.

That is why a major purpose of my amendment was to reassert that textiles, apparel, footwear and leather-related products are recognized by the administration as import-sensitive items.

The letter signed by Ambassador Brock makes that clear acknowledgment. Mr. Brock's letter confirms in writing the commitment of the administration, given by Assistant Trade Representative Doral Cooper at the ISAG plenary session last Wednesday, that tariff cuts on import-sensitive sectors would be phased in gradually; and Mr. Brock further specifies in writing that this gradual phase-in will apply to textiles, apparel, footwear, and leather-related goods, as well as to those mentioned in the ITC report.

To be specific, he has agreed that these tariff reductions will be phased in over a multiyear period and more gradually than in regard to other products. Ambassador Brock's letter incorporates the intent of my amendment, which was to give our domestic industries time in which to absorb and adapt to the changed trade conditions inevitable between ourselves and Israel.

Israel does not now account for a substantial portion of the U.S. textile market. But in trade, past history is not a reliable predictor of the future. That is self-evident. Every change in trade conditions evokes a change in trade patterns. Indeed the explicit purpose of negotiating trade agreements is precisely to evoke such changed trade patterns.

Israel today has a textile export sector amounting to $330 million annually. Most of that export trade now goes to Western Europe. But nondutiable entry to U.S. markets would be an attractive inducement to expand that production to take advantage of the new opportunity. And that has been recognized by the Israelis themselves.

The publicly reported remarks of Israeli officials that tariff elimination on textile products could result in an immediate fivefold increase in exports to the United States reflect the reality that short-term expansion of existing production in this field is readily achievable. Such a short-term increase is in fact a very likely outcome of a free trade area, in the absence of any negotiated safeguards.

My amendment also addressed itself to the question of existing subsidies that Israel's Government provides its domestic manufacturers. Israel is not a signatory to the GATT subsidies code, which prohibits direct export subsidies. And domestic subsidies remain an important component of Israel's internal economic policy.

Israel has clearly indicated its desire to break loose of reliance on subsidies and its willingness to become a signatory to the GATT subsidies code. Ambassador Brock's letter makes it clear that with respect to export subsidies, Israel's commitment to eliminate them within a relatively short time period is a precondition to the conclusion of a United States-Israel free trade area agreement.

One aim of my amendment was to assure that a gradual phase down of our tariffs in these import-sensitive areas would not occur without some kind of guarantee to eliminate subsidies. Ambassador Brock's written assurance that elimination of these subsidies is a precondition of any agreement incorporates and emphasizes that goal.

This makes it clear that any agreement which fails to include elimination of export subsidies will face serious opposition if presented to the Senate for ratification.

Ambassador Brock's letter, in addition, reaches to the far more complex area of domestic subsidies. He reiterates that such subsidies remain subject to U.S. countervailing duty law, with or without a free trade area agreement.

Given these assurances, given the lateness of the session and the importance of moving forward with negotiations for closer economic ties with Israel—a goal I strongly support—I need not offer my amendment. I will instead rely on the commitment made by Ambassador Brock in behalf of the administration. In addition, I and other concerned Senators will follow closely the substance of those negotiations and their outcome.

Congress has long recognized the import sensitivity of textiles, apparel, footwear, and other leather related products in the exemptions that those products have received from the favorable trade conditions this country has granted under the generalized system of preferences, and in the Caribbean Basin Initiative Program. The substitution of a less formal commitment in this instance does not represent a precedent with respect to any future free trade negotiations the administration may undertake. The current agreement reached reflects the unique relationship we have with Israel and our determination to preserve and strengthen it without at the same time harming our own people. Accordingly, Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the text of Ambassador Brock's letter to me be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, September 20, 1984.

HON. GEORGE J. MITCHELL,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR GEORGE: You have expressed concern about the effect of a United States-Israel Free-Trade Area upon the domestic industries producing textiles, apparel, footwear, and other leather related products. The Administration asked the International Trade Commission for economic advice on the effect of entering into such an agreement. Textiles, apparel, footwear, and other leather related products are among the most import sensitive American industries.

This sensitivity will be taken into account in the negotiations with the Government of Israel. It is the intention of the Administration to phase in U.S. duty reductions on such sensitive products over a multi-year period and more gradually than in regard to other products.

You have also expressed concern regarding the existence of export and domestic subsidy programs in Israel, both as to their generally trade distortive effect and as they relate to the proposed United States-Israel Free-Trade Area. I want to assure you that the Administration shares this concern.

As a result, commitment by Israel to phase out and eliminate the maintenance of export subsidy programs in a relatively short period of time is viewed by the Administration as a precondition to the conclusion of a Free-Trade Area agreement between the United States and Israel. In addition, it is our expectation that such a commitment from Israel will serve as a basis for their signing the subsidies code, in accordance with the previously stated intention of the Government of Israel to sign the code.

We also continue to be seriously concerned about the impact of domestic subsidy programs on U.S. industries and workers. I want to assure you that these programs are subject to U.S. countervailing duty law and the Administration will vigorously enforce this law with respect to any product of Israel benefitting from such domestic subsidy programs.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I was pleased to be a cosponsor to the amendment which Senator MITCHELL had intended to offer to H.R. 3398.

However, after receiving assurances from the U.S. Trade Ambassador, William Brock, that the basic concepts of this amendment will be incorporated in our negotiating position with the country of Israel on this issue, Senator MITCHELL has decided not to go forward with his amendment. In individual letters to me, Senator MITCHELL, Senator WARNER, and others, Ambassador Brock has given us the following commitments:

1. The import sensitivity of textiles, apparel, leather goods, and footwear will be taken into account in negotiating with Israel.

2. The elimination of Israeli export subsidies in these areas will serve as a pre-condition for U.S. agreement to this free trade zone.

3. Tariffs on these import sensitive products will be phased out over a multi-year period.

Mr. President, I feel that, under the circumstances, this is a workable compromise. We have a full commitment from the U.S. Trade Representative to address the concerns of import sensitive industries in these negotiations, and I feel this will substantially reduce any adverse impact which may result from the conclusion of any free trade zone agreement with Israel.

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I yield to my distinguished colleague from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. COHEN. I thank the Senator for yielding.

I want to add a few additional comments to what my colleague from Maine has just said because I was in fact a cosponsor of his amendment that has just been withdrawn.

I would like to make a few comments concerning the reason for the sense of exasperation and the sense of frustration that this amendment reflected. Senator MITCHELL and I have been working for some time now to try to bring to the attention of a governmental agency a serious economic problem that we face, not only in our State but in the 12 or 13 other States that are involved in the manufacture of textiles, and most particularly, shoes.

A few months ago, as former prosecutors, former attorneys—in Senator MITCHELL's case, a former judge—we believe we had presented an incontrovertible case demonstrating injury. The case we felt was so overwhelming that there could be only one decision, and yet we were shocked, disappointed, and outraged to find out that a so-called independent agency had made a determination in the face of these overwhelming, incontrovertible facts that showed we had lost an additional 20 percent of the market share in just a few short years, and that we had thousands upon thousands more people out of work. We found an attitude that was one of indifference to economic reality, and one of indifference to human suffering predicated upon a commitment to so-called free trade. Factories have closed, some factories have moved offshore in the sense that they have fired American workers and hired foreign nationals to produce shoes to be imported into this country.

This was seen as a positive benefit to the industry. Oddly enough in the eyes of all of the commissioners, they saw the factory closings as being simply good business judgment. They saw the moving off shore as being prudent business management. They pointed to some major companies making a profit, and ignored the 40-odd factories that had closed. So we found this decision both lacking in logic, in fact, and ultimately in fairness. That, in my judgment, in addition to the action that we took earlier this week to correct the situation, is the basis for Senator MITCHELL offering the amendment on behalf of both of us to stop the continuation of this policy of indifference; this indifference toward reality and indifference toward suffering.

On the one hand, we have a neighbor to the north, a neighbor to our soil, Canada—and another neighbor to our soul, Israel. Both are neighbors to our soil, I might add, and both are our good allies. But we are under an economic assault from our neighbor to the north—in potatoes, in timber, lumber, fisheries, and other products. Just 2 weeks ago, both Senator MITCHELL and I testified before the ITC dealing with the question of fisheries. Our fishermen are being put out of business on account of subsidized activities in Canada.

One of the concerns I wanted to add in addition to the very critical issue of shoes and textiles, is that we would not like to have our support for this particular measure in any way be construed as an endorsement of Canadian practices in terms of how they subsidize their industries. And I ask unanimous consent that my remarks offered to the ITC a few weeks ago in Maine be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. WILLIAM S. COHEN

Senator COHEN. Madam Chairwoman and members of the Commission, I am pleased to welcome you once again to the City of Portland, and I am pleased to appear before you in support of the Maine fishing industry.

Before I begin my brief statement, I want to welcome each of you to Portland, as I mentioned. You came in connection with another matter before, potatoes as I recall, and we are delighted to have you here with respect to fisheries.

I also want to extend my appreciation to Governor Brennan's Maine Fisheries Trade Task Force, along with the fishermen and the fish processors in the state who have put so much effort into making this investigation fruitful. Without the assistance of that Task Force, the investigation would not be at the point that it is today.

As each of you know, this issue, the extent of the groundfish industry's injury from Canadian trade practice, is not a new one, yet the controversy over this question has never really been resolved.

More than 20 years ago, the Associated Fisheries of Maine petitioned the U.S. Tariff Commission for relief from the large volume of low-priced Canadian redfish imports that had been flooding the Maine markets at that point. And even though the case was a sound one, relief was denied.

During the '70's the New England groundfish industry filed three more petitions, and again in each case, they were denied.

The last petition generated a finding by the Treasury Department that although the circumstances justified the imposition of countervailing duties, those duties were not levied, under the Department's discretionary, because the Canadian government had promised to end its assistance programs in return for the continued privilege of exporting fishery products into New England, with virtually no restrictions.

Many questions remain as to whether or not these programs, or similar programs, product the same unfair advantages, whether they've been abandoned or in existence today.

I believe the situation, frankly, is worse today than it was at that time, and I am confident that once this investigation is completed, the facts are going to support relief from the deluge of Canadian fish imports that are flooding our markets at unfair prices.

Although these prior petitions were of principal interest to fish harvesters, it's apparent today that many domestic processors also find Canada's subsidized products, particularly fresh and frozen fillets, displacing their own domestic markets.

As the entire New England fishing industry attempts to diversify and become more competitive in markets other than the traditional fresh fish market, Canada's low-priced imports are frustrating those very efforts.

The panels that are going to be addressing you this morning are comprised of Maine fishermen and processors, and their representatives, and they are going to supply you facts to support these claims. You will hear a description of the Maine industry and its importance to our economy, and so I will leave those matters to the following panels.

What I would like to talk about is the compelling case that I believe they will present. Statistics, for example, compiled by the New England Fisheries Development Foundation indicate that fresh groundfish imports from Canada amounted to 75 million pounds in 1983, up from 25 million pounds just five years ago. The value of the fish product imports into New England has increased from $549 million in 1980 to $1.7 billion in 1983, while the value of New England landings, which was 67% of the value of imports in 1980, was only 34% of imports in '83. So during this period, the value of domestic landings rose slightly while the amount of imports nearly doubled.

Last year, Canada exported more than $800 million worth of edible fisheries products into this country, with most of this amount coming into New England. Although Canada contends that it exported only 43% of its catch into this country in 1983, it is commonly recognized that more than 65% of that catch actually is coming into New England, while 95% of Canada's production of fresh and frozen fillets is exported into the country.

Now it's true that some of these imports go to states other than those in New England or the mid-Atlantic states, but it's no secret that these markets, New England, are the principal target of Canada's export policies.

Each one of us knows that if the problems facing the Maine fishing industry were simply one of import penetration, we wouldn't be here today, under traditional notions of fair trade. But in this case, and Canada in particular, the government's fisheries policies provide extremely unfair market advantages to the Canadian fishing industry. Over the years, the government of Canada has employed an array of subsidies as a conscious social welfare policy that is designed to allow the Canadian fishing industry to stay in business at any cost.

As a result of these policies, Canada can afford to sell low in any area of its production, be it scallops or fresh round, fresh filleted, frozen filleted or salted fish, because any losses that may be realized will be absorbed by the Canadian government.

By comparison, Maine fishermen and processors are forced to pay market rates for capital equipment, fuel, ice, insurance and other expenses, while paying their own debts. Maine fishermen also have to contend with domestic tariffs which increase the expense of importing necessary fishing gear, while their counterparts in Canada, of course, do not have that expense.

Last year, the Canadian federal government committed at least $200 million to be spent over a five-year period, for the latest revitalization of the Canadian Atlantic fisheries. Of this amount, it has been reported that $138 million has been appropriated to, and I use the word in quotes, "restructure"—to restructure the Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Quebec fisheries. I should add that when you tally up all of the money that is to be committed to each of the provinces in the restructuring plan, the total seems to be much greater than the stated amount.

Although Canada has submitted to this Commission a report characterizing these payments as a benign effort to provide equity to debt-ridden companies, I see these payments in quite another light.

This continuing commitment to absorb the Canadian fishing industry's losses is nothing less than a countervailable subsidy. It also represents the underpinning of Canada's predatory pricing practice, which is employed to insure the market share for Canadian producers at any price.

And those who have to compete in this market where this kind of activity flourishes simply can't be expected to survive over the long-term. That's precisely the situation that is facing the Maine fishing industry today, as it fights to compete with Canada in the New England groundfish market.

Before I conclude, I'd like to comment on another aspect of Canada's fisheries policies which was also treated very lightly in Canada's submission to the Commission.

In addition to absorbing the losses of its groundfish industry, the Canadian government continues to commit large sums of money in the form of grants to subsidize the cost of operating the fishing businesses.

Plans are now in place in Canada to contribute $10 million to a capital recovery program that will provide icemaking equipment, upgrade industrial water and power supplies, and pay for vessel, plant, and product inspection as part of a quality-improvement program. In addition, $25 million is to be spent on a fisheries advertising program in the United States markets in the near future.

In 1982, more than $30 million of price supports were paid to Canadian groundfishermen to protect them from low prices during certain times of the year. Also, the Canadian fishermen may receive grants worth 25% of the cost of construction of a fishing vessel. Over a thousands fishing vessels have been constructed with that subsidy since 1980.

I anticipate the Commission will be able to determine that these programs are only a part of the panoply of subsidies that are provided to the Canadian fishing industry by its government.

And I am equally certain that the Commission's analysis of our domestic industry's conditions of competition will not show comparable levels of government support in our country. Our fishermen and processors have to make it on their own in a very competitive market.

Finally, I would expect that the factual analysis in the Commission's report will show that the unfair advantages that are provided to the Canadian industry by its government constitute an illegal trade practice in this country.

Madam Chairwoman, in addition to that, if I might, I would like to call the Commission's attention to a set of hearings that were held by the Government Affairs—Senate Government Affairs Committee back in 1981. It was interesting during this particular set of hearings, which I characterized I believe as trying to identify these subsidies was like watching mercury on a mirror. At one time the Canadians will talk about the fact that they do not provide subsidies, they would call them grants. Another day, they would not be grants but they would be part of a general economic program. At still another time, they would be characterized as simply as we have today, the restructuring of a debt-equity ratio of the fishing community. All of which, in my judgment, is calculatd to achieve or to drive U.S. competitors into a legalistic frenzy in an effort to determine whether they should seek relief from anti-dumping practices or ask for the imposition of countervailing duties, or maybe they should seek a Section 301 petition alleging that the actions of a government are unreasonable, unjustifiable and discriminatory.

But during the course of those hearings, I introduced a booklet specifically listing the subsidies that were provided by the Canadian government to their fishing community. The booklet unfortunately was not prepared by the U.S. Commerce Department, it was prepared by the Canadian government. And that is part of this record which I would like to have you look at.

The second major item that came out during the course of those hearings was an unclassified document prepared by our State Department, referring to a 1981 official Provincial Commission Report on the PEI Fishery. I'd like to quote it for you:

"It appears on the basis of the 1978 figures, total government assistance, including administration and unemployment insurance payments, amounted to at least half the value of the landings of all types of fish. If fishermen and processors were to bear the full cost of those services, they would not be able to catch or to process fish."

This is a Canadian document itself indicating that without the government subsidies, without all of the programs helping the fishing industry, they could not even begin to compete. And I believe that sort of statement coming as it did from our State Department, is very relevant and I think quite compelling.

So I again thank you for coming, and I look forward to working with you in the future as we examine the factual matters that I believe support without question relief in this matter.

Mr. COHEN. I simply hope, because I believe that our fishing industry has such a good case to present to the ITC, that this action today in allowing a free trade zone for both Canada and Israel not be misconstrued. We indeed want to have better relationships with all countries as trading partners. By the same token, we do not in any way wish to condone their activities to date because I believe they have engaged in the unfair subsidization of their fishermen, their potato producers, their lumber industry, and almost every major product coming into New England.

I would not want to see any incentive added for Canada to now move into shoes and textiles, or for that matter, for Israel to do so to the detriment of the people that we represent.

Mr. President, I support the efforts made by Senator MITCHELL to arrive at a negotiated understanding with Ambassador Brock in conjunction with Senator DANFORTH who sat in on those negotiations.

I want to commend him for achieving what I believe is an acceptable result. Obviously, we would both prefer to have our amendment pass. Obviously, there is difficulty in securing that. I believe the statement made by Senator MITCHELL outlining the items of agreement acknowledging that footwear and textiles are import sensitive; that places the tariff reductions from the United States more gradually on the textiles and footwear than other products; that makes the United States-Israel free trade zone contingent upon Israel signing the GATT subsidies code, agreeing to eliminate its export subsidies; and assures the administration will vigorously enforce countervailing duty laws with respect to textile and footwear imports. I think those safeguards that he helped negotiate are positive ones, and I too want to join with him in saying that we are going to be very, very watchful guardians to make sure that these conditions are, in fact, implemented.

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would like to associate myself with the statement of the distinguished Senator from Maine, and to commend him for his efforts on behalf of the textiles, footwear, apparel, and leather-related products industries and their employees.

Last evening I was privileged to work with Senators MITCHELL and THURMOND and, along with U.S. Trade Representative Brock, we were able to reach an important agreement. I am pleased that we were able to do so because I believe that these issues should be addressed as a part of the negotiation process and that the Senate should let our negotiators negotiate.

As one who believes in the concept of free trade policies and who understands obvious benefits that will accrue to both Israel and the United States under such a policy, I strongly support the establishment of a United States-Israel free trade agreement.

However, free trade must be fair trade.

The agreement we have worked out with Ambassador Brock insures that our negotiators will recognize the textiles, footwear apparel, and leather-related products industries as extremely import-sensitive, and will accordingly negotiate agreements that will contain safeguards against the several possibilities that unfair trade practices could be used to the detriment of our domestic industries.

I am hopeful that the Senate will pass this legislation so we can begin our discussions and hopefully reach an agreement quickly with the Government of Israel so that we can begin to enjoy the benefits of free trade.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to protest the administration's failure to commit against transshipments in negotiations to establish a free trade area with Israel and Canada.

I commend my colleague, Senator MITCHELL, from Maine and others who have worked on this. I think Senator MITCHELL has done a very good job in bringing about a letter of understanding so it would not require us to pursue the amendment of which I was a cosponsor. On the other hand, I am rather bemused by all of us as Senators when we appear on the floor about how we are going to see that the law is "vigorously enforced." That is the greatest bunch of poppycock that I have ever heard. We have learned the hard way that these administrations come and go without any idea of enforcing countervailing duties, trigger price mechanisms, escape clause provisions, bilateral agreements, and their own commitments. We have found that the hard way. And thank heavens for national elections wherein we can get letters of commitment, letters which seem to have a greater effect on administrations than the law itself.

Back in the campaign of 1980, my distinguished senior colleague, Senator THURMOND, elicited a commitment from Candidate Ronald Reagan dated September 3, 1980.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in its entirety at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 3, 1980.

HON. STROM THURMOND,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR STROM: The fiber/textile/apparel manufacturing complex provides 2.3 million vitally needed American jobs, including a high percentage of female and minority employees. As President, I shall make sure that these jobs remain in this country.

The Multifiber Arrangement (MFA), which is supposed to provide orderly international trade in fibers, textiles and apparels, was first negotiated under a Republican Administration. The MFA expires at the end of 1981 and needs to be strengthened by relating import growth from all sources to domestic market growth. I shall work to achieve that goal.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

In that letter, we had commitments made with respect to the level of textile imports and how it would be maintained. The President said:

> The fiber-textile-apparel manufacturing complex provides 2.3 million vitally needed American jobs, including a high percentage of female and minority employees.

They got right to the politics of it. We understand that. That is good. We are interested in those things.

> As President, I shall make sure that these jobs remain in this country.
> The multifiber arrangement, which is supposed to provide orderly international trade in fibers, textiles, and apparels, was first negotiated under a Republican administration.

They get to the politics there, too, saying:

> We will lead the way to vigorously enforce the law.
> The MFA expires at the end of 1981 and needs to be strengthened by relating import growth from all sources to domestic market growth. I shall work to achieve that goal.

So in elaborating upon this letter, the leadership of our industry, along with Senator THURMOND, had it understood that the new administration would hold growth in imports to the level of growth in the domestic market, which had been running at 1 to 2 percent a year.

What has been the experience with all this? Have they vigorously enforced?

As President Ronald Reagan said, "I will make sure that these jobs remain in this country."

Let us see what has happened.

In 1980, the textile-apparel deficit was $4 billion. In 1981, it had increased to $5.7 billion; in 1982, $7.2 billion; in 1983, $10.6 billion; and at the present rate, 1984 will be over $14 billion in deficit.

The American Textile Manufacturers Institute put out a report when that deficit jumped to $10.6 billion that we lost in America 150,000 textile jobs in 1 year. Now ATMI is not by any stretch of the imagination anti-Reagan; in fact, it is known for its Republican leanings. It gave strong support to the President's election. They are careful to put out accurate reports—and they reported 159,000 jobs lost in 12 months.

"Vigorously enforced," my colleague says.

That $10.6 billion deficit last year would have been approximately $5.8 billion under the Reagan commitment, had it been carried out. But we do not see it "vigorously enforced."

Textile imports in March 1984 jumped 55 percent over March 1983. So my colleague, Senator THURMOND, Congressman CAMPBELL, and others panicked and went racing down to the White House to remind the President of his commitment because this was an election year. They were both running for reelection.

So the administration put out a very strong statement in the spring on textiles: We are going to get them vigorously enforced. We are going to hire new customs agents. We are going to have more inspectors. We are going to have Secretary Regan of Treasury issue rules and regulations. They went right down the line. They had a great time with pictures and all kinds of headlines.

They said they would do all that by June. But nothing happened. "Vigorously enforced?" Nothing happened by June.

So they held another conference and they said they would "vigorously enforce" by September 7. I have never understood the selection of that particular date, September 7.

In Dallas, at the National Convention, they met again: That is where they really discuss these matters; it is given political attention there. I am not decrying the convention in Dallas. I campaigned for 2 years to impress one convention of all my qualifications. After 30 years of public service I was glad at the convention this year they finally recognized my qualities, I say to Senator GOLDWATER. Only it was at the Republican Convention and not the Democratic one. I rather enjoyed the Republican speakers as they mentioned my name.

Anyhow, they got together. They had a high-level conference with the President, the Trade Representative, and others, and they pushed the September 7 date all the way to October 31.

That was to let in all the Christmas orders for imported goods. When I was in the Piedmont area of my State the other day, J.P. Stevens had to let go some more workers. Burlington let others go, Du Pont had to let some go, and Allied in Lexington County had to let others go.

Under this commitment, since 1980, we have closed down 72 mills and lost 22,000 jobs in South Carolina alone. All I can do is go back to President Reagan's letter. I cannot be running around on the political stump with a bunch of laws in my pocket. Nobody can follow that. But they can see the commitment and they can see the signature. I commend Senator MITCHELL on getting a letter from the Trade Representative so there will be no misunderstanding.

I only asked to have in that letter a commitment against transshipment. We have that provision in the law. We learned long ago that legal provisions mean little to this particular group so we have had sad luck. We do not want our friend Israel, for example, to be used as a funnel to take all the cheap textiles manufactured in the Middle East, Africa, India, and other places and funnel them through. A free-trade agreement between Israel and the United States would be salutary, if it is a tight agreement between two countries. We ship out about $1.7 billion and import about $1.3 billion. It is not a large amount in relation to the entire picture. But being the best of friends it gives a good starting point for free trade. But as the Senator from Maine pointed out, Israel has not agreed to the GATT Code on Subsidies, so we had to get that put into the letter.

We know they had a free-trade zone agreement with the European Economic Community on citrus. Somehow more oranges arrived in the European Economic Community than you could possibly produce in Israel. The reason is transshipments.

So understanding what the situation is, I asked respectfully for a commitment to negotiate a prohibition on transshipments. They stonewalled, they said they did not want to put that into a letter. A letter was written without a prohibition and that was that. They would not add to it.

That is why I take the floor this afternoon, because we find this reluctance to enforce the law. I am convinced that a President who really understood the problem would come with a Trade Council to formulate trade policy and to enforce the law. We have a National Security Council in order to correlate the State and Defense Departments, and that's what we need for trade. We need to correlate State, Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor.

You see the concern that we have in the Congress. There are all these many trade amendments. We travel up the hill and then we withdraw the amendment. We do this with all administrations. And we are going out of business. America is turning into a colony.

I look out of my front window in Charleston and see us exporting our raw materials, our natural resources, our coal, our corn, our wheat, our tobacco, our foodstuffs, our timber. And we are importing the finished goods.

At issue is not just jobs. It is the standard of living on the one hand and the capacity to continue as a world power on the other.

You cannot be a world power unless you can produce steel, glass, rubber, aluminum, right on down the list. On textiles—we had a hearing under John F. Kennedy and found that second in importance to steel to our national security was textiles. We can get you the record. We have been on this petard now for 25 years.

I wonder why they will not just put that prohibition in a letter. We use those letters. President Reagan used his as Candidate Reagan. He took South Carolina—he knew how to write it. He said "female" and "minority" jobs and said the Republican administration negotiated all this. He wants credit. So let us give him credit. These commitments are what the people see and they can understand. So I go back to these commitments when people start talking about "vigorous enforcement."

I hope by this appearance here we can elicit from this administration some commitment against transshipment. Transshipment is the real danger. The real danger in a free trade area is transshipment. Why? Because that is how they are wrecking us now. All of these bilaterals, all these quota agreements and everything else are not being administered. We have had labeling laws on the books for years and years, yet the violations are notorius. And the same applies to dozens of other trade laws and practices. We aren't enforcing the law.

The British are able, the European Economic Community is able, and the Japanese are able to administer their trade laws. We are disabled because we do not understand trade in the executive branch of our Government.

So, we need in that White House a trade council to correlate Treasury, State, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor. We need advisory groups to work with that particular council. We need a food and fiber board. Let me talk about farmers. I went to Decatur, IL, and stood on the stump where Lincoln made his first talk. I had some good times in my campaign. I have been to Springfield and elsewhere in the Middle West. The farmers do not know what our trade policy is.

Just this week, we got a new agriculture policy. Why? On account of the election. We recommended those extensions of Farmers Home Administration loans last year. But it is only under the pressure of November 6 that they act. Now we have an agricultural policy and will allow those loans to be rolled over and increased for America's agriculture. Unfortunately, a lot of farmers went under while we waited.

The solution in trade is not a bunch of new laws. It is too complex. What we need is to enforce the laws on the books. We stand here and use this language, "I am going to see to it that they vigorously enforce"—that is nonsense. The experience is totally in the other direction.

If we had our trade laws enforced, you would not have us as Congressmen and Senators dancing around here trying to maintain the standard of living.

Let me emphasize that. As a country, we decided we are going to have to have a minimum wage, we are going to have unemployment compensation, we are going to have to have Social Security, we are going to have to have product liability, and OSHA. We have to have a safe place to work—we are going to have to have clean air and clean water. Republican and Democrat all agree on that standard of living. We put those things into law. Do you think those things exist in Shanghai where they can make this shirt for 18 cents an hour? Are we going to cut back on the standard of living in America to 18 cents an hour and do away with clean air and clean water, a safe working place, the minimum wage? Absolutely not.

Trade war—huh. We had a saying in the days of Vietnam: some day they are going to hold a war and no one is going to attend. I say to my colleagues that they are holding a trade war and we are the only ones not attending. We are up in the grandstands hollering "Free trade, free trade, protectionism, protectionism." And down on the field the game is in the fourth quarter, and they are cleaning our clock.

There is nothing wrong with it, it is competition. But it is not free enterprise, it is government-to-government enterprise. I'm not mad at the Japanese. I do not blame them. I have 13 Japanese companies in my State—and we are proud of it. I'm angry at us for not competing back. We built up Japan, with American aid, to compete. They are competing, their people and their government. Our people want to compete too. But our Government refuses; 30 years ago, I appeared at a hearing before the U.S. Tariff Commission when Tom Dewey represented the Japanese Government. He chased me all around the hearing room. Well, here, 30 years later, I go home at the August break and you know who is in my office? Concrete people. Gifford Hill, all the rest of them. Because in Mexico, the cost of energy is 28 times less than the cost of energy in the United States. So they are shipping concrete up to Oregon, Washington, Illinois; they have 10 percent of the market. This time next year, they will have 20 percent of the market.

Where are we heading, Mr. President? If they can ship in concrete and make a profit, we had better stop, look, and listen.

We want to move toward a world of free trade. But like Franklin Roosevelt back in the depression days, in the 1930's, in order to keep the banks open, he closed the doors. In order to save the farms, he plowed under the crops. Today in America, in order to remove the trade barriers, we might have to raise one or two and then remove them all.

But we have to bring them to the table so they understand. Japan cuts off at 4-percent imports into that country. Imports do not exceed 10 percent in the European Economic Community. In apparel we were at 44 percent last year and over 50 percent this year. Steel is over 25 percent, automobiles up to 30 percent. Just go on down the list. You are losing your capacity as a world power and you are diminishing our standard of living, and the candidates are out there on the stump talking about religion and who is going to meet with Gromyko. They are not even in the ballpark, those Presidential candidates.

The people of America wonder why we cannot make this country competitive again. That is what is finally going to evolve in the next few years if we are going to give the next generations a chance.

I do not know why so-called protection has taken on a pejorative sense. We have the FBI to protect us from enemies within, the Army to protect us from enemies without. We have unemployment compensation to protect us from loss of a job, social security to protect us from the ravages of old age, protection for the air we breathe, the water we drink.

I have taken an oath, I guess about seven times now, at least, to preserve, protect, and defend. That is what your Government is for. But the tail is wagging the dog. The big banks, the multinationals, have taken on the nationalities of the host countries and the only way they can dump their products is in the free market of the United States of America. When we awaken, we realize that it is not just textiles, it is not just shoes, it has gone all the way to concrete, steel, rubber, glass, everything else.

If the Senator from Illinois and I had a gadget and we wanted to produce that gadget, needed a $20 million loan, and we went to Banker Mitchell, he would look at that thing and say: "That is a pretty good gadget. I am willing to lend you $20 million over 10 years. But looking closer, I see you developing your market in 3 years."

We say: "Sure, we will have it developed and going great then."

But then he says: "Well, once you get a market developed of that kind, you can have a competitor move over to Juarez, Mexico, and he can bring that product in at half the price. So we will make this a 5-year loan instead of a 10-year loan."

The Senator and I look at each other and say: "Five years? We cannot pay that loan back in 5 years."

The Senator would say: "Why haggle? Let's go to Juarez; 187 of the big companies have gone there."

GE has five plants, General Motors has five plants—at 83 cents an hour. We are forcing business to go overseas. We live in an international economic order. You can produce anything anywhere. Smug Americans think that somehow we can make computers, and airplanes, and things of that kind. Ask Pan Am whether we can make airplanes. They are not buying them from Boeing now. They are buying them from Airbus, subsidized in Europe.

The farmers got me on a program out there on Dutch Reagan's old WHO in Des Moines, IA, and the first question out of the box was:

Senator, you are from a textile State and you want protection for your textiles. They are going to retaliate against our farmers. We farmers are for free trade.

I said:

Wait a minute now. Let us get the record straight. In 1935, we started a support price program for the farmers of America. I like it. I support it. And then we instituted protective quotas, quotas to protect those support prices. Then we put in the Export-Import Bank in 1935 so we could sell our wheat now to the Russians at a normal cost. We subsidize the sale. Textiles are not asking to subsidize the sale. We are not asking for protection. We are just asking for a fair chance to compete.

We believe in free trade and do not want to retaliate. Everybody is retaliating. It is a business deal. It is common sensical. It is give and take. It is an international economic order. We must sober up and get some leadership which understands that this Trilateral Commission and big-bank crowd in New York is taking us for a ride. We are exporting our jobs faster than we can possibly create them.

Service economy? Service ecomony? In my section of the United States, we tried that from 1865 to 1965. We tried that for 100 years. We did not produce anything. We took in each other's washing.

Do not give me a service economy talk. There is no education in the second kick of a mule. Do not believe a service economy or high tech is some sophisticated skill. Why do you think Digital is in Mexico? Why do you think Atari went to China? Why do you think Tandy went overseas to Singapore? All of these are so-called high-technology companies. You can manufacture anything anywhere, electric subassemblies in Singapore, automobiles in Africa, semiconductors in Brazil, high tech in Mexico, and we are sitting around here like we know something about trade.

We are just not in the game. I want to protect reasonably, to the best interests of the United States, free trade. You cannot have peace by doing away with your Army. George Washington said; "The best way to preserve the peace is to prepare for war." Because we have had a strong defense we have had, generally speaking, peace. It has worked. The best way to preserve the free market is to be able to compete on the same level with the rest of these countries.

In agriculture, 10 years ago the European Economic Community was a net importer of wheat. Last year they were a net exporter of 20 percent of the world's wheat, with a 25-percent subsidy for wheat in France, a 25-percent subsidy for rice in Japan, a 25-percent subsidy for soybeans down in Israel. This IMF crowd, the International Bank, the World Bank, they are all running around here getting money, but we cannot get anything for women, infants, and children's feeding. We cannot get student loans. We cannot do anything for education. This administration wants to abolish it. The World Bank is running around telling them in Nigeria, Brazil, and every other undeveloped country, "You need a steel plant," so they put it there for 2-percent money, subsidize it. Then they bring steel in from Brazil and dump it on the dock at less than cost and we are supposed to go along with that.

They are absolutely wrong. America needs a fair chance to compete.

United States Steel is not pro bono publico. They are in it for a profit. If others are going to dump at less than cost in the United States and we are not going to administer the trigger-price mechanism, then what are they going to do? They are going to go to Marathon Oil. Do you blame them? They are not unpatriotic. The fault lies in the Congress and the executive branch.

I hope the President, the administration, and the Trade Representative, when we talk about "vigorously enforcing," just put in the letter that there will not be any transshipment. That is what we are suffering from in America today. Why will they not put that in the letter? I would like to see it there, because we do not want to adulterate a free-trade treaty with our friends from Israel or Canada. I would support such a treaty if we can move in that direction.

It is not the worker of America who is unproductive and noncompetitive. It is the workers' Government in Washington that is not competing and not producing. That is what is wrong in this country. There is nothing wrong with the American worker. The chamber of commerce and the Bureau of Labor agree on one thing—the most productive worker in the world is still the U.S. industrial worker, and the most productive farmer is certainly the American farmer.

I thank my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise on other business, but before I offer the amendment that has been agreed to, may I say to my distinguished colleague from South Carolina that I only regret every Member of the U.S. Senate could not have been on the floor just now to hear those very eloquent remarks by my warm friend, who speaks the truth and addresses significant problems before the country that I think need the attention of the Congress and the Chief Executive of this great Nation. I congratulate the Senator on his eloquent remarks and hope that a great many people in this Nation have an opportunity to read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what he has said this day, which was to the point and an excellent explanation of the problem that we have in connection with our foreign affairs today.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank my colleague.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a brief comment to conclude the subject the Senator from South Carolina has addressed?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his comments. He has set forth his position with his usual forceful eloquence. I share many of the sentiments expressed by the Senator.

As Senator COHEN indicated earlier, we have a very strong sense of frustration, coming from a border State which is subject to import assault from subsidized industries in other countries in a wide range of products. I hope that some of the message the Senator has set forth can be translated into action.

I will make two points. With respect to cement, I have introduced legislation which I hope will deal with it in at least a modest way, because we confront the same problem in the Northeast. I hope we can get the Senator's help on that.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Can we add potatoes and fish from Machias?

Mr. MITCHELL. We are going to do a little at a time. The journey of 1,000 miles begins with the first step.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to say finally, with respect to textile imports, the Senator made a compelling case but, in fact, did not refer to what I think are the most compelling figures. In the 18 years of the existence of the multifiber arrangement on textiles, prior to 1981 there was an increase in the quantity imported, expressed in square yard equivalents, which is a common term in history, as the Senator knows, of about 3.5 billion square yard equivalents.

In the 3½ years in which this administration has been in office, there has been an increase of 5.5 billion square yards equivalent. That is, the total quantity of texitle imports in the last 3½ years is nearly double the quantity of increase over the previous 18 years. So we are facing a very serious situation.

I wish it were possible for a single stroke, a single bill, a single policy to address the problem in the comprehensive manner which the Senator has eloquently described. But the fact is, as the Senator knows, that that cannot be done, because there is no single bill, no single statement, no single national policy which will accomplish that. It requires an aggregation of several policies, of many political entities, and we have to begin somewhere.

While I wish the letter was stronger and while I wish it included the statement that the Senator desired, it represented the best we could do under the circumstances at this time.

So we will go forward with it, and I hope the Senator will join all of us in this continuing struggle which he has outlined so eloquently here today. I thank the Senator for his remarks.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the possibility of amendments to exclude certain sectors or products from any free trade arrangement that may be negotiated between the United States and Israel. I would like to point out the following to my colleagues:

First, Israel currently receives duty-free treatment on over 90 percent of its exports to the United States. Therefore, if exemptions are included in the bill, not only will other sectors insist on being excluded, but Israel would have little incentive to sign an agreement offering less than or equal to what it currently receives and the free trade negotiations could be jeopradized.

Second, unlike GSP and CBI, this is a reciprocal arrangement affording opportunities for U.S. exports. For example, the United States had about a 6 to 1 surplus in its textile trade with Israel in 1982; there is the potential to increase that surplus through a free trade arrangement.

Third, the problem of import sensitive sectors will and should be dealt with through our existing trade laws and mechanisms designed for just such purposes and through the negotiating process.

Fourth, to comply with the general agreement on tariffs and trade, a free trade arrangement between two countries must cover, and I quote, "substantially all the trade," end quote, between those countries.

The European Community has already negotiated a free trade arrangement with Israel and the United States will be at a disadvantage if we do not put in place the mechanisms to negotiate a free trade arrangement with Israel ourselves. In fact, I believe there is the potential for loss to U.S. exporters of trade with Israel if the United States does not soon establish an agreement similar to that between the European Community and Israel. Therefore, a United States-Israel free trade arrangement offers a golden opportunity to expand U.S. exports of goods and services. I strongly urge my colleagues to reject this exclusion and others that may likely follow.

AMENDMENT NO. 4345

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOLDWATER). The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] proposes an amendment numbered 4345, for himself and Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. BOREN, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. PERCY, Mr. JEPSEN, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. EXON, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. FORD, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. NUNN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. HELMS, Mr. DOLE, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. EVANS, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. WARNER, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. GORTON, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. ANDREWS.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, add the following new section:

SEC. . The pork industry contributes $9,000,000,000 annually to the United States economy;

Over four hundred fifty thousand United States farmers produce pork for domestic and foreign market;

United States imports of live hogs from Canada averaged one hundred thousand animals each year between 1970 and 1974, yet since 1981, such imports have increased yearly from one hundred forty-six thousand head to an estimated more than one million head in 1984;

The adverse economic effect of the recent surge in imports of Canadian hogs and pork products on United States pork producers has been estimated to be in excess of $500,000,000 in 1982 and 1983, and approximately $300,000,000 during the first five months of 1984;

The Canadian government provides price support for hogs at a level equal to 90 per centum of the previous five-year average market price, indexed for changes in cash costs of production of hogs, which represented a payment of $6.54 per head to Canadian pork producers last year, and all but one provincial government of Canada also provide direct production assistance to support Canadian pork producers; and

It is essential that the administration act immediately to address the threat to the United States pork production industry caused by the dramatic increase in imports of hogs and pork products from Canada: Now, therefore,

It is the sense of the Senate that the President should direct appropriate members of the administration, including the United States Trade Representative, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce, to aggressively pursue discussions with the Canadian Government directed toward resolving this situation and use all available authorities in an effort to protect the economic viability of the United States pork industry and to promote free and fair trade.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the amendment that I am offering today is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution urging the President to direct appropriate members of the administration, including the U.S. Trade Representative, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce, to aggressively pursue discussions with the Canadian Government regarding Canadian pork imports. This amendment is the same as Senate Resolution 431, which 42 of my colleagues have joined in cosponsoring.

Historically the United States and Canadian pork trade balances have shifted between the two nations. The balance of trade has shifted six times since 1960. However, the dramatic increase in the volume of Canadian hogs and pork products imported into the United States in the past 7 years has caused a great deal of concern among U.S. pork producers. It appears that this latest shift in trade will not be to the benefit of the United States in the future.

This latest shift in trade with Canada can be attributed to both the Canadian support program for pork and the value of the dollar.

U.S. imports of live hogs from Canada averaged 100,000 animals each year between 1970 and 1974 with only 30,000 head being imported in 1975. However, since 1981, there has been an increase yearly from 146,000 head on an estimated 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 head in 1984.

U.S. imports of pork from Canada have historically been in the form of frozen products. Frozen pork imports averaged approximately 25,000 tons in the early 1970's with a low of 9,000 tons in 1976. However, U.S. imports of frozen pork reached 27,000 tons in 1983.

The most dramatic increase in pork products has been in imports of fresh/chilled pork. These products increased to 93,000 tons last year compared to an average of 2,500 tons per year between 1970 and 1977.

Total pork product imports from Canada have increased 30 percent in the first 7 months of this year, compared to the same time in 1983.

The University of Missouri has estimated the economic impact of these imports on U.S. pork producers to be in excess of one-half billion dollars in 1982 and 1983, and nearly $400 million in the first 6 months of 1984.

A major reason for the increased growth in Canadian pork imports is the support programs for Canadian hog producers provided for by the Federal and Provincial governments.

At the Federal level, the Agricultural Stabilization Act of 1958 provides a mandatory support level for hogs at 90 percent of the previous 5-year average market price, indexed for changes in cash costs of production.

In addition, each Canadian Provincial government, except Newfoundland, provides hog producers with a stabilization program. The programs differ in scope and coverage, but they share a common goal of stabilizing returns for hog producers.

It has been estimated that both Federal and Provincial programs have provided total support payments from 1975 to 1982 of $266 million.

The strength of the dollar also has made our markets more attractive to Canadian producers. U.S. agricultural exports to Canada last year were little changed—up by nearly $25 million—while Canadian imports to the United States increased by more than $100 million.

Mr. President, our greatest concern is that this may not be a short-term problem, but may represent a long-term shift in trade that will continue to impact our pork producers. If that is the case, the matter deserves our attention.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on both sides—by the distinguished manager of the bill, Senator DANFORTH, and the ranking minority member, Senator BENTSEN. It embodies the major features of Senate Resolution 431, previously introduced on August 9, with 42 cosponsors.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to sponsor the pending amendment.

The large and growing volume of hogs and pork products entering the United States from Canada is creating additional hardship for financially troubled pork producers in this country.

Kentucky producers have pointed out to me that there is a 30-day quarantine period on live hogs entering into Canada. This quarantine effectively eliminates U.S. export sales opportunities in Canada. Hogs and feeder pigs entering the United States from Canada have no such restrictions.

In addition, the Canadian Government operates an income stabilization program that results in a payment to pork producers above market returns. U.S. pork producers, who do not benefit from any similar assistance program, view the Canadian program as a subsidy that promotes pork production and results in shipments of excess production to the United States.

A further problem is the strong U.S. dollar. The Canadian dollar is currently valued, in U.S. currency, at only 75 cents. This imbalance in currency value provides a powerful economic magnet for foreign-produced goods, including Canadian pork.

This amendment addresses the situation by urging the President, first, to negotiate with the Canadian Government on easing the adverse effects on U.S. pork producers caused by the recent surge in Canadian imports, and second, to use all available authorities to protect the economic viability of the U.S. pork production industry.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator DIXON as a leading cosponsor of Senate Resolution 431 which has been submitted as amendment to this bill and addresses the problem of hog imports from Canada. The Subcommittee on Foreign Agricultural Policy, which I chair, held a hearing August 9 on this issue. It was clear from the testimony that the dramatic increase in hog imports poses a serious problem for U.S. producers.

The numbers speak for themselves. In 1981, we imported 145,652 head of Canadian hogs. That rose to 294,933 in 1982, then to 447,391 in 1983. This year it is possible that hog imports could go as high as 1.5 million head. Daniel G. Amstutz, Under Secretary of Agriculture for International Affairs, indicated that pork imports could amount to 2.2 percent of domestic pork production.

Those of us who have been involved with various commodity markets know that increasing the supply by 2 percent can cause the price to fall substantially. That appears to be happening now. Hog producers in Minnesota are justifiably concerned.

Several factors have contributed to the increase. There have been strikes at Canadian hog slaughtering plants. The national and provincial governments of Canada may be providing subsidies to pork producers. This issue is being investigated by the Department of Commerce and the International Trade Commission. If such subsidies are found, a countervailing duty can be applied to the imports to offset the subsidy.

Perhaps the single most important factor has been the rising value of the U.S. dollar. Currently, a Canadian dollar costs only about 75 cents (U.S.). With that sort of advantage, it isn't hard to see why the Canadian producers find our market to be attractive.

This amendment calls on the administration to aggressively pursue this issue with the Canadian Government to protect the economic viability of the U.S. pork industry. We must make every effort to deal with the causes of the increase in imports. My subcommittee will be monitoring the situation closely. I urge all Senators to join us in demonstrating our desire to resolve this problem.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this is a good amendment, I believe I am a cosponsor of the original resolution. It points to a growing problem with respect to the importation of pork. I think it deserves to be included in the bill.

Mr. DIXON. I thank my distinguished colleague from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4345) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments?

AMENDMENT NO. 4346

(Purpose To Underscore Executive Branch Authority To Permit Certain Importations In Emergency Situations)

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. WALLOP, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], for himself, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. WALLOP, proposes an amendment numbered 4346.

Before section 244 of the matter proposed to be inserted, add the following new subsection: "nothing in this amendment shall deny the executive branch the authority to authorize the importation of tonnages in appropriate categories in excess of the tonnage specified in those categories, as may be required in emergency economic situations related to domestic market demand, including domestic processing and production, for pipe and tube products."

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BOREN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Am I correct in stating that I am one of the cosponsors of the amendment?

Mr. BOREN. The Senator is correct. I am certainly pleased to say that he is listed as a cosponsor and has been an original cosponsor and has been very helpful in the preparation of this amendment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am concerned about Senator BENTSEN's amendment on the enforcement of the arrangement with the European Communities on pipe and tube and that this amendment may result in artificially high prices for pipe and tube products which would adversely affect U.S. processors of high value steel products for our important oil exploration industry. Some of these processors use American materials and labor to produce high quality oil country tubular goods. For example, a domestic company has announced plans to build a $350 million backward integrated steel plant in my home State using the most modern technology available to produce and process seamless green tubes into finished high quality oil country tubular goods. I am concerned that U.S. integrated producers of pipe and tube which compete with processors which add value to imported green tubes might not sell this unfinished product to processors in order to avoid competing with them in the market. We need the maximum amount of competition, employment, and American value added to ensure a dependable supply of high quality product while fostering U.S. economic growth. I want to make sure that the term "economic emergency" situation is used in this amendment would ensure that such a contemplated plant would have access to an adequate interim supply of green tubes.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, my understanding is that the term "economic emergency" would include situations like those described by the Senator from Oklahoma. I have also discussed this issue with Ambassador Brock and representatives from the Commerce Department and they have assured me that they also feel that such a fact situation as described by the Senator would be included in the definition term "economic emergency."

It is further my understanding that this amendment is not intended to adversely affect U.S. manufacturing and employment or to promote monopolistic and anticompetitive practices, nor is this to imply that such practices are occurring. Indeed, within the limits provided in the arrangement, European Community producers are likely to continue to compete intensely for U.S. sales and contracts to major American purchasers of pipe at prices attractive to those consumers. This amendment will only ensure that injury to all U.S. pipe and tube producers and processors will not occur from foreign competition causing Americans to lose sales and jobs unfairly. If the Executive determines that the importation of green tubes is required to deal with these kinds of situations the administration will take this into account in the enforcement of this arrangement.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I congratulate my senior colleague, Senator BOREN, and also the Senator from Missouri, for their cooperation and assistance in addressing a very real problem. I certainly share the sentiments of my colleague, and I will not take much floor time to discuss this issue. But it is critically important. I have personally visited this plant. It is a plant that we want. We want to do everything possible to make sure they have an opportunity to stay in business, as well.

Mr. President, Tubular Corp. of America is a licensed processor in the business of converting semifinished, seamless green tubes into very high quality oil country tubular goods. These oil country tubular goods consist of oil well castings, tubing, and drill pipe which are essential to oil and gas exploration and production.

For their operations, Tubular Corp. of America has constructed a $50 million facility in Muskogee, OK, and began production in mid-1982. They currently employ approximately 500 people.

By using a variety of sophisticated heat treating, tempering, and other finishing processes, Tubular Corp. of America utilizes seamless green tubes in manufacturing oil country tubular goods which meet or exceed American Petroleum Institute standards for high-strength oil well casing, tubing, and pipe. These processes add approximately 75 percent of additional value to the original green tubes.

Tubular Corp. of America has recently announced that they plan to build a new self-sufficient minimill at a cost of $300 million, which would produce high quality seamless green tubes for their manufacturing operations at Muskogee. This new production facility would employ an additional 1,000 people. However, until the time this new minimill is in operation—which is an estimated 3 to 4 years—TCA must continue to purchase seamless green tubes as raw material from other suppliers.

Mr. President, this is where the difficulty enters in. Other domestic integrated producers, who also make oil country tubular goods, have either been unwilling or unable to sell high quality seamless green tubes to TCA. Consequently, TCA is completely dependent upon imports of green tubes for their basic raw material.

Unfortunately, import restrictions have already impeded access to major sources of seamless green tubes. The European Community producers have reduced green tube exports to the United States due to the United States-European Community pipe and tube arrangement. Because of the overall informal limitations on tube exports, these countries have given preference to shipping the processed and finished oil country tubular goods which attract a high value added price. Steel imports from Japan are also restricted, which is a result of an informal understanding between our two governments. Sources of supply from Mexico and Spain currently face antidumping and countervailing duty actions initiated by domestic integrated producers who compete with TCA in the sale of finished oil country tubular goods. While they claim that the integrated producers are suffering injury from imports of oil country tubular goods, these producers insist that the antidumping and countervailing duty investigations should also apply to seamless green tubes—which are not finished goods, but the raw material necessary for production of finished goods. Consequently, TCA's supply of basic raw materials during this transition period has become very precarious.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I understand that my good friend the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma has a particular concern with section 243 of this bill relating to enforcement of the U.S./E.C. pipe and tube arrangement. The Senator is particularly concerned with the provision insofar as it affects the importation from the European Community of a form of oil country tubular goods [OCTG] which some people call green tubes. Green tubes, are semifinished OCTG which can be finished by threading and coupling, heat treating, and other processes. I recognize the importance of this matter to the Senator and I am committed to working with him to find an acceptable solution.

The integrated producers of OCTG in the United States are justifiably concerned that excessive levels of dumped and subsidized imported green tubes give processors who use those tubes an unfair competitive advantage. For this reason the provision we have worked out allows the maximum level of green tubes to be imported—within the limits established in the arrangement. Only in the circumstances in which there is not an adequate domestic supply of pipe and tube for consumers, including processors, could the Secretary allow imports in excess of the arrangement's limits, and then only to an extent necessary to satisfy domestic demand for the particular product.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to express my appreciation—and I believe it is felt throughout the Chamber—to the managers of the legislation, and to the senior Senator from Oklahoma for what seems to me to be a workmanlike accommodation to a specific subject. It is a problem that could arise, and if it does arise, it can be resolved under the terms of the amendment.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for allowing me to be a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN].

The amendment (No. 4346) was agreed to.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I again want to add my words of appreciation to all of those who have been involved. The distinguished Senator from Texas, Senator BENTSEN, has been involved throughout all of these negotiations. I appreciate very much his consideration, his patience, and certainly I appreciate also very much the assistance of the Senator from Missouri in enabling us to work out this agreement. I am very glad to come to some understanding, and I appreciate the goodwill of all of those who have been involved.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, am I correct in believing that the amendment has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOREN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4347

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2 of the matter proposed to be inserted, in the table of contents, strike out the item relating to section 182 (relating to Acetylsulfaguanidine) and redesignate the items relating to sections 183, 184, and 185 as sections 182, 183, and 184, respectively.

On page 23 of such matter, line 10, strike out "for consumption," and insert in lieu thereof ", for consumption".

On page 66 of such matter, lines 25 and 26, strike out "clause (1)" and insert in lieu thereof "subparagraph (A)".

Paragraph (2) of section 243(a) of the matter proposed to be inserted, as amended, is further amended by inserting "the Secretary of Commerce" after "categories developed by".

Paragraph (1) of section 203(c) of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended by section 309 of the matter proposed to be inserted (relating to disapproval of Presidential determinations), is further amended by striking out "transmitted" and inserting in lieu thereof "transmitted".

Subparagraph (C) of section 771 (18) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as added by section 710 of the matter proposed to be inserted, is amended—

(1) by striking out "or B", and

(2) by striking out "or antidumping duty".

Subdivision (f) of headnote 5 of the General Headnotes of the Tariff Schedules of the United States, as added by section 211(a)(B) of the matter proposed to be inserted, is amended by striking out "of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "of the Tariff Act of 1930".

On page 38 of the matter proposed to be inserted, strike out lines 13 through 26, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 248. RELIQUIDATION OF CERTAIN MASS SPECTROMETER SYSTEMS.

Notwithstanding sections 514 and 520 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to reliquidate within six months of the date of enactment of this Act the entry of 2 mass spectrometer systems—

(1) which were imported into the United States for the use of Montana State University, Bozeman, Montana, and if the Secretary of Commerce finds that these systems are eligible to enter free of duty pursuant to headnote 6 of part 4 of schedule 8 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States.

(2) with respect to which applications were filed with the International Trade Administration of the Department of Commerce for duty-free entry of scientific instruments that were assigned the docket numbers 82-00323 and 83-108 (described in 47 Federal Register 41409 and 48 Federal Register 13214, respectively),

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this amendment would make certain technical amendments to matters which were approved by the Senate in the last 3 days as part of the committee amendment to H.R. 3398. These technical changes were prepared by the legislative counsel's office after examining our work this week, and simply would correct inadvertent drafting errors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

The amendment (No. 4347) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4348

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] proposes an amendment numbered 4348.

On page 3, immediately prior to line 1, insert the following: "Omnibus Tariff and Trade Act of 1984."

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this is simply a title for the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

The amendment (No. 4348) was agreed to.

MACHINE TOOLS

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I rise out of deep concern about a significant trade problem that is not dealth with in this bill, but merits our immediate attention. While many of us have registered either praise or complaints about the various trade actions taken recently by the administration, many of us on both sides of the aisle and in both Houses have a serious concern about inaction on one particular trade issue. I am referring specifically to the process under section 232 of the trade laws dealing with national security and imports.

There is a quiet, but extraordinarily serious crisis concerning imports of machine tools into this country. For some reason that I simply cannot understand, the administration has apparently decided not to face up to this crisis and make the difficult decisions to provide an answer to the question of whether we are committed to maintaining a machine tool industry in this country.

Over 1½ years ago, a petition was filed under section 232 of the trade laws suggesting that the national security was jeopardized by imports of machine tools and asking for some sort of import relief. That petition was evaluated for 1 solid year and a report was made to the President some 7 months ago. That report is now gathering cobwebs in the National Security Council. It is time that something be done.

The highest concentration of machine tool builders happens to be located in Illinois. If you want to see a graphic example of what happens to communities as a result of markets being eroded by imports, then you should come with me to Rockford.

More than that, however, here is an industry that has been found to be absolutely crucial to the national security. This finding follows a year-long intensive study by the Commerce Department. Moreover, it was also found that because of imports, domestic production of certain machine tools would not be sufficient to meet our mobilization needs.

Think about that for a minute. This is serious business. A Cabinet Secretary has warned the President that we may not be able to sustain a war effort if we don't do something to maintain a domestic production capacity for machine tools.

How can such a finding just sit for month after month in the very White House office that is supposed to bring these things to the attention of the President—the National Security Council? Something is wrong here.

And let me tell the Senate about some of these machine tool builders. Are they incompetent businessmen just looking for a Government handout? No sir, they are not. In fact, if one were to measure patriotism by the degree of sacrifice one makes for his or her country, these are among the most patriotic citizens I have come across. Most of the machine tool builders that I know are losing money hand over fist. They are virtually all facing major investment decisions. In the absence of import relief, they must either get out of the business, move their facilities abroad, or switch their operations to become importers.

Yet, despite their mounting losses, these people are hanging on as long as possible before making these drastic decisions. They genuinely believe in and understand the importance of a domestic machine tool industry. Many remember World War II and Korea when machine tools became a major bottleneck in the mobilization effort. They hang on, despite the losses, in the hope that they will be able to maintain a domestic industry.

It is now 18 months since the machine tool 232 petition was filed. During that time, the percentage of imports has increased dramatically. It is now approaching 50 percent of the market. Whatever recovery has occurred in the machine tool market has been absorbed, almost entirely, by imports.

My machine tool constituents are now at the point where no decision is worse than a decision which says no. If the administration is willing to risk the loss of most of the domestic machine tool manufacturers, then so be it. But let us get a decision.

Mr. President, over the years in this body, I have become a firm believer in deadlines. The only way we seem to be able to motivate action these days is to impose one sort of deadline or another that positively, absolutely must be met. As our own self-imposed adjournment date approaches, our level of productivity will skyrocket. That doesn't mean we will always make the best reasoned decisions, but at least we will make an honest attempt to resolve issues that have no simple solution.

The same is true, and perhaps more so, for decisions by the executive branch. Delay is bad enough, but without congressionally imposed deadlines on a number of decisions, it would be even worse. Indeed, of all the provisions of the trade laws, the section that is most in need of a deadline for final decision is the one that does not have one—section 232. Now most people in Washington, even those dealing with trade issues, do not know very much about section 232. That is because it is rarely used, and for good reason.

Section 232 is really a national defense provision more than a trade statute. It provides a mechanism for Presidential action in the event that imports of a key product are so damaging to a domestic industry that the national security is in danger. The only product to have been found to be endangered in this way is petroleum.

Because this provision is directly tied to the national security, it should not be taken lightly. And it certainly should not be the type of administrative action that gets bogged down in endless bureaucratic redtape. Yet, that is precisely what is happening today and has happened before.

In 1981, the ferroally industry filed a petition under section 232 asking for import relief. That decision took a year to process in the Commerce Department and then sat in the White House for the best part of 2 more years. Regardless of one's views on the merits of the issue, a petition arguing that the national security is in serious jeopardy certainly deserves a more timely response.

Perhaps even more ominous is the section 232 petition of the machine tool industry which apparently is languishing in the bureaucratic maze of the National Security Council. I say even more ominous because according to all the press reports on the matter, this is a case in which the Secretary of Commerce, after consultations with all the other relevant Cabinet departments, has found that the national security is indeed in danger and has recommended strong import relief to the President. Everything I have read indicates that the Department of Defense has concurred in this finding and recommendation.

So here we have two key Cabinet officers who have made a finding that the national security is in danger and nothing is being done about it. In fact, I would guess that the White House bureaucrats have this matter so throughly obscured that the President probably doesn't even know that the matter is awaiting his decision. It has been sitting in the White House for 7 months, gathering cobwebs.

I see the distinguished chairman of the Trade Subcommittee on the floor. I wonder if he has any thoughts on this matter. Perhaps we should consider imposing a deadline in the law on 232 decisions by the President.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I would be happy to respond to the question of the Senator from Illinois. The delay on the machine tool 232 petition and on ferroalloys before that are excessive. As we consider trade legislation during the next Congress, I intend to look again at section 232 to see whether a final decision deadline should be built into the statute.

It is particularly disturbing to learn that a Cabinet-level warning to the President about a serious question of national security cannot somehow get to the President, who, by statute, is required to make the final decision. I have a great deal of faith in the President to balance concerns about free trade against genuine issues of national security.

It is especially troublesome that a President who is as dedicated to streamlining Government and as committed to improving the national security, would be denied an opportunity to make a prompt national defense decision.

I must say to the Senator from Illinois that his leadership on this issue and his concern for his constituents is one more reason why I believe it is crucial for him to continue his service for another 6 years. I am well aware of the efforts he has made to get the White House bureaucracy moving on this 232 petition of the machine tool industry. Others have joined in the effort as well—including many Members of this body without any machine tool constituents, such as Senator GARN, Senator DOLE, Senator TOWER. These Senators and a multitude of others have nothing to gain politically from the 232 petition. They simply believe that this industry deserves a decision.

So I hope whoever is on the President's staff is responsible for this delay takes note that a number of U.S. Senators are annoyed. Whoever you are, the next time might not be so easy since further delay is likely to trigger substantial sentiment for building a deadline into the statute so that national security issues cannot be left on the back burner.

Mr. PERCY. There are an unusually large number of Republicans in support of import relief for machine tools, and I will state why. This is a genuine national defense issue. The entire House Republican leadership is on record in favor of 232 relief for machine tools. The Senator from Missouri already mentioned Senators GARN and DOLE. But there are many others such as Senator D'AMATO, Senator HEINZ, Senator JEPSEN, and Senator THURMOND, who are tireless advocates of a stronger national defense.

To be truthful, that is one of the most frustrating aspects of the White House inaction. These Members of Congress have expressed a genuine concern about a serious national security issue and the response from the bureaucrats who have been able to bottle up the petition is one of complete insensitivity.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri completely. I am not afraid of letting the President decide this issue. I do not see why others in the White house are so determined to keep it off his desk. I genuinely hope that this discussion does not get lost in the maze of dialog taking place on the floor in these past few days. If the Senator from Missouri has no objection, I am going to ask my staff to clip his part of the RECORD as soon as it is available tomorrow to send over to the White House, in order to demonstrate that the level of dissatisfaction in the Senate on this issue is found on both sides of the aisle and is running high.

Mr. DANFORTH. That sounds like a fine idea.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise to strongly support the International Trade and Investment Act, which is included in this omnibus trade package. This act is a constructive approach to our trade problems and fully merits the continued support of the Senate.

S. 144 includes the proposals for legislation on trade in services which I have put before the Congress for several years in separate legislation, this year in bill S. 1704.

Services trade supports a large employment base in this country and provides the potential for many more jobs. Our services industries are competitive. We are now the world's largest services trader and services exports contribute a substantial surplus—roughly $29 billion in 1983—to the balance of payments.

Our recent strong performance in services trade is no cause for complacency, however. While exports of services continue to grow absolutely, the U.S. share of world invisibles trade has fallen from 25 percent in 1969 to 21 percent in 1979. Moreover, this general trend is repeated in specific sectors such as banking, construction, engineering, insurance, and transportation. Other countries, attempting to build or protect fledging services industries, have begun to devise methods to stem foreign services supplies.

It is clear we must begin to work now if we are to guarantee a continuing predominant role for U.S. service industries in the world economy. We must lay the groundwork now for international discipline in the treatment of services trade.

This legislation represents an important step in the direction of insuring open markets for services trade. It sets negotiating objectives for multilateral negotiations on services trade and provides congressional support for negotiations; brings services imports clearly under the U.S. trade laws on unfair trade practices; establishes procedures for effective coordination of services trade policy within the Federal Government; sets up a Services Industry Development Program within the Department of Commerce; provides for close coordination with States in developing services trade policy and assistance to States on services trade issues.

I believe this legislation is crucial in our efforts to expand our export performance in the services sector. It is time we stop treating services as an afterthought and begin to consider what international rules would best promote free and fair trade in the ever-growing service sector.

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I should like to engage briefly in some discussion with the bill manager regarding the authority provided in this bill for negotiations with the Government of Israel on the establishment of a free trade agreement.

I support this authority and participated actively in discussions of this and other aspects of the trade bill in the Finance Committee; however, I do have some concern about the effect of these negotiations on the domestic bromine industry.

It is my understanding that the U.S. Trade Representative has expressed the U.S. position that articles which the ITC has found to be import sensitive will not be subject to duty-free importation during the period of the proposed authority, which expires January 3, 1988. If in the future there is a proposal to expand the coverage of the agreement, the ITC will review these articles to determine if they remain import sensitive. Further, the Congress would have to approve any new authority to expand the scope of the agreement. Could the manager indicate his understanding about this matter?●

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will yield, I should like to acknowledge the accuracy of the position he is taking. We must proceed carefully with regard to any tariff agreement; certainly industries that are subject to significant adverse economic impact from increased imports of the goods they produce should not normally be subjected to the elimination of duties on those goods; in this case, for example, bromine chemicals and certain agricultural products. It is my intention, and I will press this point in the conference committee for inclusion in the statement of managers, that as long as the ITC finds that certain goods are import sensitive, it would be inappropriate to reduce duties on them.

I would note that any agreement with Israel negotiated under the authority of this bill must be sent to the Congress for legislative action. I would further note that, as the Senator and I have discussed, the authority under which the Israel free trade agreement will be negotiated will expire in a little more than 3 years. As a result, any reductions in tariffs on import-sensitive articles, beyond those initially agreed to, could only be negotiated with new statutory authority. I make these points to make clear that there will be other opportunities for the Senator to press his concerns, as the need arises, and to assure the Senator that no further tariff reductions would be made without full congressional consideration.●

● Mr. PRYOR. I appreciate the comments of the distinguished floor manager.

The domestic bromine industry plays a major role in the economy of South Arkansas, particularly Union and Columbia Counties where about 85 percent of domestic bromine production takes place. Bromine production means jobs in south Arkansas and unrestricted importation of import sensitive products would significantly and adversely affect the economy.●

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am supporting H.R. 3398, the miscellaneous tariff, trade and customs bill because I believe, on balance, that the bill is in the national interest and because I am persuaded that adequate provision is being made for local interests which might otherwise be adversely affected.

Most of our attention has quite properly been focused on that portion of the legislation which authorizes the negotiation of free trade agreements with Israel and Canada. Inevitably, the prospect of across-the-board duty reductions with any country raises the possibility of adverse impact for some domestic industries. In this case, I understand that the International Trade Commission has studied the possible adverse impacts of free trade with Israel and has identified several products and commodities which might suffer undue market disruption should existing trade restraints be abruptly removed.

Because of the GATT requirements that the free trade agreements contemplated by this bill must cover substantially all trade between the two parties, the U.S. Trade Representative and the managers of the bill have understandably sought to avoid amendments to exempt certain items from negotiation. Instead, they have sought to assure that other special consideration would be given, such as a temporary moratorium on removal of restraints or a more slowly paced reduction in barriers.

A clear example of potential adverse impact is provided by Rhode Island's jewelry industry, and in particular that portion of it which produces gold chain. Israel exports 85 percent of its jewelry production and gold chain is the largest component of those shipments, holding a 60-percent share of the U.S. market. It was with those considerations in mind that I sponsored, together with my distinguished colleague, Senator CHAFEE, an appearance before the Senate Finance Committee last February by Matthew Runci, assistant executive director of the Manufacturing Jewelers & Silversmiths of America, based in Providence. We have been given assurances that the special problems of the Rhode Island jewelry industry will be given special consideration in the course of negotiating an agreement, and I have every reason to believe that these assurances will be honored.

Similarly, with respect to textiles, there is a mutual desire to avoid specific exemptions to this bill and to protect the interests of the industry by a moderate phasing-in of free trade circumstances. An Israeli agreement to subscribe to the GATT prohibition against subsidizing its domestic industry will add further assurance that future free trade with that country would indeed be fair trade.

Rhode Island also has a special interest in the bilateral negotiations with Canada which would be authorized by the bill. Free trade with Canada in fisheries products could be devastating to New England because of Canada's subsidization of its fishing industry. I am relieved to note that fishery products do not appear to be on the agenda of bilateral negotiations at this time, and I hope that they will stay off the agenda for the future.

Conversely, I am pleased to have Ambassador Brock's assurances that the negotiations with Canada will take into account the problems of our Rhode Island woodworking and cabinetmakers, whose domestic markets are already flooded by Canadian products but who encounter high tariffs when they try to export to Canada.

In summary, Mr. President, I must note that the Senate is being asked to take many assurances on good faith in the interests of approving this bill in acceptable form, that is without exclusionary amendments. I have every confidence in Ambassador Brock and therefore have no reason to believe that our good faith is misplaced. But I would note that any agreement negotiated under the authority granted by this bill must be submitted to this body for approval. When that time comes, we will each have an opportunity to confirm whether the various assurances which have been given will have been kept to our satisfaction. In the meantime, we should grant authority to proceed with the negotiations.

Negotiation of free trade, especially with Israel, is a logical extension of our mutual ties of friendship and comity. The United States already is Israel's single largest trading partner, and approximately 90 percent of Israel's exports already enter this country duty free because of existing but variable systems of preferences. Israel seeks to stabilize that arrangement and to assure her U.S. export markets, and we could hardly wish for less for such a staunch ally and friend.

At the same time, the United States has something to gain by the agreement, since over 40 percent of U.S. exports to Israel are presently dutiable. If duties are eliminated, we could expect a substantial increase in the volume of U.S. exports from the 1983 level of $1.7 billion. So on all accounts, the administration's eagerness to secure passage of this bill is understandable.

But I would be frank to say that the bill as initially presented posed a special problem for the State of Rhode Island. Although imports from Israel constitute only 0.5 percent of total U.S. imports, that small segment has been narrowly focused on Rhode Island's jewelry and textile industries, which already have had to bear far too great a burden of foreign competition. These two industries—Rhode Island's largest employers—deserve every reasonable shield from undue foreign incursion of their markets, and I would not have been able to lend support to the bill were it not for the considerable assurances which have been given on their behalf. I am reasonably assured that they will not be adversely impacted by the negotiations authorized by this bill, but, as I have indicated, reserve my right to oppose any resulting agreements that fail to take their needs into account.●

● Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I would like to offer my sincere appreciation to the distinguished floor managers and the Senate leadership as we approach final passage of H.R. 3398. This bill represents a positive and constructive response to the fundamental problems being faced by high technology industries in the international marketplace.

I am particularly pleased that the high technology tariff negotiating authority mandated in section 308 has won the approval of the Senate. This provision will enable our Government to eliminate its tariffs on semiconductors and parts of computers—a goal supported by U.S. high technology manufacturers of these products.

This section is especially important to my constituents in the State of New Hampshire. I would, therefore, urge the Senate conferees to ensure these provisions are included in the conference report on H.R. 3398—and look forward to a conference which will address the important concerns of U.S. high technology.

It is clear that the strength and vitality of the U.S. economy will depend significantly on the health of our high technology industries. We must move toward an international trading system that provides U.S. industries with the maximum opportunity to meet the critical challenges of the international marketplace and to provide for continued innovation and growth.

Negotiations between our Government and the Government of Japan in the High Technology Working Group [HTWG] have already resulted in a bilateral agreement to eliminate tariffs on semiconductors. The Japanese Diet has already voted to implement elimination of its semiconductor tariff upon comparable U.S. action. Yet until today, our Congress has not granted the President this authority.

As soon as reduction of tariffs has been negotiated, Japanese and American high technology goods can compete in an environment closer to the ideal of a level playing field without protectionist intervention. Manufacturers of computer parts and semiconductors in all nations must constantly innovate in order to remain on the cutting edge. In order to maintain a high level of innovation, large investments must constantly be made, yet interest rates in the United States are often twice as high as in Japan. Removal of the 4- to 5-percent duties on these high technology products would eliminate an unnecessary cost to the industry. Removal of foreign tariff barriers, moreover, would permit the industry to invest millions of dollars previously allocated for payment of import duties in R&D and new manufacturing facilities.

For the various reasons I have described here today, I would urge the Senate to seek the final enactment of H.R. 3398, including the high technology tariff negotiating authority present in section 308.●

From time to time we have flirted with protectionist trade policies and the almost inevitable result has been bad for our country and the world economy. The most notable example in our history is, of course, the Hawley-Smoot Tariff of 1930, under which duty rates were rasied to an all-time high of over 52 percent on imports—setting off a firestorm reaction with our trading partners around the world and certainly further depressing the already depressed world economy.

So while there is good reason to be alarmed at the recent drift in national debate toward restrictive trade policies, there is also a bright note in the growing support for the free trade area bill.

A free trade area agreement means an agreement to substantially eliminate all tariffs or duties and other restrictive regulations on trade between the two countries. In past years, such agreements were called customs unions.

The idea of establishing a United States-Israel free trade area was first proposed by the Government of Israel in 1981 and last November President Reagan and Prime Minister Shamir agreed to begin negotiations on this project. Because legal authority for the United States to negotiate such agreements expired in 1980, the first step is to adopt new legislation to authorize the negotiation of trade agreements. Senate bill S. 2746 was introduced for that purpose and I am supporting the bill as a cosponsor. S. 2746 has been included in omnibus trade reform legislation. With the eventual enactment of this legislation and successful negotiation of the agreement, this would be the first free trade area entered into by the United States.

U.S. exports to Israel are valued at $1.5 billion to $1.8 billion a year—exclusive of military trade. But, 40 to 45 percent of our exports are subject to Israeli tariffs averaging 10.5 percent. Clearly an elimination of these import duties will make our products more attractive and give us the opportunity to increase our export sales.

At the same time, we are facing increased competition for the Israeli markets from European countries. The European Economic Community [EEC] and Israel are phasing in a trade agreement which has led to increased sales from the EEC and a drop in U.S. exports. This EEC/Israel agreement will be in full force by next year. Clearly we need to act quickly to meet the competition, both to preserve our existing markets and to encourage expanded sales. U.S. industries expected to benefit from a free trade area agreement with Israel include grain farmers, computer firms, manufacturers of electrical equipment, office machinery, telecommunications equipment, and paper products.

The immediate benefits to Israel from an FTA would also be the elimination of the remaining duties on products they export to the United States. At the present time, close to 90 percent of the products we import from Israel come into this country duty free; the FTA agreement would permit duty free access for the remaining 10 percent. But for Israel, the greater benefits are in the future.

Under other trade agreements, the U.S. import share of duty free goods from any one country can't exceed 50 percent. Thus for certain goods, Israel is limited in what it can produce and sell to the United States to stay within the 50-percent limit. There are also dollar limits placed on the volume of duty-free imports. An FTA agreement would remove these restrictions and thus open additional markets in this country for Israeli exports. A few have argued that even though U.S. exporters will gain unrestricted access to the $8 billion Israeli import market, Israel will gain unrestricted access to our much larger markets. In his testimony, U.S. Trade Representative, Ambassador William Brock, offered the answer to that criticism:

> Some people may claim that this bill does not look like a fair deal when one considers Israeli access to our market. However, the fact of the matter is that the size of the Israeli market and economy effectively limit their ability to take undue advantage of the U.S. market.

Mr. President, I urge immediate passage of this important legislation.●

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this bill is quite complex, and I commend the able Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] and the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] in particular for so effectively dealing with its many aspects.

I support this bill, Mr. President. Many of the provisions are commendable. In fact, I proposed one of the bill's provisions to help a small company in North Carolina. I cosponsored a number of other amendments that were adopted. However, while I shall vote in favor of this package, there are a number of aspects of the legislation about which I do have reservations.

As chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, I have been watching this legislation very closely from the agricultural trade perspective. I was pleased by the approval of an amendment providing for producer standing before the International Trade Commission. I was pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment, which was offered by the able Senator from California [Mr. WILSON].

Specifically, it would provide an opportunity for agricultural producers to have a full and fair hearing before the ITC when the Commission considers trade disputes. The provision does this by changing the definition of "industry" so that producers will have standing to challenge unfair foreign trading practices involving processed agricultural commodities.

Mr. President, I can understand how proponents of the free trade arrangement feel it will strengthen Israel economically, and further enable the Israelis to stand as a front-line defense against Soviet aggression in the Middle East. However, I am sensitive to some concerns which the agricultural community has raised about the proposed "Free Trade Zone."

In particular, I have heard from producers of commodities such as cut flowers, tomatoes, citrus, avocados, and olives. The current trade balance for horticultural products between Israel and the United States tilts overwhelmingly in favor of Israel. In 1982, for such products, U.S. exports to Israel were $6.3 million compared to imports from Israel worth $36.1 million. Unfortunately, some of this imbalance can be attributed to export subsidies on the part of Israel.

I am pleased, however, to see that a number of the concerns of producers of these commodities have been addressed. An amendment added by the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON], would require that any free trade arrangement contain a provision against transshipment. Further, the amendment would establish fast track relief procedures similar to those in the Caribbean Basin Initiative. These procedures will provide producers of sensitive horticultural products almost an immediate remedy when it is determined that a section 201 action is likely to be affirmatively decided, pending a full investigation by the ITC.

Mr. President, any agreement with Israel negotiated under the authority of this bill must be sent back up to Congress for legislative authorization. Congress will have final say over approval of the agreement, and I know that there will be a number of us who will strenuously raise objections if the arrangement leaves farmers prey to unfair trade practices, or sets precedents which may be used in the future to threaten other domestic agricultural industries or, for that matter, our textile workers.

Included in this legislation is a committee amendment providing for a 10-year reauthorization of the "Generalized System of Preferences." The GSP affords duty-free tariff treatment to products from developing countries, subject to certain conditions and limitations. This program was authorized as title V of the Trade Act of 1974.

Agriculture does have some concerns about this provision. Many of these concerns were addressed in a letter Ambassador Brock sent to the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON]. This letter was reprinted in yesterday's RECORD.

I do find it particularly disturbing, though, that some of the nations which receive favored treatment under GSP use export subsidies and other unfair trade practices to displace sales of American farm products. Two nations which come to mind are Brazil and Argentina.

Over the past few years, Brazil has dramatically increased its share of the world poultry and soy product markets with the help of a complex system of tax incentives, subsidized financing, price controls, quotas, export rebates, and income tax controls. In order to stimulate its exports, the Government of Argentina has instituted a system of direct and indirect taxes which are rebated to exporters of such products as apple juice.

However, GSP does have a track record of building markets for our farm exports. The program has helped promote economic growth in developing countries, enabling them to build the wealth necessary to purchase our farm products. Two of the major GSP beneficiary countries are Taiwan and Korea. Both of these countries are among the top 10 purchasers of our agricultural commodities and products. Korea, I might add, purchases more than $1.5 billion from our agricultural industry annually.

Then, Mr. President, there is the serious problems currently faced by a leading industry of my State of North Carolina and nearly every other State in the Union: the U.S. furniture manufacturing industry.

In my State alone, the furniture industry employs 92,851 people. Total U.S. furniture industry employment is 275,000. In recent years this industry has undergone significant changes due to increasing imports. The growth in imports and its resulting effect on the industry were most documented in a recent study by the International Trade Commission. In 1983, furniture imports totaled $1.8 billion. Between 1982 and 1983, imports grew at nearly twice the rate, 26.9 percent—of U.S. production, 14.8 percent. Current statistics show a growth rate in the range of 45 percent between 1983 and 1984.

This industry is not dominated by a few large companies reluctant to make changes in order to compete with their offshore counterparts. It is an extraordinarily competitive industry comprised of 4,500 plants, the vast majority of which employ fewer than 100 workers. These plants, often situated in remote areas of the country, frequently offer the only nonfarm means of employment. No one company holds more than 4 percent of total sales, and profit margins are slim, since 1978 profits have averaged below 3 percent.

Mr. President, furniture manufacturing is not a high technology industry. Each piece of furniture demands a high degree of individual attention. Many of the furniture workers employed in our States learned their skills from parents or grandparents; their work really is an art. The finished product is considered superior throughout the world.

American furniture manufacturers are willing to compete domestically and internationally given a fair basis for this competition. Unfortunately, that fairness does not exist.

Furniture coming into this country is levied duties as low as 3.4 percent. Contrast this with furniture duties in our few major overseas markets: Canada, 16.9 percent; Mexico, 50 percent; Australia, 30 percent; Egypt, 100 percent. If this is not enough of an advance for the importers, all residential furniture items are eligible for Generalized System of Preferences—duty-free—benefits. For some furniture production categories as much as 75 percent of total imports come into the United States duty-free.

I am not here today to ask for special protection for the U.S. furniture industry. At the same time I must be reassured that this industry, so important to the State of North Carolina, is going to see an end to a trend in which furniture imports have increased by 154 percent over the past 5 years and U.S. furniture employment has dropped 15 percent.

I will be watching what our U.S. negotiators do to put furniture trade on a fair basis, particularly with our major trading partners such as Canada. I propose no legislation at this time, but I reserve the right to do so in the future if steps are not taken to relieve our domestic furniture from the flood of imports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the committee amendment, as amended, and third reading of the bill.

The committee amendment, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. JEPSEN] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] would each vote "yea."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] is on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 96, nays 0, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 3398), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer [Mr. ABDNOR] appointed Mr. DOLE, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. ROTH, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. LONG, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. MATSUNAGA conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to congratulate the distinguished managers of the bill, the Senator from Missouri in particular, who has been so insistent for so long that this matter be presented. To make an honest confession, I thought that even if we brought this bill up, we would probably never pass it, but we have. I think it was well worthwhile. I wish to congratulate the Senator from Missouri for a job well done.

The Senator from Texas as well has managed his side of this debate in an exemplary way, as testified to by the fact that not a single Senator on either side of the aisle voted against final passage of this measure. We were on the bill for 4 days. We considered 50 amendments and final passage. It is a major piece of legislation. I thank all Senators for their cooperation.

Mr. BYRD. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I also want to commend the distinguished managers of this trade bill on both sides of the aisle, Senators BENTSEN and DANFORTH, as well as the chairman and ranking minority member of the Finance Committee, Senators DOLE and LONG. This bill contains several important changes to existing law including a provision to assure the survival of the ferroalloy industry, which is important to the defense of the Nation and the economy of several States, including West Virginia. Without their determined persistence and very effective management of this legislation, there would not have been a bill. I congratulate them on having worked with a large number of Senators to reach an amicable resolution of numerous contentious issues. Revising tariff schedules tests the mettle of a legislator—it is tedious, extremely specialized, and potentially divisive in every direction. They have my compliments.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished majority leader and compliment both the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Texas.

We have not passed a trade bill since 1982, and this has been gathering amendments for a couple of years. It is going to be a pretty heavy load to carry to conference, but I think Senator DANFORTH and Senator BENTSEN have demonstrated that they can handle it.

It is very important legislation, and we want to thank the majority leader and the minority leader for letting us bring up this bill and complete it.

At the last count, I think there were 70-some Senators who have an interest in this legislation, and there probably are more than that since amendments have been added in the last couple of years.

So I thank the majority leader and the minority leader, and above all, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee and Senator BENTSEN.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1984

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I indicated previously that the next order of business of the Senate would be the highway bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 995, S. 2527.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HECHT. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, to clarify the situation, a unanimous-consent request was put to proceed to the consideration of the highway bill, and an objection was heard.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 2527.

Mr. DIXON and Mr. HECHT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I would have to speak, reluctantly, against the motion to proceed to the consideration of the highway bill at this time.

I am advised that my distinguished senior colleague from Illinois, Senator PERCY, will be on the floor shortly to join me. We are prepared to discuss at great length our objections to this bill, which are substantial in number.

May I suggest to my distinguished friend, the majority leader, that I do have some amendments here—only perhaps 75 or 100 at this time—but we are assiduously working on others. I think that, in due course, we will have enough to get across the point that my State is treated in a very grievous manner in this bill, one that is totally unacceptable to our Governor, who is of the opposite political faith to myself, and my distinguished senior colleague.

My friends in this place should understand that for over three decades my State has been suffering an extremely disturbing dollar drain. Last year, we sent a dollar down here for every 75 cents we got back. We recognize that that is bad economic business, and we came here to object to it.

I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the committee, my friend, Senator STAFFORD, who I see on the floor, and my warm friend and great idol, the ranking minority member and former chairman of the committee, Senator JENNINGS RANDOLPH. Both were kind enough to give a hearing to our distinguished Governor, Governor Thompson, and Senator PERCY and me. We discussed with them at great length our concerns.

I am prepared to lay before this body, for whatever amount of time is necessary, the concerns that are shared by Senator PERCY, Governor Thompson, me, and all the good people of Illinois about this bill.

I want to be very candid. I have no objection to the bill ultimately, if Illinois is protected in its rights, as it has been in the past, prior to the adoption of the offensive amendment in committee; nor do I have any objection, incidentally, to supporting the President of the United States and this administration, which has asked for a clean bill. If we have a clean bill, clean ICE, this Senator could vote for that. Or I could vote for the bill if the point of view of our State was accommodated—which is not that we want more but that we do not want to lose any further funds.

I have the warmest personal affection for the majority leader, who has a responsibility to go about his business here, and I am prepared to do that. I want both the majority leader and my warm friend the distinguished minority leader to understand that we in Illinois are accommodating people, and we would be delighted to accommodate our colleagues if we are accommodated.

So I am prepared, I say to the majority leader, to speak at some length about this motion to proceed, whenever he is ready; and I am told that my warm friend and colleague, the senior Senator from my State, is prepared to come here and be heard as well.

I wonder whether the majority leader wants to engage in any dialog about that question, or would he just like to hear my melodious voice at great length for the balance of the afternoon? I am prepared, of course, to talk about some things of concern to us.

I see my warm friend from North Carolina listening with great interest. He would understand my alarm. There are 23 States in the Union which, every year, send down more to this place than they get back; and as a fiscal conservative, I am concerned about that. My State has been sending down more than it gets back since I was a little boy in knickers, and it is still getting back less than it sends down here. We got back 75 cents on a dollar last year, so I think that when folks come here to cut back on States, they should not pick on States like mine.

I think my friend from Wisconsin, who is a cosponsor of my 90 cents on a dollar bill, would understand my alarm.

In the newspapers in my State, this is all they talk about. They rightfully raise a lot of Cain about it, and they do write a lot of articles about it.

Every time a Member from my State is up for reelection, whether a Republican or a Democrat, a Member of the House, or a Member of the Senate, he or she spends most of the time in the campaign trying to justify why we get whipsawed so badly. I just got sick and tired of justifying that and decided to do something serious about it, and I introduced a bill last week that would guarantee to the 23 losing States that they get back a reasonable sum of money with respect to what they send down here.

Why, I ask, should Illinois, which has 8.7 percent unemployment, 500,000 unemployed people, farmers going broke morning, noon, and night, soup lines in the city of Chicago, and people sleeping in the streets—why should Illinois support the country? How about us?

This bill, to which my friend the majority leader wants to proceed, contains an amendment that actually cuts back my poor State. It is like taxing the poor to support the rich.

We are eating awfully low on the hog now, I say to my friend from North Carolina—mighty low on the hog. We do not want a full meal. We would just like to have a light lunch once in a while. But, apparently, there is presently no inclination to discuss our concerns. I regret that very much.

Those here who have done business with me, I think, know me to be a reasonable man, and I would be delighted to accommodate the point of view of everybody here. But let me assure my colleagues that I am ready to go to the bill once we get finished with the discussions. There are several amendments I thought I would start with today.

This is not a very ambitious beginning, I realize that, but it will do until we get down to serious work.

The history of my State has been that we have been shorted for a long time. Now you probably will not believe this, but the second biggest city in our State, Rockford, at the northern part of our State, has a two-lane highway—I did not say a three or four or six—I said a two-lane highway to go south through Illinois. If you have never been in Illinois, I want to tell you it is a long State. From Rockford to Cairo is a good day's trip. You have to do it by two-lane highway out of Rockford. And this money being taken away from us is to make that two-lane road a four-lane road so it does not drive out into a cornfield like it does now.

Now, when you go east and west in Illinois, if you want to go through Decatur and Springfield on over through Jacksonville to Quincy, you can hardly get there. You know what they call the area around Quincy, IL? My friends, they call it "Forgottonia." They call that area Forgottonia. That is because they have been forgotten because no one can get there by car. When you take this money, if I let you do it, they are going to make me mayor of Forgottonia and I do not want that job.

So, I know that my good friend from Texas, for whom I have the greatest personal affection, will understand that my senior colleague and I do not want to be considered the people who gave a final name of Forgottonia that will last in the history of the world forever to western Illinois around Quincy.

Senator PERCY and I would like to see them get their road and we would like to see people go up Route 51 on four lanes to Rockford, the second biggest city in Illinois.

Now, I am glad to see my senior colleague here, and I know he will want to talk in a little while against proceeding to this bill, but let me say this: Illinois is a great State. Illinois, as you might know by the fact that my colleague and I are of different political persuasions, is a true two-party State with people of both political persuasions in it. In Congress we are divided almost equally, 12 Democrats and 10 Republicans in the House of Representatives in our delegation and in the Senate a Republican and a Democrat. Our State officials are almost evenly divided between Democrats and Republicans at the State level. And we are all in agreement that this bill is unacceptable to us.

I want to read you something: The provision in the committee bill will cost Illinois $30 million in fiscal year 1985 and $27 million in fiscal year 1986.

Now listen to this:

> Illinois interstate transfer funding fell by $136 million from fiscal year 1983 to fiscal year 1984.

Now, my friends, just think of that. Here is a State which lags behind the Union in employment. Incidentally, of the 50 States, with the exception of Pennsylvania, we owe more money to the unemployment compensation fund at the Federal level. We have been broke so long and poor so long that we cannot pay the Government what we owe them.

We are in dire circumstances, and you want to take what little we have remaining, and we cannot stand for it.

Now, you know I want to say this: Do you think ALAN DIXON is an unreasonable man? I want to tell you something. I offered an accommodation here on this bill along with my distinguished friend and colleague, Senator PERCY. We offered a compromise under which Texas and every other State would do better. It would not undermine my colleague's amendment. It simply ensures that we will not lose any money, not that we get more, not that we get one single solitary farthing more, but that we will not lose. It holds my State harmless.

Now someone would say, "Oh, I do not think we have ever done that before." Well, we did it in 1982 for just this kind of a situation. Just in 1982 we did it. The compromise on the formula for the primary program also lets States get either the new formula or the old one, whichever works better for them. That is what I am going to call the Dixon-Percy amendment. Is that all right with you, Senator, if I call it the Dixon-Percy amendment for now? Well, I think it is all right with my colleague. So I will call it the Dixon-Percy amendment. Now when you talk, Senator, you can call it the Percy-Dixon amendment.

This amendment would hold us harmless.

Now, we are willing at any moment to accept this bill if we are held harmless, and I think I speak for my distinguished colleague and friend when I say that we are willing to accept a clean ICE. We are willing to have a clean bill. That is what the President wants anyway.

Let me say that I understand that my colleague is a very busy man, chairman of an important committee here, and has other obligations and is a candidate this year himself, has some other obligations right now. I wonder whether my colleague would care to comment upon my views concerning this motion to proceed on this question.

May I ask unanimous consent of my colleagues that the interruption of my remarks by my distinguished senior colleague from Illinois not constitute a second speech under the two-speech rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DIXON. Then I will be delighted to yield to my warm friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois who has equal concerns to mine on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PERCY. I thank my distinguished colleague very much indeed. We have spent a great many hours together on this legislation.

We met recently here in Washington just a few days ago with the Governor of Illinois, Jim Thompson, and John Kramer, our State secretary of transportation, and we have had discussions with members of this committee, and I emphasize that in my view there should be considerable conversation that must be carried on in this bill on S. 2527, the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1984, not only because of its importance, but also because of its tremendous impact on many States.

I say to my distinguished colleague, who has been very active on highway matters, and is now the floor manager of this bill, the distinguished colleague from Texas, Senator BENTSEN, here is a matter where, though we have had differences of opinion, I believe we can work amicably together. If I could have Senator BENTSEN's attention for just a moment. Though I have had a difference of opinion with Representative PAUL SIMON on a number of issues in the contest that we have underway, the entire Illinois delegation is absolutely unanimous in its agreement on this issue when ALAN DIXON and myself speak on this issue, we are joined in spirit by every single member of the delegation and we are most specifically joined by the distinguished Congressman from the 22d District of Illinois because certainly he has in his district more roads, more miles than any other Congressman because of the size of that district.

We all have a stake as members of that delegation in seeing that the highway system of Illinois is continued. We have a program underway to which we are totally committed. We have the most devoted Governor. As everyone on the Public Works Committee knows, our secretary of transportation is an extraordinarily gifted man. He, working together with the Governor, has given us a transportation program and we have based our future economic development on that program.

I feel very strongly that there are certain things that must be said today and tomorrow and the next day at considerable length if necessary.

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the Senator yield to me? May I reply? I am not trying to take the floor.

Mr. PERCY. I am happy to yield if I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. BENTSEN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BENTSEN. For a statement and reply and if there is no objection, I will yield back to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Let me tell you what we are faced with here. We have my two colleagues, friends from Illinois, who have an amendment they want us to accept. In effect, what they are saying is, "If you don't accept it, we are going to filibuster." And if we do that, we have a long line of them out there that want to do the same thing.

In effect, they are saying, "We are holding a gun to your head and you are not going to proceed unless you take this. What we are saying to you is we are not willing to submit our amendment to debate on this floor and a vote up or down. We want you to take it or you cannot go ahead with this bill."

That is one of the things that is happening to this institution and that is one of the deteriorations of this institution, that you have to have unanimous consent to get things done; and I am tired of it. If this body is going to be effective, then we ought to stay within what would be considered the rules of procedure that will allow us to proceed and a majority prevail.

Let me say to my friend, I know what it means to be a donor State. My State has been a donor State for as long as I can remember. I am the author of the amendment that finally got it up to 85 percent for everyone. Your State has been a donee State, except for 2 years, and for a long period of time you have fared very, very well.

We have now tried to bring some equity in this program. I am quite willing to debate your amendment with you. I would be delighted to see the Chair recognize you and let you speak to the merits of your amendment and we will give our side of it.

We considered your situation in the committee, the committee with your party in the majority. What you have seen is a bill that we think is a fair and equitable bill.

We see a situation in the House where they are loading it up with projects for individual districts—pork-barreling it up to here. We are trying to bring an end to that. We are trying to see that we have a bill that stays within the highway trust fund and that will try to insure the Interstate System which is rapidly deteriorating. It is now some 25 years of age, a great deal of it, where costs of repair have increased very substantially. All of that has been taken into consideration.

But I can name you 50 projects—big ones—where a Senator wants to go back to his State and say, "I have got this one above and beyond what the formulas provide for."

I understand the motives, but I do not think we can settle for that approach any longer. I think it is time that we tried to put an end to it.

My friend, I am ready to let this bill go down. You chose the wrong fellow to take on. I would like to pull the bill down if that is what it comes to, because if we give in to this one, we will face a whole list of others.

And I understand your concerns. I understand both of you in that regard. But you have individual problems in any one of these States and I do not think we should give in to that kind of coercion.

I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. PERCY. I thank my colleague for his comment and his righteous indignation.

I would just like to ask my colleague what he would do if, on the floor of the Senate, we had a bill that would do to his State of Texas what you are doing to the State of Illinois? I cannot imagine——

Mr. BENTSEN. I will tell you what I would like to do—you are asking me—I would like to——

Mr. PERCY. Let me put on the record first what is being done. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. PERCY. Let me put on the record what is being done. Just picture this happening to Texas. And if you are angry and upset now, let me tell you you would be more so if you stood on the floor of the Senate at a time when we were about to put a bill on the floor that would do what is being done to the State of Illinois.

The interstate transfer funding to Illinois dropped 50 percent—50 percent—from $274 million in fiscal year 1983 to only $138 million in fiscal year 1984. The Senate bill compounds these losses by changes to the 85-percent minimum provision which would cost Illinois over $30 million in fiscal year 1985. In these two programs, Illinois' annual loss amounts to nearly $170 million.

That figure, I say to the Senator, exceeds 25 percent of Illinois' Federal funding. That is absolutely devastating to our State.

Now, in the meeting that was held last week, we offered a hold-harmless provision—let each State choose either the new formula, the Bentsen formula, or the old one, whichever suits it best.

No one is more aware than myself of the great need to extend the interstate cost estimate and the interstate substitute cost estimate. When Congress passed the ICE and ISCE in March, I was strongly supportive of the legislation. I mentioned during my remarks on the floor of the Senate my utter frustration with the delay in the ICE authorization. Let me just read what I said on March 2, 1984, on the floor of the Senate:

> The consequences of this delay go beyond the inconvenience caused to travelers on Illinois highways. It means that Illinois contractors who work on our Interstate System are losing millions of dollars, slowing the economic recovery and contributing to unemployment. It means that the Illinois companies which produce limestone and crushed stone—the resources which go into our roads—have been left with depressed sales, Illinois construction machinery firms, which make many of the machines used to build the Interstate Highway System nationwide, have also seen their income drop with the ICE holdup. In this sector as well, millions of dollars in sales have been lost and, again, the brightening job picture in this industry has been somewhat dimmed.

Mr. President, those were my remarks over 6 months ago. Today we are again considering the reauthorization of the interstate cost estimate, the mechanism by which Congress releases highway funds to the States.

Ironically, I find myself not in the fullest support of this bill because of some provisions within it which will prove very damaging indeed to our State of Illinois.

This is why Senator DIXON and I are joined together in a bipartisan effort, joined by the entire congressional delegation from Illinois, and are absolutely determined that this catastrophe cannot happen to us. In fact, while earlier in the year an ICE extension helped the Illinois economy, the passage of this piece of legislation may well hurt my State rather than help it. In fact, it will. I feel compelled, therefore, to further explain my position to my colleagues, and to my distinguished colleague with whom I have had the most amicable and friendly relationship through the years. We differ very, very infrequently. But on this one, certainly we have a very, very strong difference of opinion. I hope and I trust that when the distinguished Senator takes a look at what is happening to Illinois he will picture what would happen if Texas were in our boots. What would be the Senator's reaction? On this side of the aisle, what would be the reaction of Senator TOWER if Texas were in the same position that Illinois is in today?

Mr. President, section 122 of this bill changes the minimum allocation formula to include the prior year's discretionary allocations and formula funding in the calculations for 85-percent minimum allocations. The minimum allocation program guarantees each State a minimum return of 85 cents in formula funding for each $1 contributed to the highway trust fund. Under current law, 10 States including Illinois will receive funds in fiscal year 1985 under this program. Section 122 of S. 2527 will increase allocations to 11 States by a total of $212 million. However, two States will lose $31 million in fiscal year 1985, with my State of Illinois accounting for $30 million of that loss.

In other words, we have 30 out of the $31 million; the other States have $1 million, and we have $30 million. In fiscal year 1986, Illinois will lose another $27 million. In fact, section 122 would make Illinois ineligible for any 85-percent minimum funds for any year that the State used discretionary funding for highway projects. This is not fair.

I will remind my distinguished colleague that the point has been made time and time again throughout the State by Representative PAUL SIMON that Illinois is 50th out of 50 States in Federal funds. That is not true. His statement is wrong on a per capita basis. It is wrong, and the Director of the Census has certified to that. It is 34th. But it is still certainly not first, second, third, fourth, fifth, on through 33d. It is 34th.

Going back to section 122, it would make Illinois ineligible for any 85-percent minimum funds for any year that the state used discretionary funding for highway projects. If section 122 is passed, the cost will be $181 million in fiscal year 1985 alone. This makes it the most expensive single item in the Senate bill.

Mr. President, Illinois has made tremendous progress on our highways. We have worked closely with this committee. We have publicly commended this committee many, many times for its insight, for the incentive system that it provides; and we have been complimented by this committee and its distinguished members for the way that Illinois has developed its programs, facilitated and expedited, construction and always been ready to move ahead in connection with the letter and the spirit of this, the direction, of the U.S. Congress.

I think our leadership in the Governor's office and the State DOT has been absolutely outstanding. It has been bipartisan in the way we have responded to and adapted ourselves to the work of this great committee.

I would like to this time, to review for my colleagues the Illinois highway program planned over the next fiscal year. Regarding the fiscal year 1985–89 program—that is a period of 5 years now—major goals of the fiscal year 1985–1989 program consistent with 1983 objectives is to reduce the backlog of rough roads and bad bridges, and to ease construction unemployment. Program emphasis has shifted in recent years toward the rehabilitation and repair of the existing system, and away from new construction.

The fiscal year 1985 to 1989 program identifies those projects that the Department intends to construct in fiscal year 1985 and the 4 years thereafter. The new program funding and program emphasis will drastically reduce the backlog of critically deteriorated State highways to the lowest point it has been in many years, and will place the Illinois Department of Transportation in the position to continue this level of progress The more than 3,850 miles identified for rehabilitation in combination with the fiscal year 1984 program accomplishments will allow the department to keep pace with the crew deficiencies and reduce the 1,250-mile backlog of severely deteriorated highways to about 600 miles. This State transportation report lists projects in the State highway system totaling over $3.6 billion and another $700 million in local system projects which are yet to be selected by county and municipal State highways—reconstruct and replace 875 deficient bridges and construct 160 miles of new high-priority interstate and principal arterial freeway sections. This work is expected to generate an average of 26,000 construction jobs per year in the still hard-hit construction industry.

Fiscal year 1985 highway construction repair programs: a $900 million annual program for fiscal year 1985 is specifically identified within this report. This program will provide for the following: completion of 4 miles of interstate highway, construction of 38 miles of principal arterials, rehabilitation of 1,025 miles of existing highways, improvement or replacement of 240 bridges, and completion of safety and traffic improvements at 200 locations. About $150 million of this program is for projects on local systems. The fiscal year 1985 program is fully planned, and the Illinois Department of Transportation intends to accomplish the objectives listed. However, full implementation of the fiscal year 1985 construction program in six Illinois counties could be jeopardized by proposed U.S. Environmental Protection Agency funding sanctions. The Clean Air Act of 1977 requires all areas in the country that cannot achieve clean air standards by 1982 to implement a motor vehicle emission inspection and maintenance I&M program. Failure to do so results in sanctions being imposed by USEPA to limited Federal aid highway funds going to areas not in compliance. At this time Illinois has not implemented an I&M program. The USEPA is preparing to increase the proposed sanction noticed sometime in the spring to take effect after July 1 if a program is not enacted into law during the spring session of the Illinois General Assembly.

This sanction, if imposed, would delay or indefinitely defer about $100 million of Illinois highway projects during fiscal year 1985 in six counties which the USEPA presently finds do not meet Federal clean air standards. The counties are Cook, Du Page, Lake, Madison, and St. Clair, the largest counties in the State. While the USEPA has not finalized its criteria for determining which projects will be sanctioned, a general rule would be that a highway project on new location, or one which adds through traffic lanes, if located in the sanctioned area, will not likely be fundable until the sanctions are lifted. Those fiscal year 1985 projects that the department believes might be delayed or deferred are identified with the project listing.

Program funding: The list of projects I am outlining corresponds with the new highway financing package, and continued levels of Federal aid outlined in the 1982 Surface Transportation Assistance Act. The program will average from $850 million to $900 million per year over the 5-year period with about $725 million to $750 million per year for the State system. The projects selected for this program are designed to meet some basic goals for the Illinois State highway system: reduce the backlog of rough, narrow pavement; replace and rehabilitate critically deficient bridges; eliminate high-accident situations; increase capacity where traffic volumes and driving conditions necessitate; improve urban intersections and traffic bottlenecks; reconstruct major facilities where there is a demonstrated need. the highway program also helps stimulate and serve economic development, and promote jobs in the private sector.

The accomplishments are summarized as follows: first, interstate completion and rehabilitation. Illinois has the third largest Interstate Highway System in the Nation, and three out of the five transcontinental interstate highways pass through the State.

Many sections of the Illinois interstate highway, among the earliest constructed, are 20 years old and have reached the end of their service life. To repair the interstate highway is key to the States economy and maintaining Illionis' position as the Nations' transportation crossroads.

I want to point out to my colleagues that I have never been overly parochial in trying to look at national or international problems. We all have our view; we all have our ideas. But there is no one of my colleagues better qualified to judge the importance of Illinois in the transportation system of this country and in the highway transportation system than the authors of the bills that made this the greatest Interstate Highway System in the world. We have made dramatic progress and created whole industries as a result of it.

We have given people the freedom to move. My own daughter is moving back from California, having completed her school there, moving back to Washington, with a full truck coming from California with their furniture. That truck moved out there safely. They knew their goods and services would be brought there.

Highways are just an integral part of the economic fiber of this country. We built the economic system of this country based on our highway system.

Certainly, this committee is to be commended for its outstanding job. What if we do get a 50-percent cut in Illinois highway funding? What if we cut back? What if we lay off all of those people who are out there constructing these highways right now? What would happen to the rest of the transportation system of the country?

We are the crossroads of the Nation in Illinois, just as we have been the railroad center. We are certainly the crossroads.

And certainly O'Hare, the busiest airport in the world, what would happen if we suddenly shut down O'Hare? How would half of our Senators get to their Western States? Illinois is a State that is vital.

I do not ordinarily give speeches just on Illinois. I am talking now about the effect it has upon every State in the Union.

Certainly, the distinguished majority leader knows better than anyone that you cannot get anyplace many times without going through Illinois. It is the crossroads. Is it proper for us to backdown and cutoff because Illinois happens to have a highway and transportation system that has been deserving year, after year, after year of the money of this system, to make it efficient and to make it effective?

If I could take some of my colleagues across some of those highways today, some of those bridges, you would risk your life, even if you are on a two-lane highway.

You sometimes cannot get to Quincy in western Illinois. You are bumping along two-lane highways that are unsafe. You are going across bridges that are absolutely unsafe.

We are in the midst of a restoration now and bringing the Illinois transportation system up to where it will fulfill its role as the crossroads of America, so far as highways go. This is the wrong year to start to cutback.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. PERCY. I am happy to yield to my distinguished colleague, beloved colleague, the floor manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia who has personally done more than any other Member of this body in history to insure the highway systems of this country, providing I do not lose my right to the floor, which I wish to yield back at the appropriate time, whenever he would like to have it, to my distinguished colleague Senator DIXON. I interrupted Senator DIXON's remarks so that I would be able to begin my statement. I will come back at an appropriate time to complete mine. I certainly yield for an inquiry or a comment from my distinguished colleague on the minority side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, a comment, perhaps with a question. It will be off the subject matter for just a moment. The Senator mentioned Quincy, IL.

I will say that there are people who get to Quincy even from St. Louis. My grandson, 15 years of age, a few days ago participated in a golf tournament for youngsters not yet 16.

I will cut this out of the record because it would perhaps be inappropriate, but I am delighted he got over the bridge.

About 100 entrants played in that tournament. He finished third with a 71. So that is not a bad bridge that allowed him to go and hit such a score.

We can cut all of that out. I will decide that later.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I wonder if my distinguished friend would yield for a question at that point.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I would be delighted to.

Mr. DIXON. I am so delighted to hear about your grandson coming in third. I wonder if this Nation knows that your son, my warm and dear friend, Jay Randolph, who I have so much pleasure playing golf with from time to time, was at one time the undisputed golf champion of Egypt. Tell them about that. It is appropriate that a man from time to time talk about a fine son like Jay, who is one of the better strikers of the ball, I might say. I am delighted to see that he has passed it along to his son, your grandson, just delighted.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I turn from the Republican side to the Democratic side, Mr. President. Both of these men are friends of mine. I hesitate to go beyond my grandson's prowess and come up to my son, who plays very often with the Senator from Illinois. He says you are very fair in your conduct on the golf course.

I do want to refer to that tournament that he did win in Egypt. There is no golf course on land, but the golf course is in the middle of the Nile River.

Mr. DIXON. Yes, of course.

Mr. RANDOLPH. By the way, we have a river in West Virginia which is called New River, which is the second oldest river in the world.

Mr. DIXON. Older than the Nile?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I said second.

Mr. DIXON. I only ask this for information. It does not have much to do with this bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is why I am talking as I am. I know you want to keep us in this state of flux, so I will just add to it for a moment.

I do want to say, and this is the truth about that tournament——

Mr. DIXON. What year was that?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Egyptian International Amateur Golf Tournament. It was true that through good fortune my son did win it. But I know how sad he was because he said that this will not change international relations. But they would not allow him to bring out the challenge cup.

He indicated in correspondence to me, and I am supposing he is wrong, he said that he understood General Nasser had said that they would not allow the cup to go out with his winning it. He indicated to me that that action, whether it is true or not, caused him to be on the side of the Israelis at that time.

So golf does have implications sometimes. What is your handicap now?

Mr. DIXON. Back home or out here, Senator?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Here.

Mr. DIXON. Fourteen at home and sixteen here. So on the road, naturally, I play at 16. Your son is a much finer player. I came to know about his championship in the Egyptian Classic on a trip over some of our highways in Illinois from my hometown in Belleville to Carbondale-Murphysboro to play at the Jacksonville Country Club. Your son remarked to me that day that the roads needed some repairing. I suggested to him that at the first opportunity I would visit with you about it. Now that you bring up that subject, this would be the appropriate bill to do that repair work, if we can get our point across.

I know you have been more than fair about it. I just want to say that I look forward to riding on even better roads to future tournaments with you son in southern Illinois and other parts of the State.

There is nothing more heartwarming than traveling with the Egyptian amateur champion. Let me say that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Why does the Senator then not allow us to proceed with his amendments and other amendments after a bill is actually on the floor for debate? There are some 50 States, is that not right, which are involved in receiving funds under the interstate formula which are having vital projects delayed. I can say to you now that I do not want to be unfair to any State of the Union. I do not. I am only speaking now just for a moment of my intense interest in transportation matters in this country.

When I was a Member of the House of Representatives, I offered the first transcontinental highway bill, which later, 19 years later, became the Interstate System. I got nowhere in those days. States wanted to do it one at a time, hodgepodge, all over. Tom McDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads in 1937, opposed what was to be this major national system of highways. So I understand these matters.

I have never permitted myself, although intensely interested in the road system of West Virginia—where our miners drive not just 10 miles from their home to the operation in the mine, but they go 60 miles one way and 60 miles back home to work in the coal mines in West Virginia. So I know the value of roads. I fought for roads. And I have been a part of the Public Works Committee, now the Environment and Public Works Committee, for 16 years in this body. I have never permitted myself to ask for West Virginia or for any State that which was not a matter of equity between the States of the Union.

It seems to me that for the Senator from Illinois—and I say this very sadly but factually—for you to keep us from proceeding with a discussion of the bill when you have the opportunity during the discussion of the bill to bring your amendments for Illinois and then have a vote of our colleagues—not our peers but our colleagues——

Mr. DIXON. May I answer that to my distinguished friend?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Oh, yes; surely.

Mr. DIXON. Let me say this in the deepest sincerity. I want my dear friend from West Virginia to know that long before I knew your son Jay, who is my warm friend, and long before the people of my State were kind enough to send me to the Senate of the United States, I knew about JENNINGS RANDOLPH, as a kid, in the State legislature.

The contractors I knew, like Al Hoeffken, Gene Lamb, P.J. Keeley, who just loved you, told me all about you, how richly they admired you.

I say there is no one in the history of America who has done more to build the fine roads and highways and byways that have made this a great nation than the Senator from West Virginia, JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

But, now let me say this to my dear and warm friend: In this whole bill as it is now encompassed after the work done in the Public Works Committee, only 2 out of the 50 States are losers: California, $1.2 million—they can drop it on the floor and they do not look for it, they are so rich; and Illinois, $30 million.

I am going to say one thing, Mr. President. I did not graduate first in my class in arithmetic. I was not even in the upper 50 percent when it came to mathematics. But I know when there are 100 Senators in this place and only 2 are getting hurt that my mathematical chances on an amendment stink.

I did not come here to do dumb things. I may do some dumb things by accident, but I am never ever, on purpose, going to do a dumb thing. So I am never going to go, if I can help it, to this bill without having the assurance of my colleagues that they will take a suitable amendment, because I can count; 98 to 2 is real embarrassing when you get back home—real embarrassing.

Given all that, I want to say this to my very dear friend: I think in your heart, though you love this bill and want it to pass, you can understand my dilemma, because you come from a poor State.

I have been in West Virginia. I spoke in West Virginia at the invitation of my warm friend, who now has the floor with me. I saw the problems of West Virginia and I know what my colleague and my distinguished leader, who is here in the Hall, have done for West Virginia, what they did with all of the programs they have passed here for West Virginia. I am here to tell you that if we treated everything with the same fairness, I would be for a percentage return. But we are taking one single thing, highway funds, where we are getting treated decently, and hurting us and forgetting about all the other programs that are utterly destroyed.

My dear friend has to understand that where I come from, people say, "Why is it that year after year after interminable year, going back beyond which the memory of no man features it, we have been sending $1 down and getting back from the Government change—change? We are supporting the country."

There is one program that we have done fair in, the highway program. The first crack out of the barrel when anything can be done, they have gutted Illinois.

We are poor. We are losers. We are destitute. We are gettting back 75 cents on the dollar and in a bill that affects 50 States, you hurt one. You pick the poor relation.

You went through town and you went through the house on the hill where the rich folks live and you went by the cottages where the ordinary folks are paying on their mortgages and you went by the hut where the guy is eating soup, and you found the guy lying in the alley hungry and you took the money from him. That ain't fair.

Now, that is why we are raising Cain here. You know, Mr. President, let me say this: I have not been here long, but I have had a lot of practice. I go back to the Illinois House, the year that Everett McKinley Dirksen beat Scott Lucas. There are not many things I do, but one thing I can do is talk. I cannot pass my amendment, but I can say for a long, long time, in a lot of different ways here—particularly when I have my respected senior colleague of the majority party here, who is going to hold my hand when I get lonely at night—I want to tell the story.

I have a swell thing here I want to read in a little while that the Senate will enjoy. May I say this, I hope Galen Reser will tell my friend CHUCK PERCY how much I enjoyed his speech, particularly the part where he was reading right from the Highway Trust Fund. I thought that was very moving. I hope he will tell him how much I enjoyed it.

I have something here I want to read in a little while and in it you will see that there are all kinds of indexes and things and statistics. We will show you how States do and you will be really surprised to hear how badly we do. It will bring, I know, tears to the eyes of many.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt?

Mr. DIXON. Oh, yes, of course, Mr. President, always I shall yield to my warm friend, because I love you and everything you say here is a moving thing to me. You are, to me, a living legend.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am glad I am living.

Mr. DIXON. I am, too. I hope you live another 100 years.

Mr. RANDOLPH. They say never refer to the galleries, and I will not refer to them, but I will be honest by saying to them that I am 82 years young. I was not at the convention, you know, in San Francisco a few weeks ago and later in Dallas, but I was in the 1912 convention at Baltimore when Woodrow Wilson was nominated for President.

I love the way the Senator held his hands just now, in this appealing position. It reminded me of William Jennings Bryan. He was born in Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. A great American.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Born in Salem.

Mr. DIXON. They have out here on the statue Nebraska, but I say, and you would share my resentment, because he is from Salem, IL, William Jennings Bryan, to his great and eternal credit, was a great Illinoisan, not a Nebraskan.

Mr. RANDOLPH. They asked him if it would be all right, and he said, yes, if my mother and father called me Jennings.

We are very close on the subject matter of what the Senator is saying on the matter of doing damage to any State of the Union.

Mr. DIXON. Even here, may I say, we are only $30 million apart. When you consider the billions we spend, I appreciate the fact that $30 million is not small change, but that is all we are apart. So you and I will always be great friends. We are momentarily divided by a little money that we can address at length here tonight.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I see that the Senator from Illinois of another party has departed the floor. He did not find this very interesting. I thought it was a very lovely colloquy that we have been carrying on.

Mr. DIXON. He had to go out in the hall for a moment to attend to some business, but he will be back. In the meantime I am delighted to listen to what you say because everything you have ever told me in life here, in our private conversation, in the places we go together has been enjoyable to me. And I would be delighted to listen further this evening, and I wish you would explain your view about this.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the Senator. A year and a half ago I announced I was not a candidate for reelection. I did not wait until the last few months before the campaign in 1984. But thinking of the present problems across America, I am saddened by the fact, since I have been the author of the 26th amendment to the Constitution providing for 18-, 19-, and 20-year-old youth to vote, that they are not voting. We can agree on that, is that not true?

Mr. DIXON. I certainly do agree with you on that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; only 24 out of every 100 eligible voters cast their ballots for President in 1980. You know, it is a national tragedy, the failure of the American people to vote, either 18, 19, or 20. We have now the possibility of not 63, as in the Kennedy campaign in 1960. That was the number out of every 100 who cast their ballots.

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. But 20 years later, it was barely 53.4. And we can understand why Kennedy said 6 months after he had been elected: "It is appalling, the failure of the American people to use their ballot on election day."

Mr. DIXON. I agree with that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am fearful now that we are approaching the time when we will not elect a President of this Republic by the majority of the minority; we will elect the President by the majority of the minority over the rest of the minority. We do not speak here to the galleries, but I hope the world will understand, the people within this country, that we in the United States of America at the present time, of all the nations that give to citizens the right and responsibility to vote, there is only one country in the world which has a worse record than we do, and that is Colombia, South America. So whether we discuss roads or what is taking place on many subjects during these years, let us remember—and I know that my colleague will always remember—that we may disagree over apportionments, over amounts of money, over the distribution of funds, but we are mighty thankful, I hope, that we are citizens of the United States of America. We have some problems other than just highway problems to which we must address ourselves, if not in the next few weeks, in the next few months. Would the Senator agree?

Mr. DIXON. My dear friend, may I say to you that aside from our temporary difference on this one piece of legislation, there is almost nothing you have ever said in all the years I have known you with which I would have occasion to disagree. I agree with all that you are saying now separate from your remarks about this bill, and I would want to say what I have said so many times in private conversations with others, and I say this as a tribute to you shortly before you voluntarily leave this place, having served here ever since the 100 days of Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1932, I have never known anyone who was so kind, and considerate, and decent, and fair with other people. I have been in your company when you walked along the streets of West Virginia, here in the District of Columbia, and other places, and seen how friendly you are with every person regardless of their high or their low station in life. Of all the people I have ever known in my lifetime, I consider you as fine and decent a human being as I have ever met. I love you beyond words, and we differ on a piece of legislation which is not important against the whole scheme of things, but I want to say that the people of West Virginia, when they no longer have the great service you have offered them for over a half a century, will have lost a great, great public man.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The only way that I could be more generous than to say I shall be cherishing your words always is to tell you that I have tried to have the philosophy of my father, who was a candidate for Congress in 1916 and 1918. I would have rather seen him come to this historic Hill than for me to come. I say that from my heart. But I do know that he had one characteristic which I think anyone serving in either the Senate or House should try to have. He could write me letters, and letters, and letters, but always in the last sentence there would be something that had nothing to do with the subject matter of the letter. And so I clipped what he said in one letter and placed it below his picture: "Always remember the man and woman by the wayside of the road."

The only reason I mention that is because he used the word "road," and it is of course—we are all in good humor. I have been waiting for your colleague to return, but I think I best allow you to continue in the discussion.

Mr. DIXON. May I say to my distinguished friend from West Virginia, he is here sharing this time with us.

My good friend from West Virginia was just remarking about the fact that he was prepared to yield back time to us. May I say how nice it is to see you on this side of the aisle. You are welcome here of course.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will interrupt to say we would like to have Sharon in West Virginia.

Mr. DIXON. Well, did you not think that it was nice that Sharon came to our fundraiser last night at the Mayflower Hotel? It is always good to see the children turn out smarter than their parents.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Perhaps lighter moments do not destroy this institution.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague once again. I should like to start by simply indicating that it should not be a surprise to anyone as to what our position on this matter has been. Senator DIXON and I sent a letter to Senators SYMMS, STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and BENTSEN back in June. Let me just read the letter dated June 7, 1984:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 7, 1984.

HON. STEVE SYMMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR STEVE: We are very concerned about the impact S. 2527 will have on Illinois if it becomes law in its current form. As you know, the provision extending the reach of the 85% minimum concept has very large adverse impacts on our state.

We want to emphasize that it is not the concept of the 85% minimum that troubles us. However, Illinois currently only receives 66 cents for every tax dollar it sends to Washington, and the language in S. 2527 will make that return worse, not better. We would like a chance to meet with you personally, therefore, at your earliest opportunity, to discuss our concerns and to suggest possible alternatives that would mitigate the harm to our state.

We cannot overemphasize the importance of this issue; we view it with the utmost seriousness.

We look forward to hearing from you soon and to working with you to find a mutually acceptable resolution.

Kindest personal regards.

Sincerely,

ALAN J. DIXON.
CHARLES H. PERCY.

Let me read how the explanation of section 122 of S. 2527 in the committee report. It is page 25 of the committee report:

SECTION 122. MINIMUM ALLOCATION

Amends section 157 of title 23 to make permanent the 85 percent minimum allocation program. The action contained in this provision provides authorizations of such sums as may be necessary to meet the 85 percent requirement in perpetuity. The intent of the provision in the 1982 Act which created this minimum allocation category was to make it permanent, and this language establishes that certainty.

The provision also adds additional programs to the calculation of the 85 percent minimum. This will provide to donor States a return closer to 85 percent of the amount contributed to the Highway Trust Fund by such States. Currently, in calculating the return of 85 percent minimum to the States which so-called donors, only apportioned programs are considered. This provision includes all programs, whether apportioned or allocated, in determining the 85 percent minimum return. Three major categories are added which are Interstate discretionary, bridge discretionary, and emergency relief, Several smaller Highway Trust Fund categories shall also be included.

Mr. President, earlier, when I yielded to Senator RANDOLPH, I was summarizing the accomplishments of the program.

I can assure my colleagues that Senator DIXON and I, who have traveled probably more miles of highway than any other two people, except the road safety inspectors, would testify to the fact that these programs are vitally needed because our Illinois roads are deteriorating. They are heavily congested, and sometimes on a Monday morning or a Friday night, you just cannot get where you are going. There is just no way to get there. The only solution, probably, is helicopters, until we finish this repair work.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PERCY. I am happy to yield, provided I do not lose my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I come back to the subject matter that has been discussed in the absence of my friend from Illinois, and I understand how important it is to take care of many items of business on the Hill.

I see sitting in this Chamber ROBERT STAFFORD. I do not think of him as being of your party or of you being of his party. But I think ROBERT STAFFORD as a knowledgeable individual, as the constructive chairman of our Committee on Environment and Public Works. I want the RECORD to show that he would not bring inequity to any State if he felt it was there, and I would say the same of my colleague from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN].

We felt as a committee, and he as the chairman, that what we had to do was to bring a bill to this floor, insofar as possible, that met the demands and needs—and certainly the needs are there. We have been providing extra money, as the Senator will find, for replacement of bridges. We have not been derelict with respect to giving more money for bridges. We in recent years have increased the dollars for this program fivefold.

I just came back to the fact that the 18 members of this committee are fair. So far as we know, we do that which brings equality, not inequality, to any State.

BOB, you will forgive me for standing here and speaking of you in this way. I just feel that once in a while it does not hurt someone who works with another person, as I have with you through the years, when you were the ranking minority member, and now I am in that position, to just say that we do not bring a bill here that we think contains inequities. We think it is an overall bill, doing the best we can under the circumstances of the present hour.

Mr. PERCY. I thank my distinguished colleague for his comments.

I only repeat that I have taken the floor to commend this bill in the past, until we realized that the impact of certain parts of it would be a disaster for Illinois. That is why, in the spirit of reasoning, we have presented to our colleagues the very different problems we face and ask them to picture the situation and to put themselves in our shoes.

The old American Indian adage is if you want to understand the soul of the man, walk in his moccasins for 1 day.

I just simply say to my colleagues: For a few minutes walk in our shoes and picture what would happen back home to the people who would be thrown out of work, the tremendous costs that we would undergo if we were to reverse programs that we have set in being with confidence in those distinguished 18 members on the Senate Committee on Public Works.

I do not imagine it is very well understood outside the Senate the close working relationship that is necessary between a chairman and a ranking minority member. Sitting in Senator JENNINGS RANDOLPH's office in the Dirksen Building the other day, I looked up at the wall to look at the pictures of the chairmen of that great Committee on Environment and Public Works through the years, and the thought went through my mind, as I know it must have gone through my distinguished colleague, Senator DIXON's mind here, was the remarkable phenomenon, the number of years that the committee has existed—I do not know how many years covered—embraced only four chairmen of the committee.

But I know that for almost two decades the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia was the chairman of the committee and it must be a shifting of gears and a tug of war inside a person when you have been a chairman of a committee for a couple decades almost, to then suddenly realize you are not the chairman through no fault of your own. It is just the phenomena that occurred, and it only occurred once every 26 years in that committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will my colleague yield for just a quick comment?

Mr. PERCY. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I remember that Illinois Senator who used to sit there, Everett Dirksen.

Mr. PERCY. Everett McKinley Dirksen.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Everett McKinley Dirksen.

Mr. PERCY. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, JOHN CHAFEE, and I were in Pekin, IL, the hometown of Everett McKinley Dirksen, and I said: "John, before you leave there"—this was just last week—"you must go to the Everett McKinley Dirksen Museum on Congressional Leadership and see that living museum that has been erected there in memory of a truly great man."

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have been there many times, and he deserves what has been done there.

We came and were taking the oath of office on the same day, Senator Dirksen then a Representative, and myself. That was on March 9, 1933. You know then we did not all come in in January. The President of the United States was sworn in on March 4 and the Congress came in on March 9.

Since we are talking about many subjects, on that first day when the House of Representatives met, we selected Henry T. Rainy, of Illinois, as the Speaker of the House of Representatives. And I remember then when we came to the first vote, the Emergency Banking Act, it was passed in the House of Representatives without a single dissenting vote. We do not have that any more, apparently, do we?

But in that day the country was not on its knees; it, of course, was literally on its back. And we remember those days when there was unity, and I wish we could have a semblance of that with us this evening and allow us to go to the debate on the amendments that might or might not be offered, the Senator's amendment to be voted on, but to withhold the opportunity, I think, really is a strategy that I think could be better served by the course I have suggested.

Mr. PERCY. I appreciate that very much indeed, and let me just finish the thought that I had.

In looking at these relatively few chairmen covering many, many years, the remarkable thing was that the Senator from West Virginia has just taken the floor to laud and praise the chairman who succeeded him and I wish the country and the world would see how wonderfully well a committee works when the ranking minority member and the chairman have such utter respect for each other, never get into any partisan issues whatsoever that would in any way adversely affect the national good. And there is no committee that deals with more important matters vitally affecting the lifeblood, the economy, the future of our respective States than the Committee on Environment and Public Works, and the way committee members have worked together through the years is a joy to behold.

I am very proud of the relationship I have had with Senator PELL, the ranking minority member of the Foreign Relations Committee. We have a wonderful bipartisan working relationship. But I also know that the Senator from West Virginia has the highest regard for the relationship that this Senator has established with the committee, and I would hope that with this spirit of cooperation and amity we can work toward and find a reasonable basis for accepting a compromise on this matter that is fair to everyone and that will allow us to move right ahead with this very important piece of legislation.

I am happy to yield without losing my right to the floor to my distinguished colleague from Vermont.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I appreciate the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee yielding. First, I express my appreciation to my dear colleague on our committee, Senator RANDOLPH, for the very kind things he said about me as its present chairman.

I have been on the committee since I came to the Senate, and that now covers some 14 years. Senator RANDOLPH was chairman when I came to the committee. Everything that has been said about him of an honorable nature I certainly join in. He really taught me how to handle a committee. It has been a very pleasant relationship for me and we have been able to work through the years very closely together, whichever one of us was the ranking minority member and whichever one of us happened to be chairman.

I, as all of us do, regret that he will be leaving the Senate, but I hasten to point out what he does, and that is that he is not retiring. He is going on to other things, and I shall look forward to the fact that I believe he will be where his advice and counsel to this committee and this Senate will be available to us when we seek it.

I have not taken part in the debate thus far and really I am not going to at the present time except to say that, as Senator RANDOLPH has said, this is an important bill for the Nation.

There are about $2.1 billion which should have gone out already to the States in the second half of the current fiscal year and that fiscal year runs out on September 30 of this year. That money should have been distributed last fall, but somehow the ISCE, the interstate cost estimates, have become sort of a flypaper that attracts so many propositions, so many proposals, that we get bogged down and have very difficult times in getting them done.

They should be done cleanly and we should find some other mechanism for handling the various demonstration projects and other items that Members may wish to propose for their States.

I am distressed that we find ourselves in the position we are in. I hope that it may be possible, I say to the two Senators from Illinois, both my friends and both very able Senators, to find some way we can compromise this situation before we get through. and I will work toward that end because I do think that we not only must pass this bill for the $2 billion that should be out there already but all $5.1 billion for the next fiscal year which begins on October 1 for interstate construction should be on its way out to the States by October 1 and it cannot be unless we can get this bill passed.

So the 50 States of the Nation have their interstate construction money to the tune of $7 billion at stake here in our getting this work done, this legislation passed, taken to conference with the House of Representatives, agreed to there, and taken to the President so that money can be distributed where it should go and can be useful.

I beg the Members of this body to restrain themselves as far as they can from offering amendments which will either bog us down or cause this legislation to be vetoed by the administration even if we do pass it.

I appreciate the distinguished Senator yielding to me to make those observations, and I yield the floor back to him.

Mr. PERCY. I thank my colleague very much indeed. Again, I wish to reiterate that I wish it were possible for the good citizens of Vermont to know just how much good he has done in so many, many instances.

I have sat on appropriations subcommittees in the past. I have served as ranking member of the Interior Subcommittee with only 15 square acres of national parkland in the whole State of Illinois. I sat afternoon after afternoon—I mean afternoons late into the evening—hearing about the needs of all these other States—Colorado, Alaska, Hawaii, and all that. I had to do that as a Senator. That was my duty, and I sat there.

But I know how hard it is when you are thinking about your own State and your own interests. And we are deeply grateful for the amount of time put in for all of the States for the good of the Nation and our economy and our transportation system by the members of the Environment and Public Works Committee.

But, again, I come back to the fact that Illinois is the crossroad of America. If we do not keep Illinois in top shape, if we do not build, and construct, and repair all those bridges, those highways—two-lane, four-lane, whatever they may be—if we do not link up Quincy with the rest of the State and with the rest of the country, we are hurting our industries, we are hurting our economy, we are hurting what might be called the Frost Belt States, and they are the ones that have to help pull this engine of recovery back so that we as a nation have an economic engine going at a rate which will help all the impoverished areas of the world. We know highways are essential to job creation and essential to the economic lifeblood of a State or of a community.

So for that reason, I would certainly consider a straight ICE without the new Bentsen language, section 122. I don't want to respond in a general way on this matter but in a specific way. We could certainly start out considering a straight ICE without the new Bentsen language, section 122, or any other section for that matter. Certainly that would enable Senator DIXON and myself to move right straight forward.

Is there some way we can simply make certain that we move ahead with a simple ICE authorization that is going to take care of the needs of the centerpiece, the State of Illinois, which is right in the center of our system and is the crossroads of America? If we can work something out along that line, Senator DIXON and I will be the first ones to say, "Let's move ahead with this bill." Because I have said many, many times, it is an essential piece of legislation. But it must be right. It cannot be fatally flawed on one section.

I can assure my colleagues, I say without a shadow of doubt, having spent as many days as I have talking with the President of the United States about the problems of agriculture in Illinois—the problems of steel in Illinois—we have just recently discussed some of the unemployment problems. He has had a vivid picture of some of the distress some of our people have. They are unemployed. I think the compassion and the feeling with which the President spoke when he talked about what we are going to do to reach out for farmers to save them from bankruptcy, from foreclosures, all of that involves jobs and human beings. I know that the modest amount that would be necessary to restore Illinois to its previous level of construction would never be cause for any kind of veto whatsoever by this President, who looks to Illinois as his native State where he has his roots. Certainly, anyone who has their roots as deep as he has in that State knows that the concrete that covers those roots has to be right, has to be kept in place, and we have to keep that State moving ahead.

So I would like to just continue on, while my colleagues give thought to what we might do now on a compromise that will enable us to move ahead, with the fascinating, breathtaking description that I have been giving of what we intend to do in Illinois to resolve the economic problem of our State. We must keep the crossroads of America vital and keep its highway construction moving forward. And I know that my colleagues that are here in the Senate, and those that are glued to their audio systems in their offices so that they will not miss a sihgle word, will be fascinated when I continue on with new construction and reconstruction in a dynamic, vital, imaginative, creative program that we have designed in the State of Illinois to continue to be not only the hog butchers of the world, and the citizens with the broad shoulders, but also the crossroads of America that links up the rest of the country and glues it together.

So I continue by simply saying that, in addition, under new construction and reconstruction, the program identifies projects to construct about 20 miles on new locations where reconstruction on existing alignment is not feasible.

Now let me turn, before I get into further accomplishments, to engineering and other considerations.

The Department has reserved specific sums to meet anticipated expenditures that are not explicitly listed in this program document. For instance, engineering services. A considerable amount of engineering-related activity is required to bring projects to the construction stage. To accomplish this without appreciably increasing headcount, the Department must secure outside engineering services. Construction plans ready for future work by the Department will have been depleted by the increased size of the fiscal year 1984 and fiscal year 1985 programs. Therefore, outside engineering service——

Mr. DIXON addressed the Chair.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, did I hear the voice of my distinguished colleague?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I hesitate to interrupt my colleague because what he is saying is so immensely interesting. I have enjoyed it so much that I am almost embarrassed to interrupt. But would he mind if I asked him a question?

Mr. PERCY. Not at all, provided either one of us does not lose his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, you know my friend, Senator RANDOLPH, was talking about bridges, and I wondered whether my dear friend and colleague, within recent experience, has had the pleasure of going over to Calhoun County on the west side of the State—one of the smaller of our 102 counties. It lies between the Mississippi and the Illinois Rivers, as my colleague knows. It is sort of a little peninsula over there in central-southwestern Illinois.

Has my colleague had the pleasure, in recent times, of being over there?

Mr. PERCY. Well, I certainly have. As a matter of fact, was very recently that I was there.

Mr. DIXON. May I say that when my colleague and dear friend was talking about bridges, it caused me to remember the absence of one over there. As you know, the only way to get into Calhoun County is to go way north and then come down through Hardin into Calhoun County. And I always love to go to Wittmond's Hotel there in Brussels.

I wonder, has my colleague had the pleasure of going there on an autumn Sunday, when the leaves are turning color, and enjoy the delicious meals they have at the Wittmond Hotel in Brussels? They have excellent fried chicken, wonderful plump homemade pork sausages, all the excellent vegetables and other things there—homemade apple pie, the kind that President Reagan refers to so often in his speeches. You would know that sort of thing.

It occurred to me that we still do not have that bridge there at Grafton so that one has to take the ferry across near Pere Marquette State Park there at Grafton.

It is not too bad going over, may I say to my colleague. Late at night, after that wonderful meal, you come back and everyone, of course, has gone there and then you have to wait in line in your car for many, many hours to cross the ferry because there are only so many automobiles permitted.

I thought that while we are on this, perhaps if they, in their wisdom, ultimately give us the money we so sorely need, perhaps they would throw in a bridge there at Grafton. I know that my colleague will want to go back soon for one of those marvelous dinners on a Sunday. Maybe we can go together sometime.

Mr. PERCY. After November 6, I accept the invitation of my distinguished colleague for one of the most delicious meals that you could have. Considering that I got the message back in 1978 and immediately began, a day after the election, to tour 102 of the 102 Illinois counties, touring the byways and the highways, holding town meetings all over the State and have continued to do so for the last 6 years, most of my meals have not been in a quaint, beautiful restaurant by candlelight where I can look out and see the setting Sun. They have been in an automobile, bumping over deteriorating roads, probably at night, eating a Big Mac and a milkshake in the car while I am reading mail with a little spotlight coming down trying to keep up with my Senate work.

But after November 6, I accept the invitation of my distinguished colleague to have one of those relaxing, enjoyable evenings where we can sit and tell tales together. I appreciate the offer very much indeed. I will take you, and in return, your lovely wife to Mike Royko's Favorite Rib Restaurant. We just had Mike Royko's rib roast in Grant Park just last Sunday.

Mr. DIXON. Who won that rib contest? I meant to ask you that. I know they had the cookoff last Sunday. Mike Royko is of course famous for ribs. May I say that I personally am very proud of the way I do barbequed ribs. I had meant to mention that to you. I just take plain old, Open Pit barbeque sauce, put brown sugar in there, and a half bottle of Budweiser. I shake it a lot. You will find if you do the ribs just right and let them smoke well, then if you kind of candy the ribs—this is my formula—with the sauce, they are excellent. I am one of those who is very much opposed to taking the ribs, putting them in a big sloppy panful of barbeque sauce, and immersing them, or drowning them, so to speak. That makes them drip a lot, and they are not at all delicate, moist, and chewy.

One of the things I found, incidentally, that is very excellent with ribs, if you can do them that way, is the Symm's winery Chardonnay. That is very good indeed with those ribs. But other places that have good ribs, may I say, if you are ever in Chicago shortly during the campaign, my senior colleague might want to try the baby baked ribs at Miller's Pub, which are excellent. I would recommend them most highly. Carson's ribs are quite good, too. You will enjoy them immensely.

But getting back down at Bruce's——

Mr. PERCY. If I can interrupt my colleague, most of the Republican pages have crude and unusual punishment. Most of them work so hard they do not have time for lunch, and all but one have run downstairs after hearing this delectable, delicious epicurian discussion, interrupting the fascinating, stimulating discussion I was having on highways. My distinguished colleague has so driven them downstairs to the restaurant that they are not any longer devoting themselves to their Senate duties.

I think everyone listening to us—really what they are waiting for is not to hear about the delicacies of Illinois. But also to hear about the pavement, the concrete, the bridges, and the highways that we are going to continue building. So unless my distinguished colleague has any more to say on this particular aspect of the subject, I will return now to the subject matter at hand. But I would be happy to yield the floor anytime my colleague would like to have it because he yielded it to me in the first instance.

Mr. DIXON. I'm enjoying what you are saying very much. I hope you will accept my apology for the interruption. As the evening goes on and I think of other good restaurants or spots where the Senator, during his trips through Illinois, might want to drop in for a bite, I will call them to your attention.

Mr. PERCY. I thank my distinguished colleague. I wonder if I could ask my colleague for a judgment. He is seasoned. I said when he was up for election that the State of Illinois is fortunate to have a man who is as experienced as he is, and has for so long been in the legislative process. He has been a statewide officeholder, was Illinois Secretary of State, and served as a distinguished legislator. With that background, is it any surprise to my distinguished colleague that the Bentsen amendment finds Texas the biggest recipient? There is nothing wrong with that. I have many times cosponsored Dixon amendments, and Senator DIXON has cosponsored Percy amendments. It was no surprise to anyone that Illinois was the general benefactor of those amendments. That is the way the system works. But in this particular case, it would be all right if other States weren't hurt. I respect the right of the distinguished Senator from Texas to have his amendment in the bill. And I understand his reasons for so doing. Texas is a big State. It has a lot of highways. But we cannot have approval of his amendment at the expense and detriment of our State.

Is the distinguished Senator just as determined as I am to see that we find equity, we find a spirit of comity, and we find the fairness which the distinguished ranking member, Senator JENNINGS RANDOLPH, has described to the 18 members of the Environment and Public Works Committee? They are fairminded people. They certainly would not want to see the great State of Illinois hurt or harmed irreparably in our forward program of progress and prosperity by having a tremendous setback in this particular bill which otherwise is a wonderful bill, a fine working out of a transportation and highway program that will benefit 49 States. The problem is it has to benefit 50 States, have fairness to all 50, and equity for all 50. That is all we are appealing to—the better sense of our distinguished colleagues, and I would ask them to give consideration to how we can compromise on this so that we can move ahead with dispatch on this matter. Does my distinguished colleague feel that the position enunciated by the senior Senator is that of the junior, but most distinguished Senator, and also echoed by all 22 Members of the House of Representatives who are solidly behind the position as I understand it being taken by the 2 Senators?

Mr. DIXON. I want to thank my colleague for that inquiry. I am glad he mentioned the entire Illinois congressional delegation because I am sure that everyone here knows—the majority leader would well remember—the unity of the delegation when we had the major highway legislation up for this administration a couple of years ago. We had a serious filibuster as my colleague knows. Ultimately, we passed that bill, and a nickel gas tax. The RECORD is profoundly clear. Of the major States, the big States in the Union, the best support for that bill in the nickel gas tax was the Illinois congressional delegation divided with the Republican and Democratic U.S. Senators and the 22 House Members divided 12 to 10 Democratic, almost straight down the line. And we all supported that legislation, and passed it into law. The first State to be receiving punitive treatment, the first State to be penalized, the first State to lose money under the new bill of this administration and the nickel gas tax is the State that did the most, gave the most, and worked the hardest in the two Houses for the passage of the bill.

So I think that is a point that should be understood here.

The second point I would make is this: That when my——

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, would my distinguished colleague allow me an interruption?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. PERCY. Senator CRANSTON, before you leave the floor, could I address one question to you? It is very pertinent to what is being said.

Under the Bentsen amendment, Texas would receive almost $65 million more during fiscal year 1985 under section 122 of S. 2567, the so-called Bentsen amendment. That amount is $25 million more than the next largest beneficiary. Only 2 States in the Union—out of the 50 States—actually lose: California loses $1.2 million in fiscal 1985; Illinois loses $30 million in the next fiscal year, and $27 million more lost during fiscal year 1986. So here we are. Those are the only two States that lose. I hope my distinguished colleague would like to spend the rest of the evening with us on into the morning discussing why $1.2 million for California is important—that does not sound like very much. That would pay the Senator's salary for quite a few years. It is worth working for. Also it is the principle.

I love California. I served in the Navy out there at the Naval Air Station in Alameda. While I was at Bell & Howell as CEO, I had an office in Hollywood. We did a lot of our business there. My wife comes from California. Four of my children were educated out there. I love the State of California. I would not want to see them lose $1.2 million in this bill by this amendment any more than I want to see Illinois lose it.

I would not want to see Illinois lose these funds.

If there is some way to work this out, I hope the distinguished Senator from California would lend his considerable prestige and weight to the arguments of the two Senators from Illinois that really no State should be set back at this particular time of economic recovery from the recession, where we have projects which are important to California and Illinois. We ought to be able to work this out. As long as 48 States are benefiting by this bill, then 50 States, with Illinois and California, should benefit by the bill.

Would my distinguished colleague feel that it would only be equity that we may be held harmless on this and that we not have a setback because of our pressure and desire to just push this bill through?

[At this point, Mrs. KASSEBAUM assumed the chair.]

Mr. CRANSTON. I have not studied in depth the impact of this legislation on Illinois, but it is my impression that California in the long run will do well under the Bentsen approach.

Mr. PERCY. In the long run?

Mr. CRANSTON. The long run. California is concerned about the long run. This is a good bill for us in the long run.

Mr. PERCY. That would mean even more tenaciously——

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the Senator let me answer the question?

Mr. PERCY. Illinois will lose in the short run and lose in the long run. We just cannot allow that. No Senator would have any regard for us if we did not say that we wanted to find some way to resolve this problem.

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PERCY. I yield.

Mr. BENTSEN. California will lose $2 million in the current year. They would have made over $50 million last year and would have made $100 and some million the year before. So it comes off very well.

What we are trying to do is to see that each State gets up to 85 percent and take care of all the discretionary funds and all the demonstration projects to bring it all into the calculation. Your own State has done extremely well. Now that you are having to put all of those things into the formula, that is where you have your concern.

What I am suggesting to you is all we have to do is take it to the floor, debate it before 100 Members, and let us decide. What you are saying is: "No, we are going to hold a gun to your head and will not let you proceed unless you do it the way we want it."

I just object to that kind of procedure. I have seen enough of that in the Senate. I am tired of it. I do not think that is the way we ought to work on these things.

Let me give an example. The Senator was talking earlier asking: "What would you do on the situation if Texas had the same problem?"

Let me look at the discretionary amount of money. On the discretionary funds it is about $22 million for Texas, and that is a far larger State than the State of Illinois, a more populous State than the State of Illinois. But your State gets $160 million. You do extremely well.

Mr. DIXON. May I say, in connection with the observation of my friend from Texas, that the plain fact is that the overall examination of the treatment accorded States indicates that we are being treated very shabbily.

What my friend has done here, and I have the greatest personal affection and respect for him, is to deal with one subject, the Interstate Highway Trust Fund. In dealing with that one subject, he reaps benefit for his State. He has somehow persuaded his colleagues in the committee to join him. I have no quarrel with that, if he is able to do it. I understand the system, and I have to live with that.

But he has separated out from the whole Federal revenue experience one thing, interstate highway trust funds, and he has impacted upon that one separate category a formula that applies only to interstate highway trust funds and not to the rest of the great revenue pie that finances our Government, its institutions, and treated it differently from everything else.

What does that do? Well, it does immeasurable damage and absolutely critical harm to a poor State. It takes Illinois, which has received little in everything, and done a little bit better in highway funds, and hurt it. It separates out that one thing to hurt only Illinois.

Now I know that it does not even hurt California. I thought it hurt California, not enough to argue about but it hurt a little bit.

It hurts only Illinois. Think of it; 50 States with 1 hurt. The one hurt is the single, solitary State in the Union least able to afford being hurt. It is a matter of absolute statistical truth that Illinois is treated the worst, the shabbiest, the poorest of the 50 States on a division of revenue, on a return of revenue from the Federal revenues back to the State.

There are those who seek out that poor, injured party and stab it with the fatal plunge that kills it. That is what is happening here.

Mr. BENTSEN. Would the Senator yield? He made a point about what the Senator from Texas has done. Let me respond to that for a moment without his losing his position on the floor.

Mr. DIXON. All right.

Mr. BENTSEN. With regard to the Highway Program, your State has been a donee State for years. But for about 2 years of the last many years you have been a donor State receiving more than you have given. My State has been a donor State for years, sending to Washington far more than it received.

What this bill does is assure that an 85-percent minimum return should be guaranteed to each State. It is not just the part that is discretionary funds and demonstration projects. It is all the money a State gets in highway funds, not just part of it.

Mr. DIXON. But it is not just the interstate highway fund. What about the District of Columbia and the amount of money they get back from Federal funds?

Mr. BENTSEN. There are all the other revenue funds that are in this Nation. My State is a major donor State over and over again. We can quarrel about who is at the bottom end of the ladder, but my State will be right down there with you if you want to make that case.

Our jurisdiction is the highway trust fund and the highway bill and that is what we are addressing here.

You cannot try to make all the losses up in this one bill from what you might be getting from some military project, what you might get under Medicare, or some other program.

Mr. DIXON. May I say to my distinguished colleague, and again I assure him of my warm affection for him and warm personal regard for him, that the folks of my State cannot tell one Federal dollar from another. They just know their own dollars.

Mr. BENTSEN. I feel I am losing some of that warmth and affection.

Mr. DIXON. You will find me a loving person. On the floor when you are goring my ox, I tend to get mean. But I want you to understand there is nothing personal about it. It is this simple: We cannot afford this kind of a loss when we have unemployment as we do.

For my dear friend, coming from a State awash with oil, to tell me how badly treated you are is something that would be considered somewhat indelicate where I come from.

The plain fact is that we are hurting and out of all the people in the Union, you struck the fatal blow at us.

Why do you not at least hold us harmless? Why do you give 49 States more money and not even have the compassionate understanding to hold our poor State harmless? That is all. That is not an unreasonable thing.

May I say if the positions were reversed, it is the one I would most graciously undertake to adopt in the thought of accommodation.

My State receives back the least. My State supports the country's energy-rich States, the eight of them, by paying severance taxes to them all.

Mr. BAKER addressed the Chair.

Mr. DIXON. I see my favorite majority leader. If I do not lose my turn, I am delighted to yield to him because it has always been my pleasure to be displaced by him. I know that he understands that just as I love my good friend from Texas but hate his bill, I love the majority leader as well.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I thank the Senator. I am most grateful for his warmth, and his words, and he should know it does not make a bit of difference.

Madam President, may I ask this: I ask unanimous consent that I may be recognized for the purpose of transacting certain routine business and that after that business is transacted, which will not take but a minute, that the Senator from Illinois be next recognized and the interruption not be counted as a second speech during this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair. I thank the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

THE EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I have had an opportunity to confer now with the distinguished minority leader about two matters that require our urgent attention. The first is a series of nominations that appear to be cleared for action by unanimous consent, and the second is a bill to provide authorization for appropriations for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. I inquire of the minority leader if these items that I am about to name might be considered at this time by unanimous consent and en bloc in the interest of time? I refer to Calendar Orders Nos. 951, 960, 964, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, and, on page 8, those nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Coast Guard.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection on this side to proceeding in the manner described by the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be stated.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PUBLIC BROADCASTING AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, there is one other matter, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting bill. Is the minority leader prepared to proceed on that unanimous consent request?

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, there is no objection on this side.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar No. 90, S. 607.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the bill.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 607) to amend the Communications Act of 1934.

There are authorized to be appropriated for the administration of this Act by the Commission $76,900,000 for each of the fiscal years 1982 and 1983, and $88,900,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985. Sums authorized by the preceding sentence shall be in addition to such sums as may be necessary for increases resulting from adjustments in salary, pay, retirement, other employee benefits required by law, and other nondiscretionary costs.".

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, is there a committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct. There is a committee amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair submit the committee amendment for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Madam President, I have offered an amendment which represents our response to the President's veto of the public broadcasting authorization bill.

Ever since the veto, we have been working with the administration to see if we could arrive at a reasonable compromise on funding. Although we have been willing to trim our original figures a bit, the White House has been unwilling to move upward from the figures the President indicated he would support, the so-called Oxley figures.

Because it is important to pass legislation ensuring adequate forward funding for public broadcasting before the end of this session, we are moving ahead with what we believe are reasonable funding levels, in spite of our lack of agreement with the White House. Our compromise figures are the minimum levels that we believe will allow the public broadcasters to provide the kind of quality programming we all expect.

	Original bill	Compromise amendment	Oxley figures
CPB funding:
Fiscal year 1978	238	200	186
Fiscal year 1988	253	225	214
Fiscal year 1989	270	250	246
Public broadcasting facilities funding:
Fiscal year 1985	50	25	14
Fiscal year 1986	53	35	16
Fiscal year 1987	56	40	18

The handful of substantive amendments from the original bill, not a part of the President's veto, and not the subject of any dispute, are retained in this amendment.

Madam President, I ask all of my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute (No. 4349) was agreed to.

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, in August, both the Senate and the House recognized the importance of our public broadcasting system and passed with overwhelming support S. 2436, legislation reauthorizing the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989 at levels of $238 million, $253 million, and $270 million respectively and the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987 at levels of $50 million, $53 million, and $56 million respectively. The sponsors of the legislation, led by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Communications Subcommittee, Senator GOLDWATER, arrived at these funding levels after careful consideration of the needs and role of public broadcasting in light of the dynamic telecommunications marketplace and in light of the budgetary problems we are now facing. The funds authorized by this legislation provided the American public with a sound and productive public broadcasting system while at the same time not wasting a dime of the taxpayer's money. We strongly believed that this view was shared by almost all of those involved with overseeing public broadcasting. It seems we were wrong.

To my extreme disappointment, the President vetoed this bill. He could have chosen to veto some other program where it would have made a significant difference in solving our budget dilemma. Where was he when the Senate considered the budget freeze a few months ago? Instead, he has chosen to make his stand here where only a few million dollars are involved. In fact, the amount in dispute is less than one day's interest cost on the public debt. What makes this veto even more incredible is that the need for these dollars is clearly demonstrated and there is overwhelming public support for spending them in this fashion.

Since the President's veto, Senator GOLDWATER, myself, and others have tried to reach a compromise agreement with the White House. But despite our best efforts, no compromise has been reached. All we are able to get from the White House are offers of funding levels that are far below those suggested by the President in his veto message. It is because the White House has been so unreasonable on this issue that we are now moving ahead with new authorization legislation.

This new legislation reauthorizes the Corporation for Public Broadcasting at $200 million for fiscal year 1987, $225 million for fiscal year 1988, and $250 million for fiscal year 1989 and the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program at $25 million for fiscal year 1985, $35 million for fiscal year 1986, and $40 million for fiscal year 1987. The total amount of funding over the 3 years is over $125 million below the levels contained in the bill we passed in August and only $81 million above the levels suggested by the President in his veto message. We have come more than half way, yet the White House's only move has been backward.

I believe these new levels of funding should allow us to have a sound public broadcasting system, although one without the potential that we originally intended. I strongly urge my colleagues to support them.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments? If there are no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 607), as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 607

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Public Broadcasting Amendments Act of 1984".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR PUBLIC BROADCASTING

SEC. 3. (a) Section 396(k)(1)(C) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 396(k)(1)(C) is amended—

(1) by striking "and 1986" and inserting in lieu thereof "1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989";

(2) by striking "and" after 1985,"; and

(3) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", $200,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $225,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $250,000,000 for fiscal year 1989".

(b) Section 396(k)(3)(A)(i)(II) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 396(k)(3)(A)(i)(II)) is amended by striking "research, training, technical assistance, engineering, instructional support, payment of interest on indebtedness,".

SEC. 5. Section 396(k) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 396(k)) is amended by striking paragraph (8) and by redesignating paragraphs (9) and (10) as paragraphs (8) and (9), respectively.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1984

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I suggest that we continue with this scintillating debate a little while longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIXON. I thank the Chair. It is always a pleasure to be on this floor when the Senator from Kansas is presiding. I am delighted to have the opportunity to educate my friends in Kansas about the problem that the Senator from Illinois thinks the people of Illinois face at this point in time.

Again, I say it is important for all to understand that those of us in Illinois hold no grievance against anybody else's position here. I have no trouble with the good attempt of the good Senator from Texas to obtain more for the highway system of Texas. That is the function of a Senator. That is in the finest sense of performance of duty as a U.S. Senator, to serve the interests of one's State. I congratulate the Senator on doing that. I am happy for the other 48 States that are doing well, too.

But surely those who are here would understand the concerns that my colleague, Senator PERCY, and I have for Illinois, the lone loser. It is sort of like the Lone Ranger. We have been losing so long, we are used to losing. But we have a ball club in Chicago, the Cubs, and they have been losing for years, and years, and years. People cannot remember when the Cubs last won. We have had some pretty bad ballplayers over the years for the Cubs. But I just want to say to you tonight in this Chamber that the Cubs may end up being a winner after all because the magic number for the Cubs is three and, should they prosper over the weekend, it is entirely conceivable people will think differently of the Chicago Cubs than they have in the past. It will be difficult for those of us in the amenable urban society to adjust to that because part of the fun of that society has been to talk about the Cubs and their past difficulties, but it looks very good for the Cubs. All that my colleague, the senior Senator, and I want is for it to look at least as good for Illinois in this bill as it does for the rest of the Nation.

I recently introduced a bill, and if my colleague from Texas would support that concept, I think we could get together. The bill I introduced is known as the State Minimum Return Act of 1984. This bill would correct imbalances in the amount of Federal spending that certain States receive in return for the tax dollars they sent to Washington, but that is across the board. It is not just picking out interstate highway trust funds and saying we will just do it here. No, it is a bill of equity. It is a bill of fairness. It is a bill that applies to all revenue programs of the Government across the board.

I want to assure my colleagues and the taxpayers of the country that that bill does not require any increased spending. All that the State Minimum Return Act of 1984 does is to reallocate funds among States within existing spending limits so as not to increase the deficit. I have quite a few amendments, 175 I think, that will accomplish that purpose if they are all adopted. We will do those in chronological order at the appropriate time.

That bill, as I say, in my view, Madam President, addresses a very important issue which has caused real hardship in my State and in many other States, principally in the Midwest and Northeast. We in the Midwest and Northeast are kind of the unlucky folks.

I can recall in the depths of the Great Depression other regions of the country had problems, particularly the South, and President Franklin Delano Roosevelt came to the Congress with programs to help those parts of the country. Without regard to regionalism, men like my distinguished friend from West Virginia, Senator JENNINGS RANDOLPH and others, helped that region of the country. But the Northeast and Midwest have been losers for generations now. Nobody cares at all, it would appear, genuinely do not care, I do not think. Perhaps if enough is said about it now people will care more.

We have had much worse years than last year, a whole lot of them. However, last year, in 1983, Illinois received only 75 cents in Federal spending for each dollar it sent to the Federal Government. Believe it or not, my friends, for the past 30 years, this ratio has been similarly low.

Now, I am going to argue that losing a quarter on every dollar is not a good deal to begin with, but when you think in terms of the Federal budget, my friends, Illinois and other States are sending billions of dollars to Washington every year that they just plain never see again. It is a dead loss.

Many of these disadvantaged States were among those that suffered most during the recent recession. They cannot afford to lose billions of dollars right now. I would argue that Government policy should not make a bad situation worse. I think that is a simple truth. If we pass this bill in the form it has come to the floor, what we are doing is permitting Government policy to make a bad situation worse. It is just that simple. With full knowledge of what is happening, we are saying "So what?"

I say Government policy should not make a bad situation worse. I would argue that, rather, the Government ought to lend a hand to States whose economies have needed the most help in the recent past. For the past 3½ years I have worked with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to help correct this loss of funds by adjusting spending for specific Federal programs. As cochairman of the Northeast-Midwest Coalition, I have pursued many efforts to get a better deal for needy States. While these efforts have helped create some jobs, and have helped a little bit in Illinois, they have not been sufficient to stop the continual flow of funds from these disadvantaged States to other States with healthier economies.

In fiscal year 1982, States that received less than 90 cents in spending for each tax dollar—now, listen to this—those States that received less than 90 cents in spending for each tax dollar were shortchanged a total of $54 billion by the Federal Government. Those loser States, including mine, were shortchanged $54 billion in 1982, and we have a bill here that short changes one State, mine, $30 million. Illinois alone in 1982 paid out $12.5 billion more than it received in spending. Just think, in the last recorded year we paid to the Government $12.5 billion more than we got back.

Now, that is a lot of money, even if you are a big State, even if you spread it around. Why would you visit upon a State that does that an additional penalty in a bill of this kind? That is why I say, Madam President, we need a comprehensive approach to solve this problem, a fair approach, an equitable approach. We cannot allow as a State these vast sums of money to be drained out every year after every interminable year.

Madam President, I have attached to this statement, incidentally, a research report, which I will be glad to share with you this evening, that I have had prepared on the problem of these Federal dollar outflows. It is an analysis by respected economists and others that I think will enlighten my colleagues about the unfairness of this situation.

This report analyzes the source of these outflows, highlighting the low level of defense contracts. There is another example where my colleague in his rich State does well, in the area of defense contracts. But we are terribly disadvantaged. And it is true to a lesser extent in grant programs for our State.

This report examines the consequences of these outflows for our State. The economies, Madam President, of States sending more money to Washington in taxes than they receive in spending have low-growth rates. Why would the economies of those States not have low-growth rates? They send all their money down here and they get none of it back. These rates result in part from low levels of the types of Federal funds which generate growth, and that again is grants and contracts.

The bill I introduced last week would adjust Federal spending in the categories of Government contracts and grant programs. You might be surprised to know that contracts and grants account for $250 billion of the Federal budget—they did in fiscal year 1983 at least—and are the chief sources of imbalances among the States.

These spending categories help stimulate economic growth, creating jobs and spurring private investment. They have a ripple effect in the economy of a community. The award of a Government contract not only creates jobs in the company in which the work is performed, it also increases business, creates jobs in local companies, and creates jobs supplying goods to the contractor. In the area of Federal grants to State and local governments, the State Minimum Return Act I am talking about will increase by 10 percent the share of moneys going to disadvantaged States.

Now, that would be fair if we took the whole ball game instead of just interstate highway trust funds. That would be fair. It would be equitable. It would treat all parts of the country in an evenhanded way. For example, if Illinois received an average of $100 million of a $1 billion highway program or 10 percent, it would receive $110 million or 11 percent in the first year after the bill was enacted. But that would be as part of a whole scheme for all of the program, not just for highway funds. That would mean an additional $10 million to my State to repair unsafe bridges, to repave highways, and to give jobs to Illinoisans to work on those projects. That would be fair.

Instead of that, this bill takes from a State that is in desperate economic circumstances. This bill takes from a State that suffers grave hardships. This bill takes from a State which supports Federal institutions to a greater percentage than any large major State of the country, $30 million.

It might not seem like a lot of money, particularly when you have a $1.5 trillion national debt. But $30 million will build some highways; $30 million will put some people to work; $30 million will help some folks get up in the morning, let mom fill the lunch bucket with a sandwich, an apple, and a piece of cake, and send them off down the road to work somewhere.

Since there usually are more projects that meet eligibility requirements for granting programs than there is funding available, this provision will allow disadvantaged States to receive a greater portion of these eligible projects.

I talked earlier about Rockford. Rockford is the second biggest city in my State, up in northern Illinois, about as far north as you can go in Illinois.

I said earlier that it is a long State. It is a good drive from Rockford, in the northern part of Illinois, to Cairo, in the southern part of my State. Both towns are having a tough time.

Believe it or not, you talk about tough times: Down in Cairo, half the people do not have jobs. It is tougher than the depths of the depression in Cairo. That used to be a great river town, generations ago. You go down the main street of Cairo now and you do not see the folks there. There are not jobs in Cairo.

I want to make sure I am correct about this, but I think Rockford still has double-digit unemployment. The President is going around the country talking about good times. Rockford has over 16-percent unemployment right now—the second largest city in my State, a beautiful city.

Going south of it, Route 51, most of the way is two lanes, with no way to get those transportation facilities until there are adequate funds to service the people of Rockford. So why would you penalize us?

In my home county, East St. Louis has 50-percent unemployment.

I had the pleasure today to appear before the Armed Services Committee with my friend and senior colleague, to assist in the confirmation of the nomination of the mayor of Peoria, Dick Carver, as the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Financial Affairs. I might have the title messed up a little.

What a fine man Dick Carver is. He has been the mayor of Peoria for many years. Before that, he was on the city council. He is not of my political persuasion. He happens to be a Republican. He did a good job in that town. That town has suffered for the last several years in unemployment. I think I am fair in stating that it is still double-digit.

They say, "How does it play in Peoria?" Well, the economy does not play too well in Peoria right now. Why? Why would you take one State out of 50, with all these problems, and penalize it alone? Why would you do that? In my State, as you go around it now, almost anywhere you go you will find that to be the case.

I did a radio talk show this morning with two reporters, a live interview, answered any questions they might have. One was from Carmi, in White County, in southeastern Illinois. Unemployment there was up in the high double digits, I think around 20 percent for the whole county of White, in southeastern Illinois. I am sorry I do not have the specific figure, because I know that the Presiding Officer [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], as a compassionate person, would be concerned about that.

It is serious all over in my State. The policy adopted here would further aggravate that circumstance.

I share every kind thought expressed here about the chairman of the committee. He is a fine man and has been most fair in listening to our concerns. He said something about this bill being held up. I think he said the sum was $2.1 billion.

One of the first things this Senator said, at the outset, was that I would not hold up a clean ice bill—a clean ice bill, unfettered by the committee amendment—which would send that $2.1 billion to the country. I would conclude my remarks at this moment and vote for it. If we had a hold-harmless against the losing State out of 50, I would not have any trouble. I do not see why folks would consider that to be an unreasonable position.

I have not had the great pleasure and privilege of serving in this body as long as those who are arrayed against me tonight, for all of whom I have affection and high regard. But I have been in the process a long time, involved in accommodations of honor over many years. As I looked back on those accommodations of honor, I had no trouble in my later life in looking back upon them.

I do not feel uncomfortable in saying that if I were on the other side of this and one State came to me—I am not going to pick on a State, but let us say Rhode Island, because it is really small—and said, "Hey, we're the only one hurt," I would say, "Why hurt you? We'll fix that up." I think that would be reasonable.

I remember years ago, as a young man, I was chairman of the judiciary committee in the Illinois House. In those days, about half the legislation that went to the floor had to go through my committee. I was the principal sponsor of a constitutional amendment called judicial reform that ultimately was adopted by the people in my State. It is in the constitution of my State now.

We used to have justices of the peace elected in every township, five of them; a police magistrate elected in every town; constables elected in every township and village. Then we had the city court judges. We had probate court judges. We had county court judges. We had city court judges. We had circuit court judges. In Cook County, they had municipal judges, superior court judges, criminal court judges, and so forth.

If you got in the wrong court with your leg off case, too bad. Your leg was off, and you had no case. You just got in the wrong court. When the cases went up on appeal in the appellate court, the circuit court judges sat as appellate court judges to hear their own cases, as circuit court judges.

In the supreme court, which had seven judges, they gave Cook County one judge and the rest of the State, which had less population, six.

That was the old system that we changed as a consequence of my amendment. But when we did that, which was a big thing and it took years, it was a terrific fight. It went to the people of Illinois, and there was a big election on it. We had to make some accommodations of honor, and we did. We did things like saying this, for instance: We said, "OK, there are 102 counties. Some of them are real little." I do not know how it is in Texas or some of the other States, but in my State of Illinois, we have some little counties. I will give you an example. Pope County in southern Illinois has a lot more deer than people. You know Pope is a great big county geographically. It has the Shawnee National Forest, a lot of deer, and only a few people, but those folks like home rule, Madam President, and for years those folks, those little bitty counties always had a judge.

So they came to Springfield and they said: "Wait. Why are you going to take our judge? We like having our local judge. We want to talk to our local judge. We don't want you bringing in a judge from Chicago we do not know, or from East St. Louis, or from Springfield, or Peoria. We want a judge from right here in Pope County."

We made that accommodation.

Let me tell you those little counties in the legislature did not have the power. We had the power, and we could have said, "You don't get your judge." We did not do that, Madam President, oh, no. We gave those nice little counties that did not have any power at all a judge because that is what they wanted. We did all kinds of things like that in that bill.

You know, like the J.P. said: "Wait a minute. Why are you throwing us out?" We said, "Well, we want judges who have legal education." He said, "What about us? People elected us." We let some of them sit until such time as they stepped down, and worked the system in slowly.

We did a lot of things like that.

And I can think of hundreds of times when things came up and we took into account—the problems of isolated cases, isolated people, and isolated circumstances, where the weak and the hurt would have been affected adversely.

I do not see anything the matter with that.

The problem with what we have here is this: If you took this and you just set it apart, alone, see, and looked at it, you would say, "Look, that looks all right," because you are treating everyone the same with the formula, and my colleague in time when he is heard at length will make that point, and he will make it well, because he is a fine man and an excellent speaker, and he is persuasive to me in most cases.

But that is not what we are doing here. What we are talking about here is the whole thing, Madam President. We are talking about a State that has historically been hurt so long that they have almost given up on it.

You know something? In my State they have newspapers of every political persuasion and philosophy. I do not mean they are Democratic or Republican papers, but they cover the whole spectrum of political thought, very liberal newspapers, on the one hand, very conservative newspapers, on the other.

Every single one of those newspapers says, "How come we are always hurt so bad?" You know what the first question is when you go into the editorial boards of those newspapers and you sit down with the array of real talent in places like the Tribune, or the Sun Times, or the Post Dispatch, or the Globe Democrat, or the big newspapers in our State, wherever they may be in our State, the first thing that comes up they say, "How come is it? Why is this? How can this be?" They say, "Where is the fairness of it? How can Congress do this to us? Where is their compassion? Where is their sense of decency? What is the motive? Why do they hurt us? How can it help to cripple us this way?"

Well, it is hard to answer that. You say they are all fair people, every one of them. Whether they are Republicans or Democrats every one of them I ever met is fair. Every one of them I ever met would like to do what is right and just.

They say, "If that is so, why don't they do it?" Well, you know like we do not build airplanes, that is a consideration, we do not build airplanes. They say, "We will concede we do not build airplanes. Why can we not have some of the parts of it so folks can work?"

I have had them say to me: "You are on the Armed Services Committee, and you vote for those appropriations for the military and stuff, don't you?" I say, "Yes, I do."

"Why do you do it?"

I say, "I believe in a strong national defense."

They said, "We do not get any of that money here."

I say there is more than that involved. There is more involved than not getting the money. There is the defense of our Nation involved.

But you have to understand how it is. If for all of your adult life and developmental career you have seen a State going down the sewer, as far as Federal programs are concerned, just decimated, absolutely decimated, I do not care how well off you are, how rich you are, you cannot always send more down here than you get back, year after year after year for decade after decade after decade, pay all the severance taxes for all the States that are energy rich while you are poor, to support their institutions. We do that, Madam President. The folks in my State pay severance taxes to the eight energy rich States to support their institutions while paying their own sales tax and their own income tax and their own real estate tax, and we have every form of tax there is.

Mr. BENTSEN. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIXON. Sure, if I can yield without losing my rights to proceed on the issue.

Mr. BENTSEN. I would not want to cut the Senator off for anything.

Mr. DIXON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BENTSEN. You know when the Senator makes that point about an energy State, one of the things that is interesting when we develop the energy in our State and we sell it, we sell it to Illinois at a lower price than we pay for it ourselves. We sell to Illinois our gas under price controls and actually Illinois utility rates run lower than ours.

When the Senator talks about trying to get some equity between our States, what I have tried to do is see that we would have a minimum of 85 percent coming back to the State. We cannot take care of all the other programs because that is not within the jurisdiction of this committee.

I would like to do what the Senator is talking about on each of them as we go along, but that is not realistic, and

I do not think that is practical. So we can only deal with what we have before us.

When you get into discretionary funds, see what Illinois gets is 85 percent of what it sends down here and then Illinois gets into discretionary funds $160 million. Does the Senator know what my State gets? We get 85 percent of what we send down here and then $22 million in discretionary funds. That is the difference.

So what we have tried to do here is take all those demonstration projects, we have tried to take all those discretionary funds, take everything that Illinois gets, and that Texas gets, and that any other State gets, and say we get the minimum of 85 percent.

Now, when the Senator likes to say, and he keeps talking about how Illinois has been cut 50 percent on something, let us take a look at what he is really talking about. Let us tell the whole story on that one: The only year that Illinois got that big apportion was in 1983 when Illinois got $360 million. The year before that, Illinois had $155 million, and the year before that, $150 million, and before that, $151 million, and the year after in 1984, Illinois gets $160 million, So the Senator picks out 1 year that was twice the other years and so he wants that now to be his standards. If he does not get that, he is being cut 50 percent. That is just not realistic.

Illinois in 1984 is going to receive about $385 million in apportioned funds, and those funds are distributed under the formula set by this Congress.

When Illinois pleads for more money, it ought to be noted that they will also receive more than $160 million in 1984 in those discretionary funds.

The Senator tells me how tough it is for Illinois. Does he know that is twice as much as the nearest State? That is what Illinois receives. He wants to put this in stone and get it from now on. This is just not fair. As far as I am concerned, we are not going to do that.

When Illinois says it made an offer, it should be pointed out that the intent of the 85-percent-minimum allocation is to guarantee to a State a fair return on the amount of money that it sends, that it pays. When a State receives more than 85 percent, the 85-percent-minimum formula just does not any longer apply. Illinois is getting more than that.

The reason Illinois in that appears to lose $30 million is because they have done so well in the other highway categories, that they exceed the 85 percent and that means that they get a higher return than Texas, or any other minimum allocation State.

Illinois poses its offer in the form of an option. It is in fact no more than a hold harmless which would give Illinois more money and would try to preserve and make permanent that year of aberration when you got twice as much as you did the year before or that you get in the succeeding year. That is just not right and that is not fair and the committee has rejected that kind of an approach and I will continue to oppose it.

Mr. DIXON. I want to say to my distinguished friend, and he is my friend, we are differing about a piece of legislation, not about our affection or regard for one another.

I have to come back to the difference in the truth as I see it and the truth as you see it. You see it in the narrow perspective, may I say, with all the warmth and kindness in my heart for you as a friend, you see it in the narrow perspective of a piece of legislation dealing only with the Interstate Highway Trust Fund and you think you can separate that out and make it make sense to me.

But the problem is, I come from a State that is whipsawed up and down the line on money and you are taking some from us. It is just as simple as that.

To show you what I mean, during the recession when we suffered so terribly, some other States hardly suffered at all.

For example, in the 8 energy-rich States in 1981, Alaska's tax revenues rose by 51.3 percent; New Mexico's by 30.3 percent; Oklahoma's by 24.2 percent; North Dakota's by 21.9 percent; Wyoming's by 19.2 percent; Texas' by 17.9 percent.

During the recession, the Governor of my State, who does not happen to be of my political persuasion, called the legislature in and increased taxes, general revenue taxes of all sorts and gasoline taxes and other things to meet the obligations of government.

Now, I understand the honest difference of opinion that exists between my friends who advocate the passage of this bill and my senior colleague from Illinois and myself. But you cannot compartmentalize government this way. People do not see government in its separate pieces.

If I went back home to Illinois and tried to explain to the average citizen all the different funds that support our institutions, do you think they really care whether it is an Interstate Highway Trust Fund dollar or some other dollar of another kind? All they know is what they know; and that is for generations we have been shortchanged. For generations we have sent to Washington more than we got back. For generations we have had the lousy end of the stick. For generations we have not been treated fairly and equitably.

Now, let me just say this in conclusion. I can see how to some here the position that my distinguished friend and colleague, Senator PERCY, and I take might seem somewhat unreasonable. I think it is fair to state that he and I love the committee system as much as any other two Members. We love the process as much as any other Member.

Mr. BENTSEN. I would say to the Senator from Illinois, I will vote for that.

Mr. DIXON. I thank my colleague for his judicious observation.

But, the point is that we are not similarly situated to some of you. We are hurting and we have been hurting a long time. We are trying to build roads the whole length of our State, Route 51, from Rockford all the way down and all the way across the center of our State, the Central Illinois Expressway, to that little, lovely town of Quincy, about the size of my hometown of Belleville, incidentally, about 45,000 people. And they call it "Forgottonia" because you just cannot get there on the roads that we have now.

Now why would you want to target us? I understand the argument of my friend from Texas that this is equitable to all. It is not equitable to us taken as part of the whole fabric of what we do here. In that connection, it is a disaster to us.

My senior colleague and I need to go home and explain these things. This is not explainable to the folks we represent because it is just another significant piece of evidence of the fact that we are not treated equitably with the rest of the Nation.

As we go through these amendments, I would hope that some of my colleagues would seriously consider them. May I say I realize I have 175 amendments and sometimes that may confuse the issue. But the sincerity of these amendments, I assure you, is fundamental to what we care about in our State. Because all these amendments say is, "Don't just do it to the interstate highway trust fund, do it to everything; say to everything that we get back a percentage on the dollar." In this case, I am saying 90 cents on the dollar. "Don't hurt anybody worse than that on any programs or any distribution of the revenue."

Now that is the spirit of fairness, I say to my colleagues. That is the essence of an understanding of the Federal system, the system that suggested that every State, because we are separate States, would be represented equally in this body; that just as California has two Senators, so Rhode Island has two. The essence of the Federal system, the separateness of the States, we all love that separately in our own way here, every one of us.

I am saying support that concept with an honest division among the revenues among the States in a reasonable way so that there is reasonable sharing. But to compartmentalize it as is done here, I would suggest it not a reasonable solution to the problem.

My friend from Illinois and I have talked about this over the years at length. A while ago, a friend of mine, Congressman DURBIN, from Springfield, came on the floor here and said: "Good, I'm glad that you're bringing this discussion before the body."

It is all we talk about in our congressional delegation meetings. We just met at lunch today, my colleague and I and our friends from the House. All we talk about at every one of these meetings is the difficulty our State has as a consequence of the deprivations it suffers due to the unreasonable distribution of funds among the States.

I wonder. My colleague looks like he may want to say something. May I say that I am pleased to hear from my colleague and if he wants to make some contribution here as he has done so superbly this day right through the day, I would be delighted to yield to him. I know the Senator would not take away my time ultimately, if the Senator will suggest his thoughts about this subject matter.

Mr. PERCY. Madam President, I thank my distinguished colleague. I deeply appreciate all that he has said and done. I have said many times that I have seen in my colleague the love of legislation. The Senator loves politics, and has always been fighting for the interests of the State of Illinois. My colleague is a determined fighter. Whenever the State of Illinois is jeopardized, you can always count on the Senator. I have said many, many times whether it is 3 in the morning or 4 in the morning, we have always been here together in a bipartisan spirit. We are quite willing to go on, and on, and on, particularly when we can talk about Illinois.

I have had the opportunity to touch base with a number of people today in Illinois about what they consider to be the importance of the pending bill, and particularly the question of equity that we are addressing here.

When we talk about the people of Illinois, we have to take into account all the people. We are talking about the people of Chicago, a tremendous metropolitan community; we are talking about the people in the great neighborhoods of Chicago, the northwest side, the southwest side, and the south side. I have lived on both the north and the south sides of Chicago for much of my life. We are talking also about Chicago along Lake Michigan with the variety of life we have in that whole city. It is a great variety. But the city is really bound together by our highways. We have been encouraged to move ahead with the major program to put our highways in shape. We have been encouraged by this committee. We want to continue that work.

Certainly, this issue is important to the entire city of Chicago. But we are also ringed by suburbs where we have some of the greatest managerial talent in the United States. Unlike New York, which has in the downtown area and in the city itself not much of a manufacturing complex, we have in Chicago huge manufacturing complexes. I just think in terms of the factories that we had, and which I had as an industrialist. We had our research laboratories in Chicago. We had our major manufacturing facilities spread over about 100 and some acres with thousands of employees all using CTA, the rapid transit systems. The people worked and lived in Chicago, but to a great extent moved out just across the line to villages like Lincolnwood, which is right on the Chicago border. Highways were essential and necessary. We have surburban areas in Illinois. We have rural areas.

Let me just say that I understand that the leadership is anxious to at this point consider recessing for the evening. We have a great deal more to be said on this subject. I would like to go down each of the congressional districts such as, let us say, Rockford. Congresswoman MARTIN's district, one of the ablest Members of the House; Mayor John McNamara, an able mayor of Rockford. Here we have Rockford. Because of this committee, we are now going to link up north-central Illinois and southern Illinois. We have the highway system that will link Rockford with Decatur. We have Highway 20, a two-lane road out to Galena, whereas we are thinking in terms of highways that are built for a modern age. And not two-lane highways that we call "killer highways". It is dangerous to drive on that road. You take your life in your hands. We want to correct these conditions. I could go through every single congressional district. Skipping down to Peoria, the district of the minority leader of the House, BOB MICHEL, a very distinguished Member of the House; Mayor Dick Carver, who today appeared before my distinguished colleague in the Armed Services Committee; Senator ALAN DIXON was presiding today when Mayor Carver of Peoria came before the Armed Services Committee as the nominee of the President of the United States to be Assistant Secretary for Financial Affairs of the U.S. Air Force.

We have a great city there in Peoria, which is the home of our largest manufacturing enterprise in Illinois—Caterpillar Tractor. We have a highway system, Highway 74, that goes right through and around Peoria. We have an export center in Peoria that is important to the balance of payments of this country. It is important to the soundness of the dollar. And it is important for thousands, tens of thousands of employees, suppliers, and distributors all over the world. Peoria is part of the heartland of America. It is an important city. Certainly, it is important that we keep the highway system going that will improve, modernize, and update our highway system throughout the State of Illinois.

Illinois is blessed with being a transportation hub of the Nation. But as most of my colleagues would understand, with that distinction goes a tremendous responsibility and a tremendous burden to keep that system strong, keep it well, in good repair and working order, safe and clean. That is a big job. We are up to the job if we are given the tools, the means, and let us be frank about it—the funds. We need the money to do the job. Certainly, it is important that we get that job underway. The only purpose we have in this discussion tonight is to see whether or not it is not possible for us to work out a system in our highway program that will be equitable, not just to 49 States but also equitable to the State of Illinois as the hub of America.

Does the distinguished acting majority leader wish to have recognition for purposes of discussing procedure?

Mr. STEVENS. We would like to have a discussion, I say to my learned friend from Illinois, if we could put in a quorum call for a short while.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. WILSON]. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion to proceed on the highway bill.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk limiting further debate on the motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 2527, a bill to approve the interstate and interstate substitute cost estimates, to amend title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes.

Senators Howard Baker, Steve Symms, Jesse Helms, Robert T. Stafford, Jennings Randolph, Lloyd Bentsen, James

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I anticipate that debate may continue on this measure tomorrow, but now that cloture has been filed and now that a vote will occur on Monday next, the leadership on this side may ask the Senate on tomorrow to proceed to some other measure to conserve time, such as a conference report or an appropriations bill, or maybe some other matter. But a vote on cloture will occur on Monday next in response to this petition attempting to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed.

Mr. President, I assume there is nothing further that must be said on this issue tonight. I heard a thorough dissertation so far on the merits of an Illinois barbecue. If there is nothing else to be added to this record, I am prepared to put us in morning business.

May I yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. DIXON. I only make this inquiry. I have no problem with anything the majority leader suggested, but is he going to be on other business tomorrow, which is to say I do not have any time on this bill and can count on that, with the cloture vote on Monday? I am concerned about the absence of my colleague and myself. Can we feel comfortable that nothing untoward will concern us here tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the Senator knows what high regard I have for him and what great respect I have for both Senators, as I do, being very close to that State.

Mr. President, I do not know what to tell the Senator. There is no telling what I might do.

Mr. DIXON. I believe that.

Mr. BAKER. I can give the Senator some reasonable assurance that, if the Senate will permit me to do so, I will try to go to some other measure tomorrow. But there is the pending question.

Mr. DIXON. I thought perhaps the majority leader might want to ask for unanimous consent to go to some other business, which I would be delighted to acquiesce in, and then we would feel comfortable that other business would take place tomorrow, and I would not have to talk about barbecue because I left my recipes at home.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to feel that comfortable.

Mr. President, if I were the Senator from Illinois, I would probably go on to Illinois, but I am not prepared to ask unanimous consent that we not go to this measure tomorrow. There may be others who might want to talk about barbecue from some other States.

Mr. DIXON. I would like to ask that nobody else talk about barbecue.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I really think we are wasting the Senate's time a little, all in good fun. Let me say that this will be pending on Monday. There will be some debate tomorrow. I do not think it will be disposed of tomorrow. I do intend to ask the Senate to turn to other matters tomorrow.

Mr. President, if I were the Senator from Illinois, I would not try to press that too far. I think he is in pretty good shape. I think both Senators from Illinois are in pretty good shape. They are both my friends. I think it is time to go on to other things.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now have a period for the transaction of routine morning business until not past the hour of 7:45 p.m. in which Senators may speak for not more than 2 minutes each, with the exception of the two leaders or their designees against whom no such limitation will apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WATER RESOURCES LEGISLATION

● Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, late last month, the administration submitted two water resources bills that it seeks to have the Congress consider before the close of the 98th Congress.

I am pleased to introduce these two bills, by request, and I hope they will be considered in the context of S. 1739, if we have the opportunity to deal with that bill later next week.

Mr. President, these appear to be sound bills. I ask unanimous consent that copies of the two bills, together with the transmittal letters, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materal was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of American in Congress assembled, That section 110(f) of the River and Harbor Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 303), as amended, is amended by striking the figure "$6,528,000" and substituting the figure "$13,064,000".

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
Washington, DC, August 28, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is a draft of legislation "To amend section 110(f) of the River and Harbor Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 303), as amended, to increase the monetary authorization for the rehabilitation of the Illinois-Mississippi Canal.

The proposal is part of the Department of Army's Civil Works Legislative Program for the 98th Congress. The Office of Management and Budget advises that, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the presentation of this proposal for the consideration of the Congress. The Department of the Army recommends that Congress enact the proposal.

PURPOSE OF THE LEGISLATION

Enactment of this legislation would increase the monetary authorization for rehabilitation of the Illinois-Mississippi Canal by $6,536,000. The increase in cost is due to a delay of several years when construction stopped pending the outcome of a lawsuit. The increase will allow the Corps of Engineers to complete rehabilitation work it previously agreed to do under existing authorities.

The 75-mile long Illinois and Mississippi Canal was constructed by the Corps of Engineers under authority of the River and Harbor Act of 1890. It was completed in 1918 and connects the Illinois River near Bureau, Illinois, to the Mississippi River at the mouth of the Rock River. The main canal is 6.5 feet deep and includes 32 locks. The project also includes a 29-mile feeder canal that carries water from the Rock River to the main canal. The canal is obsolete for present-day navigation, and was closed to traffic in 1951.

The State of Illinois was interested in taking over the canal for development as a park. Transfer of the canal was authorized in the River and Harbor Act of 1958, which also authorized $2 million for repair and modification to place the canal in proper condition for public recreational use. The canal was transferred on August 1, 1970. The River and Harbor Act of 1970 authorized an additional $6,528,000 for further repair and modification of the canal, subsequent to the transfer, bringing the total amount authorized to be appropriated to $8,528,000.

The repair and modification work was underway and continued until a suit was filed against the Federal Government and the State in 1974 over maintenance of highway bridges. Further work was suspended to avoid the possibility of subjecting the government to double liability. Because of the lawsuit and the delay involved, the total monetary authorization of $8,528,000, which includes the $2,000,000 authorized to be appropriated prior to transfer of the property to the State and the additional $6,528,000 authorized to be appropriated subsequent to the transfer, is no longer adequate to complete Federal rehabilitation responsibilities.

The State of Illinois has recently completed a master plan for development on the canal. Portions of the plan are structural rehabilitation consistent with the work originally scheduled to be accomplished by the Federal Government in accordance with agreements between the Federal Government and the State of Illinois as authorized by the River and Harbor Act of 1958. That work is currently estimated at $7,677,000.

Since only $1,141,428 of the Corps' existing monetary authorization has not yet been spent, an increase of $6,536,000 in monetary authorization is required to complete the items of work the Corps has agreed to accomplish under existing authorities.

COST AND BUDGET DATA

The enactment of this legislation will result in an increase in budgetary requirements of $6,536,000 over a four-year period. It is proposed that the funds would be budgeted under the Major Rehabilitation category of the Construction, General, Appropriation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS IMPACTS

The enactment of this proposal would have no civil rights impacts. The work to be completed is rehabilitation of existing features, and thus will probably not have extensive environmental impacts. The work would be done consistent with current regulations, including preparation of an environmental impact statement, if needed.

Sincerely,

ROBERT K. DAWSON,
Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works).

S. 3012

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, whenever the Secretary of the Army transmits a report to Congress recommending implementation of a water resources development project and the Secretary determines that the project has substantial merit the Secretary, acting through the Chief of Engineers, may initiate advance engineering and design of the project.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to carry out this Act an amount not to exceed $10,000,000 per fiscal year.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
Washington, DC, August 28, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is a draft of legislation "To authorize the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to undertake further engineering and design of water resources development projects following the submission of a report to Congress recommending implementation of the projects."

This proposal is part of the Department of the Army Civil Works legislative program for the 98th Congress. The Office of Management and Budget advises that, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the presentation of the proposal for the consideration of Congress. The Department of the Army recommends that Congress enact the proposed legislation.

The proposed legislation would authorize the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to continue certain advance engineering and design of water resources development projects prior to their authorization for construction, where the Secretary of the Army has already submitted a favorable report on the projects to Congress.

The planning and design of water resources development projects by the Army Corps of Engineers has traditionally involved work undertaken in a number of stages prior to actual physical construction of the project. Typically, Congress first authorizes the Corps to conduct a study of a particular water resource problem or proposal. The Corps then prepares the study, sometimes in more than one phase, and, if it determines that a plan of improvement is economically feasible and environmentally sound, the Corps recommends the plan in a report submitted to Congress. The report is ordinarily in sufficient detail to provide Congress with the information needed to make a determination on whether to authorize construction, but it does not involve any detailed engineering and design of the plan of improvement. Such advance engineering and design (AE&D) in the past was undertaken only after Congress actually authorized the project for construction.

Recently, the Corps of Engineers examined ways to expedite the construction of water resources development projects. It found that significant delays often occur between the time that the Corps submits a report to Congress and the time that a project is authorized for construction. In essence, this time is wasted. The Corps therefore concluded that one way to shorten the process and, in addition, make it more efficient would be to continue AE&D after reporting favorably to the Congress.

In response, since 1981 Congress has allowed funding of "detailed studies and plans and specifications" of water resources development projects of the Department of the Army out of the General Investigations account of the Department's annual Civil Works appropriations measure. This has permitted the Corps of Engineers to continue AE&D on projects for which a final report has not yet been submitted to the Congress. In such cases, the Corps can prepare an interim report, recommending authorization of construction, but continue AE&D while awaiting action on that recommendation. It is the Corps' belief that this is not possible where a final report has been submitted to the Congress since transmittal of a final report terminates the Corps' authority to undertake any further study of a project.

"Preconstruction" AE&D enables the Corps of Engineers to proceed smoothly from preauthorization studies and reports to preliminary engineering and planning investigations of worthy water resources development projects. It helps to maintain project continuity by keeping together technical expertise that would be lost otherwise and by ensuring continued contact with State and local governments and other non-Federal participants in the project. It also helps ensure that the cost estimates used as a basis for construction authorization are more accurate and reflect the most current plan of work.

The proposed legislation would extend these benefits to projects on which the Corps of Engineers has already submitted final feasibility reports. If a report recommends implementation of the project, and if the Secretary of the Army determines that the project has substantial merit, the Corps of Engineers may initiate advance engineering and design of the project. The legislation would authorize the Corps to allocate up to $10,000,000 per fiscal year for such "preconstruction" AE&D. The Corps will ensure that projects nominated for funding under the proposed authority meet the Department of the Army eligibility and preliminary selection criteria for new AE&D starts. In addition, the Corps will not use the proposed authority unless significant cost and time savings are likely.

Congress granted the Corps of Engineers similar authority for fiscal years 1978 and 1979 in section 101(c) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1976 (Public Law 94-587).

COST AND BUDGET DATA

If this proposal is enacted, the Department of the Army will be authorized to allocate up to $10,000,000 annually for "preconstruction" advance engineering and design of water resources development projects.

ENVIRONMENTAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS IMPACT CONSIDERATIONS

Enactment of this proposal will have no environmental or civil rights impacts.

Sincerely,

ROBERT K. DAWSON,

S. RES. 449

Whereas hearings held within the United States Senate have revealed that a senior member of the Government of Nicaragua is involved in the trafficking of drugs;

Whereas the United States Government has obtained photographic evidence of drug trafficking on the part of a senior official of the Government of Nicaragua and the use of Nicaraguan military personnel and governmental facilities, such as military airstrips and refueling and radar facilities;

Whereas a former member of the Nicaraguan diplomatic corps testified of narcotics use and trafficking by senior members of the Government of Nicaragua;

Whereas Senate hearings revealed that a plan to corrupt American youth through drugs was conceived of and implemented by senior officials of the Government of Nicaragua with the aid of senior officials of the Government of Cuba;

Whereas narcotic profits are used to finance terrorism, and narcotics are used as a weapon for terrorist activity; and

Whereas illegal narcotics has led to impaired national defense, lowered productivity, increased violent crime, failed education, and addiction and death: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate hereby condemns the Government of Nicaragua for engaging in the international trafficking of narcotics.

SENATE RESOLUTION 450—RELATING TO ABOLITION OF THE COMPENSATORY FINANCING FACILITY

Mr. HEINZ (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. GARN, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. TOWER, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. HATCH, Mr. DECONCINI) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 450

Whereas the Compensatory Financing Facility of the International Monetary Fund distorts the free market by providing low interest, subsidized loans to countries experiencing balance of payments shortfalls;

Whereas the Compensatory Financing Facility loans are made without conditionality and are inconsistent with IMF adjustment goals;

Whereas such low interest, subsidized loans tend to encourage the mining and production of commodities in oversupply by shielding producers from the immediate consequences of their production decisions;

Whereas commodities such as copper and nickel are at all time post-war lows as a result of world overproduction;

Whereas tens of thousands of American workers have lost their jobs as a result of world overproduction of commodities such as copper and nickel;

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury should instruct the Executive Director to the International Monetary Fund to work vigorously for the abolition of the Compensatory Financing Facility at the next meeting of the Fund.

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. GARN, myself and others, today I am submitting a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to instruct the U.S. Executive Director to the International Monetary Fund to work vigorously for the abolition of the Fund's Compensatory Financing Facility. Let me take a moment to explain why I, as a strong supporter of the IMF, am suggesting such radical surgery for this international organization.

Mr. President, when it was created in 1963, the original concept of the Compensatory Financing Facility seemed to be a necessary and proper function for the Fund. The CFF was created to help Fund members through temporary balance-of-payments shortfalls resulting from circumstances beyond their control. This seems reasonable enough. World commodity prices frequently fluctuate, and it seems sensible to minimize balance-of-payments shortfalls. The idea is to borrow from the Fund when export earnings suddenly drop, with the expectation that such funds can be repaid when commodities return to their normal price levels.

I emphasize that this facility seems reasonable in the abstract, Mr. President. But as chairman of the International Finance Subcommittee, I have given this Fund's use careful study, and I believe that it has, in practice, exacerbated the very problems it was created to alleviate. Let me explain.

The recent debt crisis has demonstrated that countries heavily dependent on hard commodities for export earnings are frequently willing to continue peak production of those commodities long past the time when it is uneconomic to do so. The situation with regard to world copper production is an ideal example of this problem. Major copper producers such as Zambia, Zaire, and Peru have gone all out to expand the production of their copper mines. Such production has continued in the face of precipitous drops in the price of world copper, which have brought the income from such production to a level below the actual cost of production. Such uneconomic production strategies can only be explained when one also understands the fact that copper production in these countries is an important source of Government employment and almost the only source of foreign exchange earnings.

Mr. President, the irony in this absurd situation results from the fact that the more these countries mine their way to overproduction and economic ruin the more they are eligible for relief under the Compensatory Financing Facility of the IMF. Since the CFF is available to them as members as a matter of right up to 83 percent of their quota subscription, it has the effect of shielding them from the consequences of their poor economic planning. I understand that in recent years the Fund has attempted to introduce a degree of conditionality into drawings from the CFF, but, by and large, the CFF remains the equivalent of an entitlement program for countries which practice short-sighted economic planning.

This is absurd economics, Mr. President.

The pitfalls of the continued operation of this facility should be obvious. In practice, the CFF works against the normal workings of the free market by allowing—even encouraging—Fund members to continue with policies of internal subsidy and overproduction at a time when such countries should be induced to adopt rigorous programs of adjustment.

This makes no sense to me, particularly at a time when thousands of American copper and nickel mine workers are being thrown out of jobs as a result of the irrational production and pricing policies of U.S. competitors in the less developed world. The copper and nickel situation today could very well be repeated in steel producing nations, since the less developed world also has an abundance of steel-making capacity.

Mr. President, over the past 8 years the major copper producers of the world have made ample use of the IMF, and, not surprisingly, of the $4.4 billion borrowed by these countries, almost 50 percent was drawn from the CFF, where conditionality is, for all intents and purposes, nonexistent. Their trend of borrowings, of course, had its greatest upswing in 1982 and 1983, when copper prices were at their lowest in more than three decades.

The point is, Mr. President, that at the very time when the Fund should have had its greatest impact on the short-sighted economic planning of its members—to guide them toward more sensible production policies—the entitlement nature of the CFF and its ready availability to the hard-pressed LDC's vitiated fund leverage.

Mr. President, the Compensatory Financing Facility was established to help Fund members weather temporary falls in world commodity prices that were beyond their control. Today, the CFF is being used to shore up a fundamentally unsound policy of overproduction being pursued by debtor nations when it is fully within their control. Worse still, the American people are paying doubly for this counterproductive facility at the IMF. Not only are they losing their jobs as a result of commodity gluts on world markets, they are, at the same time, financing the CFF indirectly with their taxes. This is absurd economics. The CFF should be terminated at once.

That is why, Mr. President, Senators GARN, DOMENICI, and I are submitting this resolution today. I urge my colleagues to take a moment to reflect on the problem this resolution addresses and then to join us in support of the resolution.●

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, this morning I am submitting a series of amendments to Senate Resolution 66 which are, in turn, proposed amendments to the Standing Rules of the Senate. I serve this notice in compliance with the provisions of rule V [5] of the Senate's standing rules.

These amendments will not be in compliance with the germaneness provisions of rule XXII [22], if cloture is invoked on the petition presented on Wednesday by the majority leader. They will be ruled out of order on objection under the rule. Yet each of these amendments proposes serious, substantial, and in my opinion needed changes to the rules of the Senate if Senate Resolution 66 should in fact be agreed to.

There should be ample time for these amendments to be debated, and for Senators to consider them carefully before final action is taken on Senate Resolution 66. But if we vote to cloture Senate Resolution 66 those seven or eight amendments cannot even be called up for consideration.

The importance of considering these rule changes is but another compelling reason to vote no on the cloture petition when it is laid before the Senate. I urge my colleagues to vote no on cloture with me, so that these needed rules changes can be given the attention they deserve on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, with the amendments just referred to, I also send to the desk at this time several other amendments which are not proposed amendments to the Standing Rules of the Senate.

BAKER AMENDMENT NO. 4306

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. BAKER submitted the following amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution Senate Resolution 66, supra; as follows:

In Rule VII, between paragraphs 2 and 3, add the following:

"3. The Presiding Officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for the Majority Leader to move to lay, before the Senate any item on the Calendar of General Orders which is otherwise in order. Any motion so made shall be determined without debate."

Renumber subsequent paragraphs of Rule VII as "4.", "5.", "6.", and "7.".

Mr. BAKER. I submit the following notice in writing:

In accordance with Rule V of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to amend Rule VII of the Standing Rules for the purpose of providing a non-debatable motion available to the Majority Leader of the Senate to proceed to any matter which is otherwise in order.

SEC. . The pork industry contributes $9,000,000,000 annually to the United States economy;

Over four hundred fifty thousand United States farmers produce pork for domestic and foreign markets;

United States imports of live hogs from Canada averaged one hundred thousand animals each year between 1970 and 1974, yet since 1981, such imports have increased yearly from one hundred forty-six thousand head to an estimated more than one million head in 1984;

The adverse economic effect of the recent surge in imports of Canadian hogs and pork products on United States pork producers has been estimated to be in excess of $500,000,000 in 1982 and 1983, and approximately $300,000,000 during the first five months of 1984;

The Canadian government provides price support for hogs at a level equal to 90 per centum of the previous five-year average market price, indexed for changes in cash costs of production of hogs, which represented a payment of $6.54 per head to Canadian pork producers last year, and all but one provincial government of Canada also provide direct production assistance to support Canadian pork producers; and

It is essential that the administration act immediately to address the threat to the United States pork production industry caused by the dramatic increase in imports of hogs and pork products from Canada: Now, therefore,

It is the sense of the Senate that the President should direct appropriate members of the administration, including the United States Trade Representative, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce, to aggressively pursue discussions with the Canadian Government directed toward resolving this situation and use all available authorities in an effort to protect the economic viability of the United States pork industry and to promote free and fair trade.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CONFERENCE REPORT ON SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY AMENDMENTS

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, yesterday the first step was taken toward remedying the anxiety and suffering caused many disabled persons by the 1980 Social Security Disability Amendments. I feel the conference report on H.R. 3755, the Social Security disability amendments, is an equitable and desirable agreement that has been long awaited by this Congress.

The process leading up to this conference report began over 2 years ago when Congress decided to take a good hard look at the disability review process. That examination revealed a chaotic system in which disabled individuals were hastily removed from the rolls, only to have their benefits reinstated on appeal to an administrative law judge. Disability recipients were subject to massive stress during the review process and the ever-present fear that their benefits would be terminated. Often a gap of 6 months elapsed between the initial termination of benefits and the finding that the review was faulty and the benefits were reinstated. Thousands of disabled persons lived without necessary benefits for an average of 6 months, also losing vital Medicare eligibility for that period.

The problem of truly disabled individuals being removed from the roll grew to epidemic proportions. Over half of the 421,000 cases which were terminated by the State agencies were reinstated by administrative law judges. In my home State of Minnesota, for example, a moratorium on the review process was imposed. The State agency simply refused to review cases sent to them by the Social Security Administration. U.S. Federal District Court Judge Miles Lord reinstated thousands of disability beneficiaries who were terminated in the CDI process.

Mr. President, I am deeply gratified to see an end to a process that has caused so many disabled persons anxiety and suffering. Although I see nothing intrinsically wrong with reviews every 3 years, those reviews must be conducted in a humane and coherent fashion. The rulemaking standards for the Social Security Administration included in the conference report will reduce the confusion surrounding proper criteria for disability review as well as the high turnover rate of review decisions.

A key provision in the conference agreement concerns medical improvement. The agreement places the presumptions of eligibility and ineligibility in balance, thus providing a neutral base from which the Secretary may weigh all evidence. Thus, the burden of proof for medical improvement or lack thereof is no longer assigned to the disabled individual.

Another result of this conference agreement is the reauthorization of section 1619, providing SSI special benefits for the working severely impaired. The reauthorization of section 1619 allows severely impaired individuals to continue to receive SSI and Medicaid payments while working part time. This action sends a strong signal to the working disabled community and reinforces the Congress' commitment to providing work incentives. The opportunity to work part time without fear of losing SSI special benefits allows the disabled individual the opportunity to experience the fulfillment of participation in the working world.

Finally Mr. President, I would like to commend the conferees for their work with this difficult piece of legislation and in particular, recognize the tireless efforts of Senator DOLE and Representative J.J. PICKLE to work out the final compromise. Passage of this conference report will indicate our commitment to reforming the disability review process and relieve the thousands of disability beneficiaries who have suffered as a result of the 1980 disability amendments.●

MARCH OF DIMES READING CHAMPIONS

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, imaginations are boundless. And, there is no better place to spark an imagination than in the minds of our children. But how do you open a student's mind to the joys of learning, the joys of reading?

One excellent way is through the March of Dimes Reading Champions Program. The reading champions is an educational motivation reading program, kindergarten through ninth grade. It motivates students to read books and/or newspapers at their own reading levels for sheer enjoyment. As students improve their reading skills, they help raise funds for the March of Dimes fight against birth defects.

The Reading Champions motto says it well: "It's fun to read and do a good deed." The March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation is dedicated to preventing America's No. 1 child health problem. Birth defects strike more than a quarter of a million babies each year. Through research and education, the March of Dimes works for the day when birth defects no longer are a threat.

Through the unique Reading Champions Program, students not only enjoy reading for fun, but are gratified to know that they are helping the March of Dimes. The improvement in reading skills is yet another bonus. Once students discover the joys of books, or reading a newspaper, they continue to look upon reading—and learning—as enjoyable, valuable activities. In the Reading Champions, everyone is a winner—the students, the parents, the educators. Every participant receives a certificate of achievement, an iron on for T-shirts, and the opportunity to earn a bronze, silver, or gold medal. All awards are based on the number of books read—obtainable goals. Participants only compete against themselves.

As the March of Dimes starts its seventh year of this motivational reading program, nationally it undergoes a name change. For the past 6 years this reading program has been known as the Reading Olympics. It is now called Reading Champions. The change is in name only. The established program basically remains the same. It has been an extremely successful nationally reognized program in all 50 States and endorsed by major educational organizations.

Michigan is particularly proud of its part in the Reading Champions. The program was developed 8 years ago by Maxwell Gurman, while executive director of the Metropolitan Detroit Chapter, March of Dimes. When Reading (Olympics) Champions went national, he became national coordinator for the program.

During the past 6 years, Michigan has led all States, per capita, in total student participation, total number of books read, and money raised. In the past year, Metropolitan Detroit had more than 20,000 students, reading nearly 360,000 books and raising $170,000. The State of Michigan had some 37,000 students registered for the Reading Champions, reading 485,000 books and raising nearly $380,000 for the March of Dimes' fight against birth defects.

The statistics speak for themselves. Since the program started nationally, Reading Champions has had more than 1,400,000 participants reading more than 19 million books and raising about $14 million.

Another interesting and important aspect of the Reading Champions is the fact that 72 daily newspapers sponsor the Reading Champions Program in their respective circulation areas. Students receive credit for reading newspapers, where a local newspaper sponsors the program, in addition to the books they read.

I am pleased to honor the Reading Champions Program for sparking the imaginations of our youngsters while at the same time fighting against birth defects. I further commend Maxwell Gurman, his staff, and the volunteers and educators who make this program such a success.

The former Reading Olympics—now the Reading Champions—is a winner.●

ADVANCE NOTIFICATION PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the same may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that such a notification has been received.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of this advance notification at the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room SD 423.

I ask that the letter of notification be printed in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, September 14, 1984.

Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Deputy Staff Director, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a European country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Lieutenant General, USAF, Director.●

ANTINUKE CROWD HAS BOOSTED COSTS

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, in recent months, the news media of this country has given considerable play to the problems in the nuclear electric power industry. These reports always contain a long list of reasons why the industry is so troubled, with the blame spread generously among utilities, regulators, contractors, and the financial institutions.

But an article in the September 12 issue of the Washington Times identifies as another major reason, the anti-nuclear activists, who, the author, Rael Jean Isaacs, says apply every possible delaying tactic to a plant under construction, and then charge as uneconomical those very plants they have brought to a financial crisis through these delays.

There are a number of well-organized opponents who are taking advantage of every opportunity in regulatory proceedings and in the court to protest and delay the construction of energy facilities of every type—coal-burning plants, offshore oil fields, hydroelectric plants, geothermal plants, and transmission lines.

Isaacs specifically identifies one group, the Government Accountability Project [GAP] as having been a key factor in stopping construction of the Cincinnati Gas & Electric's Zimmer plant when it was 98 percent completed.

The GAP now represents intervenors at a number of other nuclear plants under construction in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, North Carolina, Arizona, Texas, and California. This group is able to take advantage of the public's lack of knowledge to magnify simple engineering problems into horrendous probabilities. The delays GAP causes can cost electric power consumers up to $1 million a day in additional interest charges alone.

According to Isaacs, the goal of this group is to get rid of all centralized energy, the energy needed by an industrial economy. As our economy continues to grow, so does our demand for energy, especially electric power. Therefore, if we allow these delaying tactics to stall energy facilities, we are putting a weighty burden on our economic growth which our country might not be able to bear.

There are a great number of serious energy issues today. We must focus on them and not allow our attention to be diverted by groups such as these.

Mr. President, I ask that this article be printed in its entirety in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Times, Sept. 12, 1984]

ANTI-NUKE CROWD HAS BOOSTED COSTS

(By Rael Jean Isaacs)

Seabrook, Shoreham, Diablo Canyon, Zimmer. These names have become famous as financially disastrous "nuclear lemons," symbols of the decline of the nuclear electric power industry in America. And the blame has been widely apportioned among utilities, regulators, constructors, and the financial community.

But one major group of culprits has rarely been identified, let alone blamed. They are the anti-nuclear activists whom the government and the media have allowed to work both sides of the street: first, by applying every delaying tactic in the book; and second, by indicting nuclear power as uneconomical because the plants they delay wind up costing vastly more than originally estimated.

Significantly, the most effective of these intervenor groups is not an organization that was formed because of concerns over nuclear safety or energy economics. It is one that was created by a far-left activist group that has the stated goal of dismantling the major instutions in the U.S. economy—read "electric utilities" for one—and using the rules of "the system" to overthrow the system. Nuclear power has become merely a pawn in its broader game of guerrilla politics.

The Government Accountability Project became involved in antinuclear activism in 1980 when it opposed construction of Cincinnati Gas & Electric's Zimmer plant. Today it takes credit for stopping the plant when it had been 98 percent completed. As a result of its success, it has been approached by anti-nuclear groups around the country to work with them, and it currently represents intervenors against Three Mile Island (Pennsylvania). LaSalle (Illinois), Midland (Michigan), Catawba (North Carolina), Palo Verde (Arizona). Comanche Peak (Texas) and Diablo Canyon (California).

GAP typically works by coming up with "allegations" about inadequate workmanship or construction shortcuts that it obtains from former—and often disgruntled—employees. The charges are generally presented to the press in an 11th-hour bid to delay the licensing of plants that are virtually complete. The utilities then have to answer questions about charges they have never heard before, which originated with unidentified sources, with a multibillion-dollar investment weighing in the balance. Because the charges are new, the utility cannot simply respond that they are groundless—no matter how ludicrous they may sound—without detailed internal investigations.

An official of the Bechtel Corp., which has been a target of GAP because of its work on some nuclear plants, points out that GAP capitalizes on the public's (and media's) lack of detailed knowledge about engineering and construction, and has "refined to a near state-of-the-art the ability to transform issues of routine engineering consequence to grim scenarios." The delays caused by GAP toward the end of the construction of a large nuclear plant cost electric power consumers up to $1 million a day in additional interest charges alone.

The effrontery of these groups is well illustrated by the testimony of a leader of Mothers for Peace, the anti-nuclear group that invited GAP to Diablo Canyon. She testified before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission: "That plant is 14 years old. The whole plant is old. It's an obsolete plant." So the strategy is clear; after causing the delay, oppose the plant on the basis of the delay.

What is GAP? It is an official project of the far-left Washington think tank, the Institute for Policy Studies. GAP grew out of IPS's Project on Official Illegality, which was established in the early 1970s to help "whistle-blowers" in the national security agencies who were leaking government secrets.

The two founders and long-time directors of IPS, Marcus Raskin and Richard Barnet, summed up the working philosophy of IPS in their 1970 book, An American Manifesto: "Americans believe that the world must be made safe for America, but for the sake of survival itself, America must be made safe for the world."

To do this, Mr. Raskin wrote in his book Being and Doing, would take the "dismantling" of what he and other IPS members call "the national-security state." He specifically called for the dismantling of America's "colonies," including "the violence colony" (our military and police forces), "the channeling colony" (our educational system) and "the plantation colony" (our economic system).

IPS's attitude toward energy are particularly important for understanding the goals of GAP. In the institute's proposal for its Encyclopedia for Social Reconstruction, IPS sketches its ideal energy system: "The energy will be produced and disseminated through small-scale technology . . . We simply would have got rid of most of the extra high voltage wires strung around the country; closed up the coal mines, oil and gas fields; taken down oil refineries and much of the petrochemical establishment." Nuclear power, then, is only the initial target in a campaign against all centralized energy, the energy most needed by an industrialized economy.

America's future electric power supply is clouded, thanks to GAP and other intervenors. While the general media have paid little attention to their role in halting the development of nuclear electric power, publications in "the movement" are not hesitant to give them credit. "The radical outsiders have a lot to claim credit for these days," said a recent editorial in The Nation. "There's no way of knowing just what part of the total picture may be ascribed to the anti-nuclear organizations, but it is fair to say that the energy situation in the United States would be vastly different today without them."

Indeed it would—including the billion dollars a week we send overseas in exchange for imported oil and the 15-year construction periods that have driven the cost of new nuclear plants into the stratosphere. When we run short of electric power in the next decade—or when its price climbs so high that it becomes a drag on our economy because we have abandoned nuclear energy—of one thing we can be sure: there will be no way to hold the Government Accountability Project accountable.●

S. 1739—CABIN SITES ISSUE RESOLVED

● Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, an issue that has concerned many of my colleagues involves leases of cabin sites on property managed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

In its version of the water resources bill (H.R. 3678), the House of Representatives adopted language that provides, essentially, for a permanent extension of those leases. Personally, I oppose that language. Public lands should not be leased permanently for private, exclusive use.

Yet it is reasonable to seek a compromise solution.

As a result, I wrote the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army some time ago seeking information on this issue.

As a result of that letter, the corps has reviewed its policy and is adopting a new approach. I applaud them. I ask that a copy of Mr. Dawson's letter be printed in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, DC, September 7, 1984.

Hon. ROBERT T. STAFFORD,
Chairman, Committee on Environment and Public Works, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your July 27, 1984, letter concerning cottage lease sites managed by the Corps of Engineers on the Upper Mississippi and Illinois Rivers. I am pleased to provide you with my views on the various options set forth in your letter.

In general, I believe it is in the best interest of the Nation to phase out cottage sites that present a clear danger or deprive the general public of the enjoyment opportunities inherent in Corps projects. There are valid arguments both for and against termination or reduction of the cottage site program. Obviously, these must be weighed against each other in order to arrive at a responsible position in this matter. Please allow me to summarize these arguments before I address individually each of the options mentioned in your letter.

Immediate termination of the cottage site leases would be the action most compatible with the philosophy contained in Executive Order 11988 "Floodplain Management," although EO 11988 does not preclude continued leasing or sale of the sites. Additionally, removal of the cottages would make project operations and erosion control somewhat easier, and would reduce management costs, although such savings have not been quantified.

Other arguments advanced in favor of termination are that continued occupation of the cottages is a threat to life and property, and that some cottage sites are in or close to unique wildlife habitats or parks. However, these do not seem to be strong arguments in light of the fact that many of the cottages have been in existence for almost thirty years. Also, some evidence suggests that the presence of the cottages may actually prevent loss of life on the rivers because of the availability of assistance to people in distress.

Finally, it has been argued that some cottages have government subsidized flood insurance, so that a cost savings could be realized if the cottage sites were removed, and that transfer and termination of the leases could slightly increase full public access to the river. The flood insurance argument does appear to have some merit, although the subsidies possibly could be removed without termination of the leases. Considerations of increased public access to the rivers do not seem important in light of the very small percentages of the river banks that the cottages occupy.

On the other side of the coin, termination of the cottage site leases at the end of 1989 apparently could cause some hardships involving elderly people who have taken up permanent residences in the cottages. It should be noted, however, that no guarantees have ever been provided to the leaseholders that the leases would be extended, and that most leases prohibit use of the cottages as fulltime residences. Also, termination of the leases would result in a minor loss of revenue (75% of the revenue is returned to local governments, which is used primarily by school districts). The cottage site lease holders have also pointed out a number of civic benefits that accrue locally from their presence, such as maintenance of the shoreline, deterrence of illegal dumping, and assistance to law enforcement officials.

With the above summary as a background, I would like to address each of the options mentioned in your letter. For ease of discussion, I have placed these in order of increasing desirability to the cottage site lease holders. The option to conduct a study, as you suggested, is addressed separately.

1. Allow leases to expire as now scheduled in 1989. Although this option is the best option in terms of project operational efficiency and floodplain management, it is not responsive to the concerns expressed by the cottage site lease holders and local government officials. Other options can satisfy many of the operational and management concerns while meeting most of the concerns of the present cottage site lease holders.

2. "Life estate" option. This option has some merit in that it would result in a phased termination of the cottage site program, thus taking care of most of the concerns of the Corps, while possibly reducing some of the opposition to the terminations. Unfortunately, we do not have enough information to determine the extent to which it would reduce the opposition. Some of the lease holders apparently feel that piecemeal terminations resulting from the life estate approach would cause hardships on remaining lease holders who maintain roads in common with others. Our information indicates that roads maintained by cottage owners cost between zero and $2,000 per mile per year to maintain. In the most severe case indentified by the Corps, four lease holders maintain four miles of road together.

We do not believe that a life estate provision similar to the language provided to your Committee earlier by the Corps would establish an undesirable precedent with respect to the leasing programs of the Corps or other Federal agencies.

3. Extend the leases for an additional set period of time. I believe this option represents the most reasonable course of action if it contains provisions for the leases to be made at fair market rentals, provides for liability waivers, contains a prohibition against reconstruction in the event of substantial damage due to flooding, restricts cottages to recreational uses only, and contains flexibility for leases to be terminated for park or other public purposes. Our information indicates that this option could simultaneously phase down the cottage site leasing program, increase revenue, and meet the concerns of the lease holders. A key feature of this option is the provision to increase rental rates to full fair market value. If lease rates are raised to fair market values, it probably would result in an increase in the rate at which leases are vacated by the lessees. Although we do not have data for the entire Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, the St. Louis District has eliminated about 20 leases per year under the old fixed rates. In addition to the gradual reduction in the number of cottage sites that could occur under this option, the increased rental rates probably would result in removal of the most unsightly cottages, leaving the more responsible cottage owners, and decreasing management and lease enforcement problems for the Corps. Furthermore, it could result in a significantly increased level of revenue from the program, most of which is returned to local governments.

4. Allow lessees to purchase their sites. Although this option is the most responsive to our desire to dispose of underutilized and unneeded Federal property, there are several disadvantages associated with it. The Corps feels that private ownership of inholdings along the river banks would exacerbate present management problems, since owners of such sites may be more likely to take unauthorized methods to stop erosion damage or to violate convenants or other conditions of sale than they are to violate lease provisions. Furthermore, all of the advantages of terminating the leases, cited earlier in this letter, are disadvantages of this option.

You may note that the option of performing a study to develop recommendations for a general Corps policy on all of its leased property has not been addressed above. I do not believe a study constitutes a meaningful solution to this problem. The Mississippi and Illinois River cottage site issue is separate and distinct from the remainder of the Corps real property leasing program, which already has a well developed set of policies and procedures. I believe that a study of this matter would not be a wise investment of taxpayers' money.

In summary, I believe the option of extending the leases of current leaseholders with provisions for periodic adjustments of lease rates to be the best course of action. It is responsive to the concerns of most of the lease holders and may also result in a situation acceptable to the Corps: a smaller number of cottage sites, removal of the unsightly cottages, reduced management problems, and increased revenue. This approach will avoid putting the government in the position of closing the leases and will let the market determine which are terminated and which are not. Gradual reduction in the number of cottage sites in this manner will not only be fair to present cottage site leaseholders, but will also be compatible with EO 11988, and will gain all of the advantages of immediate terminations of the leases, but at a gradual rate.

The "life estate" option is also a reasonable approach. It could provide the same advantages as the lease extension option along with an expectation that all cottage site leases eventually would be phased out. However, since the life estate approach is less responsive to the concerns of the leaseholders, it may not be the best solution to the cottage site problem although I believe it does warrant serious consideration.

It is important to note that the positions expressed in this letter refer only to the 1,345 cottage site leases along the Upper Mississippi and Illinois Rivers. These positions should not be construed to apply to houseboats, floating cabins, marinas or similar structures.

I am taking the liberty of providing copies of this letter to other interested parties. Please let me know if you would like to discuss this issue further with me or my staff.

Sincerely,

ROBERT K. DAWSON,

WHAT MEDICARE CUTS MEAN

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as we in the Senate debate and act on broad national policy questions, it is altogether too easy to forget the ultimate test of policies and programs is in their impact on the lives of individual Americans.

That, I think, is what happened earlier this year when the Senate approved provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act increasing the costs of health care to senior citizens under the medicare program—provisions which I opposed.

The importance of affordable quality health care to senior citizens and the vital role played by the Medicare system was illustrated vividly recently by a moving article in the Providence Evening Bulletin. The article was about a retired couple, John and Marian Fontaine, of Providence, RI, and set out in detail the desperate circumstances that confront far too many of our senior citizens, for whom health care has become an unaffordable luxury.

John Fontaine is a graduate of the Rhode Island School of Design. He was a pioneer in the use of art as a therapy for mentally handicapped individuals. Marian Fontaine is a graduate of Rhode Island College and taught in elementary schools throughout Rhode Island. After working for many years and serving both their State and community, John and Marian in retirement and ill health can no longer bridge the growing gap between their income and the bills they must pay. Cuts in the Medicare program have increased the gap and forced them to sacrifice needed health care to be able to pay for other, more immediate, necessities such as food and heat. After serving this country and their community for many productive years, Mr. and Mrs. Fontaine now spend hours talking with public agencies in an attempt to obtain some assistance for their heating and utility bills.

Mr. President, after a lifetime of work and service our seniors should not have to live the remaining years of their life, years that should be relaxing and rewarding, frantic about where the money will come from to pay the next grocery or utility bill. Nor, Mr. President, should our seniors be forced to sacrifice needed health and medical care because they cannot afford to pay the increased cost of their deductibles, physician's bills, and hospital costs.

John Fontaine, in a statement prepared for a rally held by the Senior Health Affordability Coalition, provides an eloquent evaluation of this situation. Mr. Fontaine said:

What are we to do? The prospect of becoming ill to anyone who is both aged and indigent is absolutely horrifying. It is impossible for me to find language strong enough to match my sense of the gross injustice, the unconscionable lack of basic humanity which permits this situation to exist even for an instant.

How much longer will we allow the cost of decent health care to stand between us and physical survival? For the grim fact is that the matter of proper health care in this country is, for the poor, a matter of life and death.

Mr. President, I ask that the article from the Providence Evening Bulletin of September 13, 1984, by Journal-Bulletin health writer Irene Wielawski, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The article follows:

JOHN AND MARIAN KNOW WELL WHAT THE MEDICARE CUTS MEAN

(By Irene Wielawski)

PROVIDENCE.—John and Marian Fontaine were school teachers all their working lives. He graduated from the Rhode Island School of Design and was a pioneer in using art as a form of therapy for the mentally handicapped. She graduated from the Rhode Island College of Education, and taught elementary school around the state. They raised four sons.

Now they huddle in the classics-filled study of their Providence home, trying to figure out how to pay the utilities and buy food. They spend hours on the phone wrangling with public agencies that might be able to help them with heating bills this winter. Once again, they put off an operation Marian has needed for the last five years.

On the worst days, they think about asking their sons for a bit to tide them over, then angrily reject the idea, ashamed for having even considered it.

"How long can you keep asking your sons, who are struggling to make it themselves, 'Gee, could you get this fixed? Could you help with this repair?" asks Marian.

John and Marian Fontaine are victims of the inevitables of life: old age and failing health.

The material gains of a lifetime of work are being whittled away by bills for medicines and health needs that Medicare—the federal health insurance for those over 65—won't cover.

Recent cuts in the $64 billion program—which annually serves 26 million elderly and 3 million disabled Americans—have increased the gap between what the Fontaines need and what they can afford. The program has deductibles built in for such things as hospitalization and physician services.

If they are well enough, John and Marian will be marching today to the State House with members of the Senior Health Affordability Coalition (SHAC), a group protesting cuts in Medicare and Medicaid funding and rate increases in private insurance programs for the elderly.

The group plans to present their case to Democractic State Chairman Julius C. Michaelson, Mark Zabierek, director of the Mondale-Ferraro presidential campaign in Rhode Island, and Lincoln Town Administrator Burton Stallwood, chairman of the Reagan-Bush campaign in Rhode Island. The SHAC invited Republican State Chairman John A. Holmes, Jr., but he declined, saying he would be out of state, according to SHAC spokeswoman Jann Campbell.

The Fontaines are living on $619 a month. The sources of this income are Social Security, John's Veterans Administration pension (he served in World War II) and Marian's teacher's pension. They also take in $295 in rents from tenants on the second and third floors of their Pleasant Street home, which covers the mortgage and minimal upkeep on the house.

The 100-year-old house, bought 12 years ago when the Fontaines could consider themselves comfortably middle class, is their last, albeit tattered, asset. Drafts from the hardwood floors are kept at bay by odd bits of warehouse carpet samples. The study's plaster ceiling came down some time ago, and in its place is an unpainted patchwork of sheetrock and joint compound rigged by one of their sons.

The last time they owned a car was in 1979. "Oh, it was a beautiful car—an Oldsmobile," Marian 66, says, sighing at the remembrance.

John, 68, frowns and shakes his head, dismissing the very idea of owning a car as something belonging to another life and best not dwelt upon.

"If we ever could afford to buy a car * * * My God! They are so expensive!, he says. "How could we keep it on the road: the price of gas, insurance. It's impossible * * *"

John, 68, an ebullient, witty man, takes pains to hide his own poor health, focusing instead on Marian's needs, on his frustration that Medicare will pay for a hearing aid for only one ear, despite tests that show she has lost just as much hearing in the other ear.

More urgent is the operation Marian needs for an abdominal problem. But the Fontaines have put it off for five years, trying medicines and measures less expensive than surgery because they could not come up with the Medicare deductible for hospitalization.

Last Jan. 1, that deductible went up $50, putting the operation even further from their reach. They are hard-pressed to come up with money for a daily newspaper and an occasional item of clothing, never mind $356 now required before Medicare will cover the rest of the hospital costs associated with the surgery.

"It's ridiculous! I watch 'Dialing for Dollars' faithfully in the hopes that I can get some money," says John, laughing too loudly at what he knows is a measure of his desperation.

John Fontaine got out of RISD in 1938, served in the Army Corps of Engineers during World War II, and held a number of art teaching jobs in colleges around the country before returning to his home state of Rhode Island.

From 1957 to 1964, he was an art therapist for retarded children at the state-run Ladd School in Exeter. He talks with pride about an exhibit of his students' work that he arranged at the RISD Museum in 1962.

He suffered his first heart attack in 1960, a second one in 1963. Continuing poor health forced him to retire from full-time teaching in 1964.

Marian helped support the family by teaching elementary school first in North Kingstown, then in Coventry, while John took in private art students to tutor them in the basics of drawing, painting and composition.

The walls of the Fontaines' apartment are covered with John's work—charcoal sketches of their sons as babies and small boys, a couple of large oil canvasses done in the cubist style of Picasso, self-portraits with and without his now snow-white beard.

He has crafted relief sculptures on the surfaces of the doors connecting the apartment's seven rooms, but deteriorating health over the last five years (two strokes, diabetes) has limited his creative efforts.

He is trying to write a book on education, penning it in clear, elegant script on a legal pad to be typed up later by Marian. He works in the study—a dark room so crowded with scholarly volumes of philosophy, art and literature that a bookshelf is wedged into the fireplace.

One day, he took a break from the book to write a letter representing his and Marian's experience with growing old and ill in America. If the Fontaines don't feel well enough to attend today's meeting, these are the words that they will send:

"What are we to do?" John writes in the letter. "The prospect of becoming ill to anyone who is both aged and indigent is absolutely horrifying. It is impossible for me to find language strong enough to match my sense of the gross injustice, the unconscionable lack of basic humanity which permits this situation to exist even for an instant.

"How much longer will we allow the cost of decent health care to stand between us and physical survival? For the grim fact is that the matter of proper health care in this country is, for the poor, a matter of life and death."●

VA ACHIEVEMENTS IN AGING AND GERIATRICS

● Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, today I wish to recognize the vast achievements made by the Veterans' Administration in the fields of aging and geriatrics.

Michael Dukakis, Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, proclaimed May 31, 1984, as "V.A. Research in Aging and Geriatrics Day" in conjunction with the observance of Senior Citizens Month.

The outstanding contributions of four regional VA research units in the areas of geriatric medicine and the aging process were recognized in ceremonies scheduled at the State house on May 31, 1984. The units include the normative aging and dental longitudinal studies of the VA outpatient clinic, Boston, and the geriatric research education clinical centers [GRECC] at West Roxbury/Brockton and Bedford, MA.

The normative aging study, one of the largest interdisciplinary studies on aging in the United States, has been cited for its contributions to our knowledge and understanding of the normal patterns of aging, the precursors of the diseases of aging—such as heart disease, hypertension, diabetes, and osteoporosis—softening of the bones—and the influence of these diseases on the aging process itself.

The dental longitudinal study, one of the largest interdisciplinary studies for dental aging in the Nation, and been cited for its contributions concerning the normal patterns on dental aging, the effect of tooth loss and artificial dentition on the dietary habits and nutritional status of the aged as well as the influence of these and other factors on oral diseases.

The West Roxbury/Brockton GRECC has been cited for important contributions to our understanding of age-related changes in endocrine and metabolic functions, the causes of impaired memory with age, and the health policy implications of an increasingly older population of veterans.

The Bedford GRECC has been cited for its comprehensive program for the study and treatment of patients with Alzheimer's disease and related disorders and for important contributions in arthritis research and other aspects of geriatric medicine.

The Governor commended the Veterans' Administration for its commitment and continuing support of these efforts "which ultimately hold promise of benefit to all older Americans."

Representatives of each unit were present at the ceremonies. These included Dr. Pantel S. Vokonas, director, and Drs. Jeremiah E. Silbert and Charles L. Rose, former directors of the normative aging study, Dr. Howard H. Chauncey, director of the dental longitudinal study, Dr. John W. Rowe, director of the GRECC at West Roxbury/Brockton and Edgar S. Cathcart, director of the GRECC at Bedford, MA.●

THE TRAGEDY OF BEIRUT

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, once again the world is confronted with an act of senseless and brutal terrorism in Lebanon. While we do not yet know the full magnitude of this latest tragedy, we do know that American blood has once again been shed and that people—innocent people—are suffering grievously.

It is premature to begin assessing the causes or impact of this terrible event, but it is not premature to reassert our determination—indeed our duty—to continue our struggle to create a world where events such as this cannot reoccur.

Terrorism, we are so painfully reminded again, is not a problem of Lebanon or of any other single country or region. It is a problem for us all. It is not a political question but a simple question of humanity. Let all of us, on this matter if on no other, put aside whatever other differences may divide us, and work—work together and work relentlessly—until the stain of terrorism is erased from this Earth.

My prayers, and those of all civilized people, are with the victims of this heinous act.●

SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY REFORM

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the members of the conference committee for their successful resolution of the differences between the House and Senate versions of the Social Security Disability Reform Amendments of 1984. This issue is one which many Members of the House and Senate have been concerned about since 1981, and I believe that the agreement which has been reached will go a long way toward ending the crisis which has developed concerning the continuing disability reviews.

One of the key features of the legislation concerns the use of a medical improvement standard in determining ongoing eligibility for benefits. In the past, the Social Security Administration used a standard which required that Social Security benefits continue in cases where an individual's impairment—the one for which he was originally granted benefits—has not improved. This policy was changed in the late 1970's and, as a result of the institution of triannual reviews, combined with no medical improvement standard, we have seen hundreds of thousands of beneficiaries terminated from the rolls, despite the fact that they still had disabling conditions. Many of these individuals appealed and were reinstated at the administrative law judge level. Others were reinstated by the Federal courts, and we began to see rulings which required proof from SSA that medical improvement had occurred before benefits could be terminated. The legislation requires that SSA use a medical improvement standard during its case review, and continue the same obligation for proof of continuing disability as a beneficiary is responsible for during the initial determination for disability benefits.

The legislation also includes provisions which require the Social Security Administration to consider the combined effect of multiple impairments in determining eligibility for benefits, require publication of revised listings of mental impairments within 120 days after enactment, make permanent benefits on appeal through the administrative law judge level for SSI disability recipients, and allow for the continuation of benefits on appeal through the administrative law judge level for disability insurance beneficiaries through December 1987. This disability bill also encourages the Secretary to comply with the Administrative Procedures Act requirements for public notice and comment on rulemaking procedures in all areas which relate to benefit determinations.

With respect to consideration of pain, the legislation codifies the current regulations with respect to pain. In addition, it requires that a study be done in consultation with the National Academy of Sciences on the issues of pain, and that the study be filed by December 31, 1985. The conferees have agreed that pain, in and of itself, shall not be considered a disabling condition.

The conferees did not include any provisions with respect to SSA's policy of nonacquiescence to court orders; however, the conference document contains a strong statement against the policy used by the Secretary, and suggests that she should use other means available to resolve conflicts in interpretation of the disability law—such as legislation remedies or appeal to the Supreme Court.

In brief, Mr. President, the conferees have approved legislation which will resolve a number of the most pressing problems that have plagued the disability review process over the last several years.

I am hopeful that the issues which have not been fully dealt with—such as pain—will be resolved when we receive the study required by the legislation. There is one area, however, which has not been addressed in the legislation which is of great concern to me. I remain deeply troubled by the efforts of the Social Security Administration to place pressures on administrative law judges to meet certain allowance rates in cases on appeal. It is my understanding that recently SSA has made some changes in its dealings with the administrative law judges, but I intend to continue watching their work closely to see that beneficiaries are insured a fair benefit hearing.

Once again, I would like to congratulate the conferees for a job well done. I would in particular like to commend Congressman PICKLE and Senator DOLE for their efforts to achieve agreement on this important issue before the fall recess.●

WHAT ARE THE SOVIETS DOING?

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, recently a most disturbing article appeared in the Wall Street Journal, "Spotting Soviet Strategic Advances," by William Kucewicz. The article detailed three new Soviet strategic initiatives to undermine our ability to deter Soviet nuclear intimidation: Making SS-20's intercontinental in range, enhancing existing cruise missiles, and developing a submarine-seeing radar.

The accuracy of Mr. Kucewicz's report has neither been publicly confirmed or denied. Unfortunately, only one of his three claims needs to be true to change dramatically our current understanding of how best to balance and reduce our strategic arms.

Mr. President, in the hope that wider circulation of this article might prompt further questioning by the Senate, I ask that the full text of Mr. Kucewicz's article be entered into the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 5, 1984]

SPOTTING SOVIET STRATEGIC ADVANCES

(By William Kucewicz)

During the 1980 presidential campaign, candidate Ronald Reagan promised to close the "window of vulnerability" created by the Soviet Union's massive arms buildup of the 1970s and our own lax response. Today, despite President Reagan's substantial increase in defense spending, that "window of vulnerability" hasn't closed. In fact, it is opening even wider.

Several recent Soviet breakthroughs in high-technology military armaments, currently worrying U.S. intelligence and military officials, go beyond anything the U.S. now has in its arsenal or plans to produce anytime soon. Indeed, such new Soviet weaponry soon could endanger all three legs of our strategic triad for the first time. These new Soviet threats loom so large that any talk of defense cuts during this year's election campaign is not only ill-informed but dangerous to Western security.

The perilous Soviet developments range from a quantum increase in the size of the U.S.S.R. intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) force, to supersonic cruise missiles, to space-based radar capable of detecting our nuclear-armed submarines at sea—the one leg of our triad previously thought to be invulnerable.

The SS-20 missile. The Soviets are preparing to target some of these supposed "intermediate range" missiles on the continental U.S., making them a new ICBM.

On April 2, 1984, six SS-20 missiles were test fired from the Yurga missile complex near Kirov in the western Soviet Union on a trajectory over the North Pole toward the U.S. The missiles, carrying dummy warheads, were destroyed in flight over the polar regions of the Barents Sea.

IMPENDING FUNDAMENTAL SHIFT

The launches marked the first time the Soviets have tested the SS-20—until now viewed as solely a threat to Western Europe and the Far East—on an azimuth directed at the continental U.S.

The SS-20 tests, first reported in the Heritage Foundation's "National Security Record" and independently confirmed by The Wall Street Journal, signal an impending fundamental shift in the balance of strategic forces between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. Intelligence data about the telemetry of the SS-20 tests indicate that by lightening the warhead load, the Soviets have increased the missile's range beyond the 5,500-kilometer threshold defined by SALT as an ICBM. Previously, the Soviets had maintained that the missile's range was a convenient 500 kilometers shy of that limit. In light of the April test firings, the SS-20 no longer can be viewed as just an intermediate-range missile threatening Europe and Asia—an interpretation the Russians have encouraged—but as a potential ICBM capable of hitting the U.S. mainland.

Not only have the majority of U.S. intelligence analysts heretofore underestimated the range of the SS-20, but they also have played down the number of these missiles being produced and deployed by the Soviet Union. The latest official U.S. statements cite 378 deployed SS-20s. In fact, the number of completed SS-20 launchers currently stands at 400, with another 20 under construction—nearly double the number deployed when President Reagan took office.

The number of launchers, however, tells only part of the story. The SS-20 missile is a two-stage, solid-fuel rocket, capable of carrying up to three warheads. It is launched from a relatively small, mobile platform that can be moved along most roads and, because of its size and mobility, is easy to conceal from U.S. reconnaissance satellites. Moreover, each launcher can handle more than one missile; it can be reloaded with additional missiles like bullets in a rifle.

Indeed, current U.S. intelligence data about the Soviet Union's SS-20 missile-production facilities indicate that the Soviets plan to deploy at least five reloads per launcher, in addition to the launcher's initial missile. In total, the Soviets are now preparing to deploy about 2,520 SS-20 missiles, carrying as many as 7,560 warheads targeted at Western Europe, the Far East and the U.S. That's a far cry from the planned U.S. deployment in Europe of 464 cruise missiles and 108 Pershing IIs, each carrying only one warhead, intended to counterbalance the SS-20 threat.

Soviet cruise missiles. The U.S. thus far has enjoyed a monopoly on these high-technology, drone aircraft, which can evade standard radar detection and hit a target with a high degree of accuracy due to computerized, terrain-mapping guidance systems. The U.S. advantage is not only coming to an end, the Soviets also are developing and deploying cruise missiles that may eclipse our own.

The Soviets are developing five different types of cruise missile. The sea-launched SS-X-21, now operational, is small enough to be fired from standard Soviet torpedo tubes; the SS-N-21 is now being deployed on the Victor III-class nuclear submarine. The ground-launched SSC-4 cruise missile is now being stationed in Warsaw Pact countries, in apparent response to NATO's intermediate-range missile buildup. The air-launched AS-X-15 is being tested on the Tu-95 Bear bomber and the new, long-range Blackjack bomber.

In addition to these three types of cruise missiles, which are similar to ones now being produced and deployed by the U.S. the Soviets are working on two other sea- and land-based versions for which the U.S. has no match. These new missiles would be supersonic, unlike the slow-moving U.S. models, and much larger, giving them the capability to travel longer distances and carry heavier payloads. Since late July, the Soviet press has bragged about the successful testing of the ground-launched versions of this new cruise missile.

But it's the sea-launched version of this supersonic cruise missile that has the U.S. Air Force extremely worried. This Soviet missile, apparently intended for deployment on the Soviet's stretched Yankee-class submarines stationed off the U.S. coast, potentially could destroy our Strategic Air Command bomber bases in the U.S. interior before many of our planes could get off the ground. Because of the cruise missile's low flight path, it can fly under standard radar and reach undetected into the heart of the U.S. in 30 to 45 minutes. By contrast, submarine-launched ballistic missiles, which can reach U.S. inland bases in six to eight minutes, would almost immediately be detected by U.S. radar because of the SLBM's high trajectory.

Space-based radar. The Soviets are working on a new type of radar to be based in space or in high-altitude aircraft that could detect many of our nuclear-armed submarines at sea. It is called synthetic-aperture radar. One military expert called the Soviet program "the most significant strategic development in 10 years."

The radar apparently can detect a submerged submarine by discerning subtle effects on the water's surface, on water moving around the submarine and even in the color and radioactivity of plankton. The Soviets have been testing the radar from high-flying aircraft and from the Salyut 7 space station against their own submarines with considerable success. The Soviet radar is far more sophisticated than the U.S. acoustic detection techniques.

The Soviet space-based radar program may provide a clue as to why the Kremlin was so keen recently about beginning talks with the U.S. on an anti-satellite (ASAT) treaty, even though it had walked out of other arms-control talks. A U.S. ASAT program would be able to blind such new Soviet radar satellites and thus could help preserve U.S. submarines at sea. An ASAT treaty would effectively protect these Soviet "eyes" and thus endanger our own submarine deterrent.

A Defense Intelligence Agency report, quoted in the Pasha Publication's "Military Space" newsletter, says that the Soviet space-based radar effort "is a matter of concern because it demonstrates that the Soviets are determined to destroy all three legs of the U.S. deterrent Triad if they possibly can find the means to do so."

SITTING DUCKS

In sum, the U.S. strategic triad could become more vulnerable to a Soviet knockout strike than ever before. Our Minuteman ICBMs are already undefended against the Soviet Union's large, accurate ICBMs, and the Soviet effort to build a nationwide antiballistic-missile (ABM) system could reduce the retaliatory impact of any surviving Minuteman. Our bombers, which face the challenge of penetrating the best air-defense system in the world, could become vulnerable to attack while still on the ground from low-flying, supersonic cruise missiles. Our nuclear-armed submarines, half of which are in port at any given time and are therefore sitting ducks, could become victims of Soviet space-based radar detection within a decade.

Given this growing Soviet threat, the U.S. must begin a diversified program to make our triad more survivable and capable of inflicting heavy retaliatory blows against the U.S.S.R. Strategic defense is one solution; an ABM system, or a "star wars" space-based defense, would significantly enhance the survivability of our forces on the ground. The production of a mobile, highly accurate ICBM like the Midgetman also would increase the credibility of our retaliatory response. Improved cruise missiles and Pershing IIs also would help counter the mounting Soviet cruise-missile threat.

Without such steps, the "window of vulnerability" will open even wider and the U.S. will be more at risk of a Soviet first-strike than ever before. When U.S. politicians during this year's election campaign argue over $100 hammers and defense cuts, the leaders in the Kremlin must be smiling.●

BOB BUICE

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, this September 25 will be known as Bob Buice Day in Arkansas, and a more fitting tribute to this distinguished man cannot be imagined.

For 47 years, Bob Buice has been a chief voice for agriculture in the State of Arkansas. His name is synonymous with agriculture and the farmer since going to work in 1936 as a youngster interested in radio and determined to find a place in the business. Even today, he travels nearly 2,000 miles a month—calling on farmers, attending county fairs and livestock sales, and staying in touch with the people of our State.

Bob Buice has represented Arkansas throughout the Nation and even in Soviet Russia, where he traveled back in 1959 with leading Arkansas farmers as part of President Eisenhower's "People to People" program. He has won a 35-year certificate from the National Association of Farm Broadcasters and other recognitions from the Association of Television and Radio Directors.

What thrills Bob more than anything is the special thanks he receives from young 4-H members in Arkansas and the region. He won the 1982 4-H Special Recognition Award for many years of service and dedication. Our young people have always looked to him as a leader in the field of agriculture, and we continue to listen to him when he talks about farms and the farmer.

These have not been good or easy times for the farmer, Mr. President, especially in Arkansas. But we all know that in Bob Buice we have a special friend. There is now a swimming pool being constructed at the Arkansas 4-H Center bearing his name in recognition of his dedication to this organization and its worthy aims. The center is in Ferndale, AR, about 10 miles west of Little Rock, where young people for years to come will recall the work of Bob Buice and his contribution to Arkansas.

I join the many friends of Bob's in recognizing him today, and in wishing him many more years of productive work ahead.●

PROBLEMS OF FEDERAL PRISON INDUSTRIES

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, on March 6, 1981, Jack Weinstein, chief U.S. district judge for the Eastern District of New York and Gerald Farkas, Chief of Operation for Federal Prison Industries, invited eight individuals from the private sector to meet and discuss the problems of Federal Prison Industries.

After this educational meeting, representatives from the private sector met on May 27, 1981, and agreed to form a business advisory council for Federal Prison Industries at the Federal correctional institution located in Danbury, CT. George Kennelly, assistant vice president, community and educational relations for New York Telephone, was selected by his peers to act as chairperson.

Under Mr. Kennelly's leadership, council members have volunteered some 3,000 hours of their time and business expertise in one of three standing committees:

First, prerelease/education; second, training and third, operations and planning.

Some 3 years later, the original mission statement still remains intact: To act as business people to assist Federal Prison Industries Incorporated, by providing the needed expertise to enable FPI to better prepare Federal inmates for the world of work and meaningful employment upon their release from prison.

The council established two broad goals: To develop a prototypal relationship between Federal Prison Industries and the private sector to be replicated throughout the Federal prison system; and to match the expertise available in the private sector with Federal Prison Industries needs to maximize the training and development of the inmate population.

The council was pleased that John Marshall Briley, president of Federal Prison Industries, noted in FPI's 1981 annual report, "A Message From the President," that, "The concept of a business advisory council and its recommendations has been enthusiastically accepted." To this end, in June, 1984, the council had contributed 54 recommendations of which 90 percent have been accepted and implemented in various forms.

On October 6, 1983, Mr. Kennelly addressed Judge Weinstein and the council, noting some of the council's recommendations that have had a direct or indirect effect on Federal Prison Industries.

Inmates have to take part in adult basic education in order to be employed by FPI. Failure to complete the sixth-grade level of education results in the individual never advancing beyond FPI's lowest pay grade—a nationwide policy change for FPI.

FPI has established part-time positions within the factory to accommodate the educational needs of inmates.

An educational and occupational handbook to advise inmates on how the training they receive at FPI can command high pay in the private sector.

Prerelease classes are no longer run on a nonsequenced admission basis.

Visual vial products and displays are in place to educate FPI's inmate work force as to just what they are producing and how it is used.

10 percent of FPI's work force are in cross-training programs.

Inmates now have to fill out applications and go through an interview in order to be employed by FPI.

Tracking of FPI's inmate work force once released back to society on a nationwide basis.

A standardized test for inmate advancement in grade.

A Pilot Outplacement Program for 20 inmates conducted by 11 council members, Federal probation and parole, and Federal Prison Industries allowed these inmates to partake in this program on a paid release time basis, also providing space and personnel.

FPI's staff members and foreman have taken part in various council member's development/training courses.

FPI now utilizes grade one inmates to conduct factory training programs.

Mr. Kennelly also stated to Judge Weinstein that, although the council had witnessed numerous cases of their recommendations pertaining to factory and warehouse operations being implemented, their greatest collective achievements were the acceptance of recommendations by FPI regarding the individual inmate's development.

With the publication of Mr. Kennelly's speech, "Private Sector Involvement" in the June 1983, issue of "Corrections Today" the council's goal of replication, starting other councils on a nationwide base has witnessed steadfast progress.

Mr. President, I believe the work of these dedicated individuals should be commended. We are in their debt for the effort they have devoted to this worthy project.●

S. 521, A BILL TO PROTECT INSTITUTIONALIZED CHILDREN FROM ABUSE

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I am cosponsoring S. 521, a tough and effective bill to combat child abuse in day care centers and other institutions where children are placed. I commend Senator SPECTER for his foresight in introducing this legislation.

At Tuesday's Juvenile Justice Subcommittee hearing on child abuse, I heard very persuasive testimony that, if S. 521 had been law 2 years ago, many of the worst child abuse cases in our history could have been prevented.

The Bronx County district attorney, Mario Merola, is bringing major prosecutions against day care center employees who are charged with sexually abusing 60 children more than 200 times. The oldest of these children was 8, the youngest only 2, when these crimes were committed. Mr. Merola testified that many of these crimes could have been prevented if S. 521 were law.

This bill provides that no person shall be employed at a juvenile detention, correction, care, or treatment center unless a nationwide criminal record check has been conducted. This could enable us to learn whether that individual has committed any crimes and whether he or she poses any danger to children.

One child care employee in the Bronx has been convicted of felony drug-dealing charges. He has admitted to using heroin regularly when he was working at the day care center. If S. 521 had been law and had been enforced, such a person would not have had the opportunity to molest children in any day care center because he would never have had a job there.

Mr. President, we need this legislation. Our children need it. How many more cases of abuse are occurring today? How many more convicted felons, dope addicts, and drug dealers are at work today in juvenile facilities?

S. 521 directs the Federal Government to help the States find out. It directs the Attorney General to assist State governments in their efforts to conduct criminal record checks on persons seeking work at juvenile institutions and day care centers. It also directs the Attorney General to furnish State governments identification and criminal history information and to facilitate the exchange of that information between States through a national index of State records.

We have waited to act on S. 521 for much too long. I urge my colleagues to give this bill their full support now, before too many more young lives are devastated.●

MARLIN JACKSON, ARKANSAS BANKING COMMISSIONER

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, last week the Senate considered and approved important new banking legislation. In the weeks and months before that vote, the Senate and the public had listened to many people speak on banking issues.

Among those individuals, I wish to commend my friend and Arkansas Banking Commissioner, Marlin D. Jackson. The commissioner has been a tireless supporter of the regional banking movement, and to address this issue he formed the Coalition for Regional Banking and Economic Development, a group supported by banks in every region of the country. The coalition and Marlin's powers of persuasion must be given some credit for the inclusion of title X in that legislation.

Commissioner Jackson, a self-proclaimed "redneck country banker," has been a force in banking in Arkansas and the Nation for more than a quarter century. In addition to owning his own bank in Paragould, AR, a bank being held in blind trust during his tenure as bank commissioner, Marlin is a frequent lecturer on banking, particularly agricultural lending, across the country.

He is a past chairman of the American Bankers Association's Agricultural Bankers Division, and has served the State of Arkansas in various posts with great distinction. Commissioner Jackson is a credit to the State of Arkansas, and all Arkansans should be proud of his well-deserved national reputation as a spokesman on regional banking and other matters.●

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 38 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON). The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 38) entitled the "Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act" having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of September 14, 1984.)

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, on May 14, 1981, S. 1182, a bill to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act was first introduced by myself with Senator NUNN cosponsoring. Since that time, the Senate Labor Subcommittee, which I chair, has held 4 days of hearings and the bill has undergone any number of rewritings. We thought that one compromise would become public law at the end of the 97th Congress. That did not happen.

At the beginning of the 98th Congress, I reintroduced amendments to the Longshore Act as S. 38. I am pleased that a compromise version is finally out of conference, has passed the House, and is before the Senate for a vote today. In my opinion, this compromise, taken as a whole, is worthy of final passage and provides many needed reforms to the Longshore Act. There are some provisions which, taken alone, cause me some philosophical problems. These concerns, however, are greatly outweighed by the benefits in the entire package.

The section which concerns me philosophically are the ones on occupational disease. My problem is providing benefits to retirees through a wage replacement system. I have consented to doing this in the longshore bill because of the benefits of the other provisions. This is not an endorsement of future efforts to federalize workers' compensation for occupational disease.

The conferees were also concerned over the effect of the Supreme Court's decision in Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. United States et al, —— U.S. ——, which decided that the Federal Employees' Compensation Act did not bar third party claims for indemnification. Because section 5(a) of the Longshore Act contains nearly identical language to FECA, we considered an amendment to section 5(a). However, the plain meaning of the existing language indicates that there should be no third party liability. In addition, the clear congressional intent of the 1972 amendments to the act was to eliminate the problem of "circular suits" whereby employers paid workers' compensation and then through suits by third parties became liable for additional amounts.

In amending the act today, we are strengthening further the language in section 905(b) to provide statutory immunity to shipyards against such negligence action. We believe this achieves the goal of the conferees of making workers' compensation under the Longshore Act the exclusive remedy against an employer and insulating the latter from multiple liability.

Many months were spent in an attempt to draw a bright line differentiating Longshore and State workers' compensation coverage. Such an effort was necessitated by the 1972 amendments which extended coverage shoreward without providing definite guidelines. Attempts to draw a more definite legislative line failed.

As a result, the bill carves out certain categories of workers and specifically excludes them from the definition of "employees" covered under Longshore. To assure there are no cracks, that is, that a worker is subject to either Federal or State coverage, the amendment conditions the Longshore exemption on these claimants being subject to State workers' compensation coverage. These exemptions and this approach is not intended in any way to extend coverage to any employees not currently under Longshore.

The need to amend the section dealing with medical services and supplies was made clear in hearings conducted by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. I am pleased that this bill contains a method to debar certain physicians from providing medical care under the Longshore Act. The intention is to put a stop to certain fraudulent activities identified by the permanent subcommittee which developed under Longshore.

In addition, other sections dealing with fraudulent activities identified by the permanent subcommittee were addressed. Penalties for misrepresentation to obtain benefits and for false statements to deny or terminate benefits were increased from a misdemeanor to a felony. Provisions to restrict claimants' representatives and grounds to disqualify these representatives were inserted into Longshore. Also employers are given the authority to obtain wage statements from claimants receiving benefits to monitor these cases.

I want to thank Senator NUNN and his staff for their cooperation, support and assistance in bringing this matter to the Labor Subcommittee's attention and in making these much needed changes in the law.

Under section 44 of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, self-insured employers and insurance carriers pay into the special fund on an assessment basis moneys necessary for the fund to meet its obligations. The present formula is prorata based on company/carrier losses during the year and all employer/carrier payments. The more cases an employer can put into the fund each year, the lower its assessment becomes.

The House and Senate committees attempted to rectify the problems as described in the two committee reports. (H. Rept. 98-570, pgs. 20-21 and S. Rept. 98-81, pgs. 34-35.) While considering the differences, an alternative approach in the form of a new assessment formula was devised and agreed to by most concerned employers/carriers. The new formula takes into account the amount of fund cases each employer/carrier has and strikes an average between the actual payouts of the old formula and use of the fund. Under this formula, abuse of the Fund will be discouraged and assessments to all concerned will be equitable. There will be changes up or down in every industry, but all will be treated equally. The new formula is section 24(a) of the conference reported S. 38.

Under these amendments, settlements will be much easier to obtain than under current law. If the parties agree and are represented by counsel, a settlement shall be deemed approved unless specifically disapproved by the Deputy Commissioner within 30 days after submission. Such settlement may also include future medical benefits if the parties agree.

The Benefits Review Board is increased from 3 to 5 permanent members. Four temporary members are allowed if requested by the chairman. There is concern over the growing backlog at the BRB and it is intended that the new members will be appointed quickly and the temporary members will be utilized in decreasing this growing backlog.

Death benefits are capped at 200 percent of the national average weekly wage, unrelated death benefits are repealed, and annual escalation of benefits is capped at 5 percent. These provisions are intended to make the Longshore Act insurable by providing some degree of certainty of future benefits. Further, any benefits received by a claimant are offset by any other workers' compensation or Jones Act benefits received for the same injury, disability, or death.

Overall, this package of amendments addresses the major problems identified under Longshore. The benefits greatly outweigh any perceived disadvantages.

I want to encourage the Senate to adopt these amendments today so that we can send them to the President for his signature.

In closing, I want especially to thank not only Senator NUNN but also Senators HATCH and KENNEDY for their assistance in bringing this compromise to the floor today. Also, I want to thank representatives MILLER and ERLENBORN for their work in the House.

Thank you.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is with a great sense of accomplishment and satisfaction that I join Senator NICKLES in urging the adopting of this conference report to S. 38—a bill which I had the privilege of cosponsoring. This measure is the product of literally a decade of intense debate, close scrutiny, and hard negotiation.

It is not the handiwork of a select few, fashioned duping some midnight hour. Many people contributed to the development of this bill, some of whom deserve special recognition. Senator NICKLES is to be commended for his diligent pursuit of these amendments. As a freshman Senator 3½ years ago, he tackled the Longshore Act as one of his first issues. And despite the disappointment of the 97th Congress, he pressed ahead in the 98th Congress for reform. As students of geography will attest, Senator NICKLES' home State of Oklahoma does not have many deep water ports and thus his State was more of an indirect, rather than direct, concern over the Longshore Act. Some might therefore have wondered whether after the discouragements of the 97th Congress, he should have turned his attention to interests closer to home. Yet, in mark of true leadership, as chairman of the Labor Subcommittee, he pressed ahead in this Congress.

I would also like to commend Senator KENNEDY, whose support of a consensus bill in the Senate provided a great boast to the legislation. Senator NUNN and Senator ROTH are deserving of recognition for their early work on the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. Their aggressive and thorough investigation of waterfront corruption brought to light the manner in which the current law was being abused by corrupt individuals. Their recommendations for enacting more stringent sanctions were invaluable contributions, and the conference report contains many of their recommendations.

I acknowledge also the tremendous contributions of Representative MILLER and Representative ERLENBORN, who led the House conferees. It is undisputed that without their dedication, and the tireless and highly professional work of their staffs, there would be no Longshore Amendments of 1984.

Because the legislation was so technical and complicated, the conferees had to rely heavily upon the assistance of the Department of Labor as well as the Office of Legislative Counsel. Among those who deserve commendation are Ms. Susan Meisinger, Mr. Cornelius Donoghue, Mr. Peter D. Galvin, Mr. Larry Rogers, Mr. Neil Montone, Mr. Irwin M. Wolkow, Mr. James Demarce, Ms. June Robinson, Mr. Carvin Cook, Judge Robert L. Ramsey, and Ms. Sydnee Schwartz. Also I express my thanks to Mr. Steven Cope in the Office of Legislative Counsel, who oversaw the final crafting of the statutory language. Finally, I would like to pay tribute to Mr. Robert Collyer, former Deputy Under Secretary of Labor for Employment Standards Administration, whose early leadership and contribution were instrumental in developing this measure.

The Longshore Act is like other workers' compensation laws in that it is not static. It is a dynamic one, continually evolving. The Congress, of course, has established the statutory framework, enunciating the major policy objectives toward compensating work-related injuries and deaths. However, the courts and the Department of Labor interpret and administer this law, and they must continually apply this law to unique situations which Congress did not envision. In many instances, the results are in keeping with congressional intent and purpose. But in other instances this interstitial lawmaking is clearly out of bounds and is disruptive of the consensus reached by employer and employee interest groups. In addition, it must be candidly acknowledged that Congress itself often sows the seeds for future legislative reform. The 1972 amendments are a case in point. Although to its credit it solved many problems, its craftsmanship has prompted Chief Justice Burger to observe that the act was "about as unclear as any statute could conceivably be * * *". The stage is thus set for congressional action when the collective product of judicial and administrative action finally activates a broad spectrum of interest groups to seek legislative change.

The Longshore Act does not lend itself to amendment easily or often. Like other labor laws, the act has been forged in the heat of political controversy, between the inherently adversarial forces of business and labor. It embodies compromises not easily reached, which are often then euphemistically described as "delicate balances." That internal balance could be easily destroyed if the act were subject to continual amendment.

S. 38 reflects a fragile consensus, carefully crafted over the last several years. It is a bill which provides benefits for all the affected interest groups. It benefits workers by facilitating the processing of occupational disease claims. It also benefits retired workers who become impaired as a result of a late manifesting occupational disease by affording an opportunity to obtain compensation. It enhances the insurability of the program, thus benefiting both insurers and self-insurers, by making the costs more predictable. It benefits certain employers in the shipbuilding industry by restoring an original purpose of workers' compensation, namely to immunize employers from tort suits as the quid quo pro for paying compensation. It benefits the Department of Labor, which administers this program, by providing greater manpower resources by which to adjudicate longshore cases. Finally, it benefits all participants in the compensation system by establishing new sanctions to deter those who have defrauded and abused it.

I would like now to discuss some of the important aspects of the conference report.

JURISDICTION

One of the most hotly contested areas of this act has been jurisdiction. Professor Larson has observed that prior to the 1972 amendments the act had "achieved a unitary and almost litigation-free rule of coverage." Injuries and death occuring over navigable waters were compensated under the act. But coverage stopped at water's edge. And, for those workers whose duties took them both on land and over navigable water, they found themselves literally walking in and out of coverage.

The 92d Congress, however, sacrificed the administrative ease of "water's edge" rule. The 1972 amendments enacted a generous boast in compensation, and Congress did not want to deprive amphibious workers and their land-based fellow workers of these benefits simply because their injuries occurred on land. But in extending coverage onto shore, the 1972 amendments adopted appallingly ill-defined rules of jurisdiction. In Professor Lawson's view, the rules have been a "double prolific generator of litigation," as the courts have endeavored to flesh out what Congress meant by "maritime employment" and adjoining" areas. Employers for almost a decade have called for a retreat of coverage to water's edge. But as the Senate Labor Committee finally concluded, it was neither desirable nor possible to stage a complete retreat to the sea. Instead, the Senate committee fell back on what was politically feasible, namely singling out several specific categories of occupations and activities for exemption. If there is a common thread running through the changes, it is probably the belief that these activities and occupations either lack a substantial nexus to maritime navigation and commerce or do not expose employees to the type of hazards normally associated with longshoring, shipbuilding, and harbor work.

Most but not all of these exemptions survived intact through conference.

Also surviving through conference are the understanding articulated in the Senate report to S. 38 (S. Rept. 98-81, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. at 26 (1983)):

It is the committee's intention that these amendments not be interpreted to enlarge the present scope of the act's coverage. Nor is it the committee's intention to include classes of employers not already subject to the act. Finally, with the committee making only limited changes to section 2(3), [ ] and section 3 of the act, it is obvious that a large body of decisional law relative to traditional maritime employers and harbor workers remains undisturbed. The decision not to evaluate, endorse, or reject, explicitly or implicitly, the lower court and agency decisions in these other areas was made deliberately by the committee in conjunction with the limited changes that are being made.

These views are pertinent to the conferees' decision not to include in the Conference Report the exemption for grain elevators, found in the Senate bill, and the exemption for fabrication of offshore oil production platforms, included in the House amendment. This latter proposal was prompted by a recent decision from one circuit. Thornton v. Brown & Root, Inc., 707 F.2d 149 (5th Cir. 1983). Though some might be tempted to argue otherwise, the absence of these exemptions in no way constitutes congressional endorsement of any judicial pronouncements of coverage. Neither the Senate nor the House attempted to revisit the concept of maritime employment which governs the definition of employee. Accordingly, the conferees did not attempt an articulation of criteria for determining what is maritime employment. In short, there emerged no political consensus either to affirm or to disaffirm the jurisprudence developing with respect to employees not covered by the exemptions in the conference report.

Without firm direction from Congress, courts must continue to grapple with defining the parameters of maritime employment. Conflicts among the circuit courts of appeals no doubt will continue to arise, and the Supreme Court will have to resolve these conflicts. This therefore admits to the possibility, for example, that another circuit may disagree with the fifth circuit's decision in Thornton as to coverage of offshore oil drilling fabrication yards. The stage would then be set for final review by the Supreme Court.

It should be noted that the exemptions in the conference report are predicated upon the availability of coverage under a State workers' compensation law. Where a State does not extend coverage to an employee otherwise deemed exempt under the Longshore Act, the latter exemption would not apply.

I would observe that there may be cases where an employee, in an effort to nullify the application of a Longshore exemption, will challenge whether State workers' compensation is available. There may be very rare cases where an employee unsuccessfully challenges an employer's assertion of a Longshore coverage exemption only to find that, upon application for State workers' compensation, procedural, as opposed to jurisdictional, bars threaten to deny benefits. The conferees do not contemplate that the employee will be able to reapply for Longshore benefits under the guise that State coverage is not available. Rather, the employee when confronted with the assertion of his exempt status is best advised to file a simultaneous claim under State law. In this way he can protect his State rights in the event that the Longshore claim is dismissed for jurisdictional grounds. This is no more burdensome than the current practice of some employees in some jurisdictions to file concurrently claims under State law and Longshore.

A variation on the above example should be noted. There may be equally rare instances where, following dismissal of a Longshore claim under an exemption, the State tribunal authoritatively interprets its law to deny coverage. In such cases, it is anticipated that the claimant will be able to renew his claim before the Department of Labor, showing that the employer is not entitled to the Longshore exemption after all. This will avoid the catch-22 situation of an employee being deprived of an opportunity to claim compensation under any system.

I would now like to comment briefly on one specific exemption.

SMALL VESSEL EXEMPTION

The conference report provides generally that an employee employed at a facility engaged in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling small vessels—as small vessels are defined in the provision—is not covered under the Federal Longshore Act unless his injury occurs while upon the navigable waters of the United States or while upon any adjoining pier, wharf, dock, facility over land for launching vessels, or facility over land for hauling, lifting, or drydocking vessels. This provision parallels that provided under the Senate-passed bill. A significant variation between the two, however, is that the conference report defines additional workplace areas adjoining the navigable waters where the exemption from Federal coverage is not available; injuries occurring on a pier or wharf, for instance, were exempt areas under the Senate-passed bill but not under the conference report. With respect to explaining the exemption, and in tracing its development, discussions upon introduction of S. 38, those contained in the Senate committee report (S. Rept. No. 98-81), and those held during its passage in the Senate, are a part of the legislative history of the provision and are relevent to its present meaning unless, of course, expressly superseded by language in this conference report, some of which I earlier referenced.

Eligibility for the small vessel exclusion depends upon whether the employer's facility is engaged in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling:

First, commercial barges under 900 lightship displacement tons (long); or Second, commercial tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, fishing vessels, or other work vessels under 1,600 tons gross.

For purposes of the second small vessel category, the conference report specifies some types of workboats; for example, tugboats but also includes other work vessels within the small vessel definition so long as they are under 1,600 tons gross. This generic reference was preferred over attempting to identify and list every conceivable workboat description; for example, utility vessels, ferries, Corps of Engineers dredges, patrol boats, pressure barges. A shipyard operation may qualify for exclusion from Longshore Act coverage under one or both of the small vessel categories discussed above depending upon the types and sizes of vessels involved. A shipyard facility may, for instance, be in the business of building and repairing commercial barges under 900 lightship displacement tons (long) and towboats under 1,600 tons gross and qualify for exemption from Longshore Act coverage.

The commercial barge exception is expressed in terms of vessel weight measurement; for example, lightship displacement tons (long); one long ton equals 2,240 pounds, and the general commercial workboat exception is expressed in terms of vessel volume measurement; for example, gross tons; one gross ton equals 100 cubic feet. It is our intent that this gross tonnage measurement remain at 1,600 gross tons as determined by the current formula contained in the act of May 6, 1864, as amended through 1974 (46 U.S.C. 77), and that the measurement for purposes of the Federal Longshore Act should not be altered because of any future amendment to the act of May 6, 1864, or any recommendation of the International Conference on Tonnage Measurement.

There are additional limitations to the availability to a facility of the exemption. A shipyard operation, for instance, must be in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling exclusively small vessels in order to qualify for the exemption. If a shipyard operation is engaged in work on a vessel larger than the sizes specified in the provision, the exemption from Longshore Act coverage is inapplicable and the otherwise excluded small vessel activity would be subject to Longshore Act coverage during the period the shipyard facility is engaged in work on the large vessel; that is, a motorized utility boat more than 1,600 tons gross. In the case of repair activity, this period would run from the time the large or otherwise ineligible vessel arrives at the shipyard for repair until the repair work is completed. In the case of new construction, it would run from the time the construction first takes on the characteristics of a vessel; that is, the keel is laid until the construction is completed.

Thus, a facility, in order to avail itself of the exemption, must in its shipyard operations be engaged in working on only small vessels. If such a facility engages in the construction or repair of a vessel larger or of a type other than those defined in the provision, those employees who would be subject to the exemption would be covered under the Federal Longshore Act during the period of activity on the nonqualifying vessel. Once the facility is again engaged in exclusively small vessel operations, the exemption would apply. We expect the Secretary to develop appropriate regulations consistent with this legislative intent to help effectuate the exemption in this respect. We also expect the Secretary to certify that these facilities are, insofar as Longshore Act coverage is concerned, engaged in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling only small vessels and therefore are eligible for the exemption to the extent it applies.

Additionally, the exemption applies only to facilities that are in the business of building, repairing, or dismantling commercial barges, tugboats, towboats, crew boats, supply boats, fishing vessels, or other work vessels. The emphasis is on the use in commerce of these vessels being built or repaired. Shipyard operations that are in the business of noncommercial vessel work; for example, military patrol boat construction on these vessels are not entitled to the exemption during the period of that activity regardless that the noncommercial vessel may be small under the terms of the provision.

Two additional limitations on the availability of the small vessel builder and repairer exemption involve facilities receiving Federal maritime subsidies and the requirement that the exemption is applicable only to employees subject to coverage under a State workers' compensation law. With respect to the first limitation, the particular shipyard facility may not receive Federal maritime subsidies and be entitled to the coverage exclusion. This restriction is intended to continue within Federal coverage operations of employers that receive the direct maritime subsidies contained in the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended; specifically, the construction differential subsidy program [CDS] and the operating differential subsidy program.

For example, if an employer's facility enters into a CDS contract with the Government and receives a subsidy for the construction of a vessel, the operation would not be eligible for exclusion from Longshore Act coverage regardless of the nature of vessel work undertaken at the operation. Facilities that may benefit indirectly or nonvolitionally from the operation of various Government policies and programs, for example, special tax treatments, cabotage laws, financing guarantees—are not affected by this maritime subsidy limitation. With respect to the second limitation referenced, if an employee within the scope of this exemption from Federal coverage is not subject to coverage under a State workers' compensation law, the employee remains under Federal coverage. The objective here simply is to ensure that an employee does not fall between Federal and State coverage. Clearly, the exemption defers to State coverage but if such coverage cannot reach the subject employee, then that employee must remain subject to the Federal law.

OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE CLAIMS

Probably no issue has received more attention, or generated more controversy in recent years in the area of workers' compensation than the adequacy of the current systems to compensate victims of occupational disease.

The problems of making a correct assessment of this controversy are manifold. The first is our limited understanding of the dimensions of the problem in this country. Although the media gives the distinct impression that occupational diseases pervade the entire population, the scientific data does not tend to support that impression. Second, while there is evidence that the workers' compensation systems are not being deluged by a great number of occupational disease cases, it is not possible to draw an unambiguous inference from these statistics. It is arguable that the low percentage reflects a true prevalence of the problem and that the current system is dealing adequately with the relatively few cases. In contrast, critics charge that the paucity of cases demonstrate how the current system has erected procedural and substantive bars to the many victims of work-related diseases, thus discouraging the filing of claims.

The 1984 Amendments to the Longshore Act do not pretend to resolve this debate. Rather, in a straight forward manner, they address several specific issues which have been drawn to the committees attention concerning the capacity of the Longshore Act to compensate occupational disease cases in a fair, adequate and expeditious manner. At the outset, it should be stressed that the Longshore Act has unqualifiedly compensated for occupational disease for decades. We are not confronted with a statute which by its terms is hostile to certain occupational diseases, or limited by unrealistic exposure limitation rules, or discriminatory in establishing benefit levels.

Yet, the statute has been interpreted in certain circumstances to frustrate the purposes of the act. Current law adopts a manifestation rule that tolls the prescriptive periods under sections 12 and 13. These sections even include provisions allowing either waiver or further tolling in particular situations. Yet, there was evidence presented to the committee that certain employers were able to utilize these rules, without showing material prejudice to themselves, to bar otherwise legitimate occupational disease claims. The Conference substitute lays down special time limitations for occupational disease cases: claimants have up to two years from date of manifestation to file a claim. This comports with the rule adopted in many States, including the recent amendment to the New York law, which has often served as a model to the Longshore Act. Second, the notice requirement has been extended from 30 days to 1 year.

It is noted that both the notice and time limitation rules incorporate a medical advice trigger, which is activated when a claimant receives medical advice as to the manifestation of the disease and its link to employment. This is essentially a presumptive evidence standard which operates for the benefit of the claimant. But the statute still retains the reasonable diligence standard, which is essentially an objective, "reasonable man" guideline.

The medical advice standard is designed to temper the operation of the reasonable diligence standard. Physicians still today commonly fail to recognize many occupational disease symptoms or their relationship to employment. Thus, it may not be reasonable to expect that a worker at a certain point in time will recognize symptoms or their relationship to employment. In such cases, the medical advice rule will prevent the defeat of the claim. Yet, there still may be certain specific cases where the subjective factors convincingly establish that a claimant knew, or should have known, he had an occupational disease and that it was employment-related. Such factors would include the workers' education, his age, the length of time he is exposed to a particular industrial process, an understanding of the manufacturing process, his awareness of workers compensation, and past medical history.

Obviously, the limitations periods embody a balancing of competing interests. A claimant deserves every reasonable opportunity to prosecute a legitimate claim, even one that takes years to ripen. But there are other worthwhile policy objectives. Prescriptive rules are designed to discourage claimants from "sleeping on their rights." Further, people are entitled to settle their affairs, without fear that at some ill-defined point in the future—when documentary evidence is unavailable and memories are dim—they will have to account for past injurious conduct. The Longshore Act as amended reaffirms this balancing of interests. But the conferees clearly expect the act to take account of the unique nature of occupational diseases. Medical knowledge, and common understanding, of the etiology, the symptoms, and the nature of occupational diseases are still maturing. Victims of occupational diseases should not be unfairly penalized because of contemporary limitations of medical science and the latency of some such diseases.

RETIREES

The second issue addressed with respect to occupational disease is whether retirees, or their survivors, should be entitled to compensation where the disease does not manifest itself until after retirement. Assuming that they should be, a further question arises as to the level of benefits.

The Longshore Act does not contain express rules governing compensation for retirees. Yet, since the beginning, it has been beyond cavil that benefits paid to a worker disabled during employment could continue throughout his retirement years. The Senate bill took this for granted as it added an offset provision authorizing an employer to reduce its compensation liability by a percentage of the amounts an employee became eligible to receive Social Security benefits. The theory behind this proposal was that workers' compensation and Social Security are both an income-replacement merchanism and that there should be some coordination of benefits. It will be recalled that workers' compensation developed and matured during a time that antedated Social Security. And generally workers' compensation laws have not been amended to take account of Social Security.

The House Labor Committee flatly rejected any Social Security offset. While the issue was joined in conference, a series of controversial rulings at the agency level came to the attention of the conferees. In Abuddell v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, 16 BRBS 131 (Feb. 28, 1984), the Benefits Review Board denied compensation benefits to a worker who had manifested an occupational disease—asbestosis—after permanently retiring from the work force. The Board viewed the retiree as, by definition, being without a wage-earning capacity. Therefore, the disease could not diminish that capacity for purposes of computing compensation. An identical result was reached in Redick v. Bethlehem Steel Corporation, 16 BRBS 155 (Mar. 20, 1984). Similarly, in Worrell v. Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, 16 BRBS(ALJ) 216 (Mar. 15, 1983), an administrative law judge ruled that a widow was not entitled to death benefits where her retired husband died from mesothelioma. The judge reasoned that the retiree's average weekly wage at the time of death was zero, which must be regarded as the ceiling placed on such benefits by virtue of section 9(e).

The conferees concluded that these interpretations of the Longshore Act did not represent equitable policy. A person's eligibility for compensation should not necessarily be dependent upon the fortuity of when he becomes disabled. Moreover, it is arguable that the Abuddell decision ironically sows the seeds for mischief against employers in the future. It will be remembered that workers' compensation embodies a social contract between employers and employees. One commentator summarized it as follows:

> Workmen's compensation acts are in the nature of a compromise or quid pro quo between employer and employee. Employers relinquish certain legal rights which the law affords to them and so, in turn, do the employees. Employers give up the common-law defenses of the fellow servant rule and assumption of risk. Employees are assured hospital and medical care and subsistence during the convalescence period. In return for a fixed schedule of payments and a fixed amount in the event of the worker's death, employers are made certain that irrespective of their fault, liability to an injured workman is limited under workmen's compensation. Employees, on the other hand, ordinarily give up the right of suit for damages for personal injuries against employers in return for the certainty of compensation payments as recompense for those injuries. 1 M. Norris, The Law of Maritime Personal Injuries § 55, p. 102 (3d ed. 1975).

The effect of Abuddell and Worrell, it seems to me, is to deny to employees and their survivors part of the benefit of the bargain. It would not take a great leap in logic for a court to conclude that the deprivation of the right to compensation should vitiate the employer's immunity for tort liability. The conference substitute forecloses this possibility by reaffirming that a retiree retains his employee status for purposes of compensation.

The conference substitute therefore makes express provision for the payment of benefits to retirees who become disabled during retirement as a result of an occupational disease. It should be noted, however, that the type of benefit paid to a retiree whose disease manifests itself during retirement will be an impairment benefit and will be considered a species of permanent partial disability, if it indeed is permanent. This impairment will be evaluated under guidelines of the American Medical Association. It should also be noted that by being considered a form of permanent partial disability, no matter its extent, a retiree's impairment cannot legally ripen into a permanent, total disability, for purposes of the act.

Where a retiree manifests an occupational disease impairment over a year after retirement, and otherwise establishes eligibility under the act, his benefit will be calculated by a formula which is keyed to the national average weekly wage at the time of manifestation.

I would also point out where a retiree receiving an impairment benefit dies, any survivor claims for death benefits under section 9 of the act must still satisfy the existing rules of evidence and burdens of proof. A claimant will have to establish to a reasoned medical certainty that the decedent's "injury" caused his death.

EXCLUSIVE LIABILITY OF SHIPBUILDERS

The conference report adopts the Senate proposal, left unchanged by the House, to bar certain tort suits against shipyards which are otherwise liable for workers' compensation. As explained in the Senate report, section 5(b) of the act, added in 1972, has been judicially interpreted to allow a shipyard employee to bring a maritime negligence action against its employer in the latter's capacity as owner of a vessel being built or repaired. The Shipbuilder's Council of America testified during hearings in 1981 that these actions for maritime negligence, when combined with the Longshore Act's generous compensation benefits, placed an impossible burden on shipyard employers. It urged that employers should be responsible for workers' compensation exclusive of any theory of tort recovery.

The legislation addresses this dual capacity problem in two respects. First, it bars the direct maritime tort action against the employer in its capacity as a "vessel" as the term as defined in the Longshore Act; that is, vessel owner, owner pro haec vice, et cetera. Second, the amendment addressed the situation where the injured employee may bring an action against a third party which is deemed a "vessel" as defined by the act. An example is an oil company which owns a tanker and brings it in for repairs at the shipyard-employer. In response to the suit, the oil company as "vessel" may attempt to implead the shipyard-employer under contractual or tort theoriers of indemnity or contribution. The amendment bars any such liability against the employer. This is in keeping with the policy, contained in the first sentence of section 5(b), against exposing an employer to liability to a vessel for the latter's tortious injury to an employee. Thus, shipyards are afforded the same immunity from suits by vessels which stevedores enjoy under the 1972 amendments.

It should be noted that the amendment to section 5(b) does not reach the sensitive issue of whether the exclusive remedy rule of section 5(a) generally bars an unrelated third party from obtaining contribution or indemnity from the employer where the employer's negligence has caused or contributed to the employee's injury. As Professor Larson has concluded, as a general matter, third-party actions over against an employer present "perhaps the most evenly balanced controversy in all of workers' compensation * * *." (A. Larson, Third Party Over Against Workers' Compensation Employer, 1982 Duke L.J. 483, 484 (1984)). And, last year, the Supreme Court spoke to the issue in the context not of the Longshore Act, but rather of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act. In Lockheed Aircraft Corporation v. United States (460 U.S. 190 (1983)), The Court held that section 8116(c) of title 5, United States Code—the counterpart to section 5(b)—did not bar an unrelated third party's indemnity action against the United States for injuries to a Federal employee. Since, then, questions have been raised as to the decision's impact on the Longshore Act. In fact, one district court has recently ruled that, under the rationale of Lockheed, section 5(a) does not bar an unrelated third party's action against a longshore employer. In re All Maine Asbestos Litigation (BIW cases), (D. Me. March 9, 1984).

Neither the Senate bill nor the House amendment specifically addresses this issue. And, thus to the extent it is a problem, the conference report leaves it unresolved. I personally doubt, however, whether Lockheed poses a serious threat to longshore employers. The courts have long recognized that a longshore employer whose concurring negligence contributed to an employee's injury cannot be sued as a joint tort feasor by the third party seeking contribution. See, for example, Halcyon Lines v. Haenn Ship Ceiling & Refitting Corp. (342 U.S. 282 (1952)). Moreover, on the question of indemnification, the courts generally have not sustained a third party defendants's claim over against a longshore employer for noncontractual indemnity, See, for example, White v. Johns-Manville Corp. (662 F.2d 243 (4th Cir. 1981)). And, even in Lockheed, the Court did not resolve the underlying substantive claim for indemnity; it considered only whether the exclusive liability provision was a statutory bar. See Lockheed, (460 U.S. at 197 n. 8).

No doubt, convincing arguments can be made that the principle of exclusive liability under workers' compensation should shield employers from further liability, whether directly or indirectly under any theory of contract or tort law. But S. 38 did not set out to resolve the issue in a comprehensive manner. To do so properly, the committee would have had to examine all sides of the triparte relationship between the employer, the employee, and third parties. For example, it is arguably unfair to proscribe third party indemnity actions against an employer without considering the abrogation of, or at least limitation on, employer's subrogation rights and its compensation lien. Moreover, in certain circumstances, an employer has recognized rights against third parties, growing out of workplace injuries to an employer. See, for example, Federal Marine Terminals v. Burnside Shipping Co. (394 U.S. 404 (1969)). These rights perhaps should undergo modification. Similarly, any limitation on the employer's rights would have to be accompanied by rule changes designed to prevent an employee from enjoying double recovery against his employer and a third party. Any overall review of these questions must wait for another day. In the meantime, we can perhaps benefit from the experience be gained from enactment of a uniform product liability proposal S. 44, which the Commerce Committee reported earlier this year. That measure does propose some major modifications of the triparte rights and liabilities of employers, emloyees, and third parties.

THIRD-PARTY ACTIONS BY EMPLOYEES

The Senate bill amended section 33(f) to establish that compensation paid by an employer shall be a first lien on any proceeds obtained by an employee in a tort suit against a third party. Implicit in this proposal was that the legal expenses of the employee, including attorney fees, would be totally subordinated to the compensation lien. The House amendment essentially reversed the order of priority. It would have permitted the employee to pay his attorney fees and litigation expenses first, before satisfaction of the compensation lien. This would be important where an employer's lien equalled or exceeded the amount recovered in the third-party action. The House committee was concerned that an employee might conceivably be worse financially after incurring the expense of a suit than if he never had brought an action at all. In addition, the House committee believed that the employee was entitled to shelter a portion of recovery [15 percent] from any compensation lien. That committee viewed the 15 percent set-aside as comparable to the employer's right under section 33(e)(2) to retain 20 percent of any recovery in excess of litigation expense and compensation liability.

The conference agreement adopts a middle ground. First, it rejects the 15-percent set-aside in the House amendment and modifies current law by eliminating the employer's 20-percent set-aside in section 33(e)(2). Second, it requires that the employee's litigation expenses including reasonable attorney fees, be paid out of any recovery prior to the satisfaction of the compensation lien. It should be stressed though how this rule has special application in the cases where the aggregate of the litigation expenses, the employee's legal fees, and the compensation lien leave the employee with little, if any, recovery. In such circumstances, the conferees found merit in the approach articulated by the court in Ochoa v. Employers National Insurance Company, 724 F.2d 1171 (5th Cir. 1984). That case held that where an employee's third party recovery was insufficient to cover both his attorney fee and the compensation lien, the lien was payable out of the net recovery, after costs of litigation, including reasonable attorney fees, were subtracted. The court of appeals emphasized that only reasonable attorney fees were allowed. Thus, where the recovery is insufficient to cover both the attorney fees and the compensation lien, leaving the employee with nothing, the court must evaluate the reasonableness of the fees and make an equitable adjustment as between the employee and his attorney. As noted in Ochoa, this approach attempts to do justice to the employee while upholding Bloomer v. Liberty Mutual Life Insurance Company, 445 U.S. 74 (1980), which forecloses an adjustment of an employer's lien in order to underwrite the attorney fees of the employee.

BENEFITS REVIEW BOARD

The Senate bill and House amendment both responded to the overwhelming backlog of cases burgeoning at the Benefits Review Board. It is estimated that the current 3-member Board will see its docket expand from over 6,700 cases in fiscal year 1984 to an excess of 9,100 cases by fiscal year 1986. Roughly 20 percent of the cases are appeals under the Longshore Act, while the remainder are black lung cases. This backlog translates in an average disposition time of 3.7 years as of fiscal year 1984, and it will protract to 5.1 years by fiscal year 1986.

Clearly and unfortunately, the situation gives contemporary meaning to the maxim that "justice delayed is justice denied." Equally clear additional manpower must be made available. The Senate bill gave discretionary authority to the Secretary of Labor to appoint up to four administrative law judges temporarily to the Board. The House amendment expanded the Board's permanent membership from three to five members, and it mandated the appointment to three administrative law judges for 18-month terms when the case backlog exceeds 1,000 cases.

The conference substitute expands the Board's permanent membership to five members. It also gives the Secretary authority to appoint up to four temporary members from the ranks of the ALJ's. The conferees believe that the prerogative of the Secretary should be preserved; hence appointment authority was made discretionary rather than being automatically mandated as a function of case backlog. At the same time, the conferees fully expect the Secretary to act with dispatch and to take full advantage of his authority to allocate sufficient manpower and resources toward reducing the backlog. This is a priority which should not be subordinate to other considerations.

I anticipate that the Labor Committees of both Houses will follow this problem closely. And they will be prepared to work in concert with the Appropriations Committees to assure that the Department of Labor allocates sufficient resources to reduce this unconscionable backlog.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that this is a compromise bill. It does not contain everything which the employer community wanted. It does not contain all the changes which employee representatives sought. Yet, the conference substitute has been reviewed by various members of both the business community and organized labor. They support the bill. In addition, we have received letters of support from the National Association of Stevedores, Bethlehem Steel Corp., the Alliance of America Insurers, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Bath Iron Works Corp., Ogden Corp., and the AFL-CIO.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I would like to commend Senator NICKLES, my very distinguished colleague from Oklahoma for his tireless efforts to reform the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. We have before us the conference report to S. 38, the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act Amendments of 1983. The conference report makes many needed changes to this act. Senator NICKLES, Senator HATCH, and many others on the Labor Committee have been working for some years to forge this compromise. I am extremely pleased to be able to support Senator NICKLES and I urge my colleagues to do so as well.

In 1917, the Supreme Court held that the worker's compensation law of the State of New York could not be constitutionally applied to an injury suffered by a longshoreman while unloading a cargo ship. The Court invalidated application of the State law to an injury occurring over the navigable waters on the ground that the State worker's compensation act conflicted with the general maritime law and would to the application of dissimilar laws in a field which required national uniformity.

In 1927, Congress filled the void which was left in the wake of the early Longshore decisions; it enacted the Longshoreman's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, providing coverage to employees injured—including injury by occupational disease—while engaged in maritime employment over the navigable waters of the United States.

By 1961, the Longshore Act was deemed a leader in the field of worker's compensation with only four State compensation laws affording greater protection to injured workers and their families. By 1971, however, 20 States afforded injured workers greater protection, at least in terms of wage loss benefits. During this time that the act was falling behind in providing adequate income replacement benefits, the courts were seriously undermining one of the cornerstones of worker's compensation law—that it should be an exclusive remedy against employers for work related injuries and death. Many of the significant cases had the effect of exposing employers, typically stevedores, to multiple liability, commonly through first a workers' compensation claim and then in a lawsuit predicated on rules of strict liability under the doctrine of unseaworthiness.

Thus, the 92d Congress in 1972 faced a very unsatisfactory state of affairs. Injured employees covered under the act were not receiving adequate benefits. Employers would not agree to substantial increases and revisions in the benefit structure as long as they faced significant liability in lawsuits brought outside the compensation system. The 92d Congress eventually was able to forge a comprehensive set of revisions.

The 1972 amendments were designed to eliminate the weaknesses of the act. Benefits were greatly improved. Changes were made in the administration and adjudication of claims. Limitations were placed on third party liability. Finally, the act was extended to shoreside areas. This constituted a change of a fairly serious nature from the original act's coverage, which was recognized as ending at the water's edge.

The 1972 amendments to the law have pushed the Longshore Program beyond reasonable limits. Coverage is now extended to nearly 1 million workers who, during a workday may come near the water's edge. Even workers in the pleasure boating industry and in summer camps, marinas, and maritime museums have been deemed to be covered by the Longshore Act.

Just 5 years after the passage of the 1972 amendments, reported injuries jumped 185 percent and the number of claims increased along with them, from 72,000 in 1972 to 205,000 by 1977. Similarly the cost of benefits has increased more than 551 percent since 1972. This rise in the cost of benefits has meant a rise in the cost of premiums to covered employers. At great cost to themselves, those covered employers have been forced to self-insure, because coverage under the Longshore Act is simply unaffordable.

The benefits provided under this act are among the highest paid by any federally mandated workmen's compensation program and are much higher than under State worker's compensation programs. In fact, the high benefit structure of the Longshore Act has made this not only a worker's compensation program, it has grown into a life insurance and pension program as well.

The Longshore Act has not proved to be the model and unifrom compensation program it was represented to be when the 1972 amendments were passed, but when the Senate passes the conference report to S. 38, I strongly believe that we will be closer to the goal of providing fair and equitable compensation to longshoremen and harbor workers who are injured while working over the navigable waters of the United States.

In closing, I would like to commend my colleagues who labored so long to bring this conference report to the Senate. Senator NICKLES first and foremost has shown his good will and commitment in getting this act reformed. Also I commend Senator SAM NUNN for his leadership in reforming this act. I know that he has spent countless hours in support of this compromise. I give Senator NICKLES, Senator HATCH, Senator NUNN, and all the cosponsors of this legislation my personal thanks and I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD SUNSET ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 5297 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON). The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5297) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to terminate certain functions of the Civil Aeronautics Board, to transfer certain functions of the Board to the Secretary of Transportation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their repective Houses this report, signed by all of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of September 14, 1984.)

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to give their speedy approval to the conference report on H.R. 5297. We seldom achieve eveything we would like in a piece of legislation and I am sure that this bill is an example of that. It is time to approve it, however, because the good that it does far outweighs any problems that might exist with the legislation.

As my colleagues know, H.R. 5297 provides for an orderly sunset of the Civil Aeronautics Board. When Congress deregulated the airlines in 1978, it also set December 31, 1984, as the last day of existence of the CAB. Unfortunately, that 1978 legislation left some loose ends in the sunset process. For some 3 years now we have been exploring the need for additional legislation to accomplish sunset. There have been numerous and extensive hearings both in the Senate and the House. No one can claim that they have not had an opportunity to be heard on this issue.

I am aware of only one real objection to this conference report. Senator RUDMAN and a few others believe that the authority to grant antitrust immunity should be lodged in the Department of Justice rather than at the Department of Transportation, as H.R. 5297 does. The Senate version of H.R. 5297 did send antitrust immunity to DOJ. The House prevailed on this issue in conference, however.

I am sure we will get into the merits of the DOT-DOJ argument soon enough. First, however, I would like to remind my colleagues of what it means if we vote to recommit this report or actually defeat it. Given the very short number of legislative days left, it is almost certain that either action will mean that no sunset legislation will be passed before the year end demise of the CAB. What will this mean? It will mean a potential disaster for the airline consumers of this country.

The primary impetus behind this sunset bill is the uncertainty that the 1978 Deregulation Act left surrounding the CAB's consumer protection rules. Without H.R. 5297, the CAB's authority over unfair and deceptive practices simply disappears on December 31, 1984. Let me repeat that, on January 1, 1985, there will no longer be any statutory basis for consumer protection of airline passengers. This does not just mean that no new rules can be issued—the enforceability of the entire set of existing consumer protection rules would be very questionable. Thus, there would be no legal basis for the existing rules on baggage liability, denied boarding compensation, computer reservation system bias, and smoking aboard aircraft. Years of effective and fair CAB work in these areas will be thrown out the window.

There are those who would say that there is no need to worry—the Federal Trade Commission can regulate airline consumer affairs just as it does any other industry. The problem with that, other than what happens to existing rules, is that the FTC is bared, by law, from doing so. The relevant section of the FTC's powers is section 5(a) of the FTC Act. It establishes the FTC's consumer authority over all persons and corporations, and I quote now, "except air carriers and foreign air carriers * * *" The deputy general counsel at DOT, after a very strained analysis, concluded the Congress really did not mean what they said in section 5(a) of the FTC Act. Now I am not a lawyer, but it defies my imagination to believe that a court could ignore such a clear and unequivocal prohibition. At the very best, a carrier which did not like a particular rule could tie up its enforcement in protracted and costly litigation.

This bill does several other useful things besides preserving consumer protection. It preserves the so-called fitness determination of section 401(d) of the Federal Aviation Act. If H.R. 5297 is defeated, no one will be empowered to examine prospective airlines to see if they are even remotely trustworthy enough to handle the public's money. Sure, the FAA will continue to make sure prospective carriers have enough manuals and nuts and bolts to operate, but the first line of defense against con artists and slipshod operators will be gone. Also, H.R. 5297 makes needed allowances for personnel transfers and other administrative items to ensure an orderly transfer of functions.

The bottom line in all this is that I would hate to see the airline consumers of this country lose their protection while we argue about a somewhat esoteric antitrust provision. There comes a time, after 3 years of discussion, when we have to call it quits and approve what we have. I hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting this conference report.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I commend my colleagues, Senators KASSEBAUM and PACKWOOD for their efforts to bring the CAB sunset conference report to the floor of the Senate. They have worked long and hard to insure that the sunset of the Civil Aeronautics Board will not create undue confusion in the aviation industry and will minimize the impact on our Nation's air travelers. Although I still have my doubts about the total deregulation of the aviation industry, this legislation provides necessary guidance which will enable the continued orderly deregulation of our Nation's transportation industries.

I also thank Senators GOLDWATER, HOLLINGS, and EXON, as well as Senators PACKWOOD and KASSEBAUM, for their sensitivity to Alaska's unique reliance on air transportation. Their recognition of rural Alaska's dependency on a comprehensive air transportation network for carriage of medical supplies and basic foodstuffs is greatly appreciated by this Senator and by all Alaskans.

This legislation includes a couple of provisions relating to mail carriage in Alaska and a provision that continues the present large aircraft essential air service to Cordova, Yakutat, Petersburg, Gustavus, and Wrangell. Mail carriage and passenger service in Alaska are extremely interrelated—mail revenues which comprise from 25 to 60 percent of a bush carrier's total revenues, directly enhance the level of passenger service to bush communities. Preservation of the present mail transportation system and stability of mail rates are essential if the integrity of Alaska's air transportation network is to be maintained. I am happy to note that we have done that in this legislation. Also, the conferees on this bill agreed to continue, for air service to the five southeastern Alaska communities I just mentioned, the aircraft size standard of the CAB's 1980 essential air service order for Alaska. This will insure that these communities continue to receive the large aircraft service that allows the necessary flexibility to handle their passenger and cargo requirements. In addition, this level of service allows southeastern residents same day access to the rest of Alaska and to Seattle, WA.

Again, I thank my colleagues for their fine work on this legislation and for their concern for the importance of air transportation to Alaskans. Thank you.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 5297, the Civil Aeronautics Board sunset bill, although I do so with considerable misgivings. The conference report, as presented to the Senate, contains a provision of the House-passed bill which sets a bad precedent in antitrust law, is likely to have anticonsumer consequences, received no serious consideration in the House of Representatives, and was not agreed to by the Senate. The provision amends the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 by sending the CAB's antitrust immunity authority to the Department of Transportation, rather than the Department of Justice as provided for in the 1978 act.

There are two basic problems with placing this authority in the Department of Transportation. First, I believe that the authority for granting antitrust immunities, essentially the authority to waive provisions of laws previously enacted by Congress, should only reside in independent agencies such as the CAB or, alternatively, in the Department of Justice. It is critical that questions of this type be handled in an apolitical atmosphere, or at least, as much an apolitical atmosphere as is possible in this city. This is the first time in my memory that antitrust authority is being established both outside the confines of an independent agency and without a strong, statutorily established policy voice for the Department of Justice.

The second concern is equally serious. The Department of Transportation is a highly political agency and is involved in the day-to-day regulation of the airline industry. A web of interrelationships has built up between the Department and the industry, one which will grow as the Department assumes the CAB's consumer protection functions. Under those circumstances, I find it difficult to believe that the Department, over the long run, will be able to fairly evaluate airline requests for immunity from the antitrust laws, taking into full account the public's interest, including the public's interest in effective antitrust enforcement. These remarks are not in any way intended to be critical of either the airlines, who themselves are not united on the question of where the immunity authority should reside, or the Department. Yet, by this action, I have the uneasy feeling that Congress is, in reality, putting the proverbial foxes in charge of the chicken coop. Worse yet, Congress may be establishing a precedent it will regret when dealing with some other industry in a different context down the road.

Mr. President, since the conferees decided with virtually no discussion last week to accept the "House" position on this matter—I place House in quotes since this issue was never voted on or even the subject of serious discussion during the entire time the bill was being considered by the House of Representatives and its Transportation Committee—I have been wrestling with the best way to deal with the problem. It is worth noting, at this point, that the question has never been considered by other committees with jurisdictional claims, specifically the Judiciary and Governmental Affairs Committees of both bodies. I have decided to not challenge the conference report at this time to avoid any risk of losing the valuable consumer protection provisions of this bill. However, I can assure my colleagues this issue will be revisited at the earliest opportunity in the next Congress and it will be thoroughly debated and considered in the proper forums.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Are there any amendments in disagreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are none.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have cleared these matters with the distinguished Democratic leader. I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the Senate, Senate Resolution 405.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A Senate resolution (S. Res. 405) to refer the bill (S. 2761) entitled "A bill for the relief of the White Sands ranchers of New Mexico" to the Chief Commissioner of the United States Court of Claims for a report thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LONG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Resolved, That the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1097) entitled "An Act to consolidate and authorize certain atmospheric and satellite programs and functions of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under the Department of Commerce", and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. Fuqua, Mr. Scheuer, Mr. Valentine, Mr. Harkin, Mr. Andrews of Texas, Mr. Jones of North Carolina, Mr. D'Amours, Mr. Winn, Mr. McGrath, Mrs. Schneider, and Mr. Carney be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the House amendments and agree to the conference requested by the House; and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. GORTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. LAUTENBERG conferees on the part of the Senate.

RELIEF OF VLADIMIR VICTOROVICH YAKIMETZ

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives;

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 1989) entitled "An Act for the relief of Vladimir Victorovich Yakimetz", do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That in the naturalization of Vladimir Victorovich Yakimetz under chapter 2 of title III of the Immigration and Nationality Act, notwithstanding sections 310(d) of that Act, section 313 of that Act shall not apply and for purposes of section 316 of that Act periods of residence in the United States before the date of the enactment of this Act shall be considered periods of residence after being lawfully admitted for permanent residence.".

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, by concurring in the technical amendment added in the House to S. 1989, the Senate will clear for the President's signature a bill to confer U.S. citizenship on Mr. Valdimir V. Yakimetz.

Mr. Yakimetz, recently a citizen of the Soviet Union, worked until December 1983 as an international civil servant in the U.N. Secretariat in New York City. With U.S. citizenship, he may soon be reappointed to his post as budget officer in the office of program planning and coordination. And it will be clear to the world that a U.N. employee is able to abide by the charter and continue to work at the U.N.

S. 1989 is a private bill with a public purpose. The purpose is to encourage employees of the United Nations to believe in—and to uphold—the Charter of the United Nations.

Passage of S. 1989 will not make the U.N. perfect. But it would be a tangible demonstration of congressional support for the noble principles enshrined in the charter. It would represent a small step toward enabling the U.N. to live up to those principles.

The case for the bill before us may be put simply: Mr. Yakimetz is a man who has lived up to the charter, and—due to the intervention of the Soviet Government—has lost his job at the U.N. in consequence. With American citizenship, he will be able to return to his post as a U.N. employee, beholden to no interest other than the U.N.

I reveal no closely held secret of the intelligence community when I state that it standard practice for Soviet bloc employees at the U.N. to accept instruction from their governments and to use their privileged diplomatic positions in New York to engage in espionage against the United States and other nations. This is in unambiguous violation of Article 100 of the U.N. Charter which states that:

(i)n the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization.

It may fairly be said that this provision lies at the very heart of what it is required of an international organization if it is to function as intended. If the organization is ever to enjoy the confidence of member states, the Secretariat must be truly international in character.

Valdimir Yakimetz merits our attention precisely because he has sought to live up to the principle expressed in article 100.

In 1982, while serving, as he had for several years, as a program officer responsible for budget planning in the department of international economic and social affairs, Mr. Yakimetz was instructed by officials of the Soviet mission at the U.N. to engage in activities he knew to be inconsistent with his oath as an international civil servant. He refused, and was consequently ordered back to Moscow.

Mr. Yakimetz thereupon requested, and received, on February 9, 1983, political asylum in the United States. The Soviets, not surprisingly, sought to have him dismissed from the U.N.

To his great credit, Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar decided to permit Mr. Yakimetz to remain at the U.N. through the conclusion of his employment contract, despite the fact that the country which had seconded him to the U.N.—the U.S.S.R.—no longer wanted him to remain there.

While this represented a certain measure of victory for the principle of independence in the international civil service, it was only an interim solution. When Mr. Yakimetz' contract expired on December 26, 1983, the Secretary-General was bound by the precedents of the U.N. not to employ him unless he were to be seconded by a member country of the U.N.

In order to be seconded, Mr. Yakimetz must be a citizen of said member country. For a number of reasons, the logical choice is the United States—not least because it would be in the American national interest to see that the often-abused principle of an independent U.N. civil service is strengthened in practice, as it would be by retention of Mr. Yakimetz in the U.N. Secretariat.

Thus, S. 1989 and the proposal to expedite the citizenship process for Vladimir Yakimetz. With American citizenship, he will promptly be seconded and rehired. And the employees of the U.N. will see that it is possible to abide by the Charter.

It is important to note that Vladimir Yakimetz does not seek early citizenship for personal gain or convenience. Having been granted political asylum, he could look forward to becoming an American citizen in the course of time through the normal procedures. With his background as a physicist, linguist, and administrator, he could also expect to fare well in the American job market.

Yet Mr. Yakimetz believes in abiding by the U.N. Charter, and would like to continue to do so as an employee of the Secretariat. If he did not, he could easily have cooperated with the Soviet mission at the U.N. in violating that Charter.

The Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations, Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, has written me in support of this effort, noting in her letter that "the immediate bestowal of U.S. citizenship on this worthy individual who has chosen freedom seems to me not only warranted but essential."

The principles of the U.N. Charter, the noble goal of an international civil service and the personal courage of Vladimir Yakimetz deserve the recognition this bill accords.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of S. 1989, as passed, and the text of a recent article from the New York Times about Vladimir Yakimetz be printed in the RECORD.

S. 1989

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the naturalization of Vladimir Victorovich Yakimetz under chapter 2 of title III of the Immigration and Nationality Act, notwithstanding sections 310(d) of that Act, section 313 of that Act shall not apply and for purposes of section 316 of that Act periods of residence in the United States before the date of the enactment of this Act shall be considered periods of residence after being lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUSSIAN EX-U.N. EMPLOYEE SAYS SOVIET VIOLATES CHARTER

(By Richard Bernstein)

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., July 16.—A former Soviet employee here who defected rather than return to Moscow says the Soviet Mission is violating the United Nations Charter by requiring Soviet citizens who work for the Secretariat to follow the mission's orders.

They also must provide a host of services for the Soviet Government, according to the former Secretariat employee, Vladimir V. Yakimetz.

Mr. Yakimetz, 47 years old, held a middle-level position in the Office of Program Planning under Coordination, which makes long-range plans for the administration of the United Nations.

According to United Nations rules, the Soviet Government should have had no control over Mr. Yakimetz. According to Article 100 of the Charter, a Secretariat employee is forbidden to "seek or receive instruction from any government."

Yet, in interviews here recently, Mr. Yakimetz detailed what is privately conceded by diplomats and officials: that Soviet citizens working in the Secretariat are expected to provide services to their Government.

UNDER MISSION'S ORDERS

"I functioned directly under the mission's orders," he said. "I did not lift a finger without the Soviet Mission knowing about it. We might be asked to analyze a certain report or to prepare materials for a particular agenda item at the General Assembly. You can be asked to spy on your division at the U.N. Certainly, you are asked to report on transfers and promotions, to find out where there might be chances to get in more Soviet employees."

For two years, Mr. Yakimetz was on a six-member committee that advised the appointments and promotions board of the Secretariat. In that post, he said, he operated directly under instructions from the Soviet Mission.

"It was my direct responsibility to see that every Russian proposed by the Government was admitted," he said. Another obligation was to block action on people the mission deemed undesirable.

Mr. Yakimetz, a former physics instructor at the Moscow Physical-Technical Institute in a northern Moscow suburb, said Soviet employees were asked to collect scientific and technical data, and for that purpose he became a member of the American Physical Society.

"I sent a lot of stuff to Moscow," he said. "They were pretty interested in it. As a member of the American Physical Society, I received newsletters and magazines."

PRODUCTS ON STRATEGIC LIST

He added that, as a member of the Secretariat, he found himself in communication with American companies involved in high technology.

Not one of the papers that Mr. Yakimetz saw was secret. But, he said, "some of the products, I presume, are on the strategic list, because some of the manufacturers I corresponded with were among the companies that were selling strategic equipment to Moscow through third countries."

A spokesman for the Soviet Mission, Anatoly N. Khudyakov, said he had no comment on Mr. Yakimetz's remarks.

Mr Yakimetz said he defected because he feared that the Soviet Government was trying to cut short his career at the United Nations. He said that, in late 1982 and early 1983, the personnel director of the Soviet Mission pressed him to seek a leave of absence to return to Moscow and train a replacement. He was granted political asylum in February 1983.

CONTRACT EXTENSION DENIED

Last December, under pressure from the Soviet Mission, the office of Secretary General Javier Pérez de Cuéllar refused to extend Mr. Yakimetz's contract. A spokesman for Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar said that Mr. Yakimetz, having been temporarily assigned to the United Nations by his Government, could not stay against its will.

Most Western employees of the Secretariat are private citizens, although many have earlier served in their governments. But citizens of most Communist countries are employed by their government and are detached to work for the Secretariat.

Some major Secretariat officals concede that the Russians do not technically adhere to the rules on the independence of international civil servants, and staff members with knowledge of Soviet practices say that, in effect, even when Eastern bloc citizens serve in the Secretariat they are treated as if they are still members of their own government bureaucracies.

APPEAL IS UNSUCCESSFUL

Mr. Yakimetz appealed the decision of the Secretary General's office to a three-person administrative tribunal headed by a Hungarian. Last month, the tribunal, meeting in Geneva, denied the request.

In the interview, Mr. Yakimetz said that he had spent nearly 15 years pursuing his career. "I see my life as completely disrupted by this decision," he said. "Of course, the Soviet Government will be glad to hear that."

Mr. Yakimetz began his career at the United Nations in 1969 when he left his teaching post to become a technical translator in the Secretariat. After five years, he returned to Moscow to study at the Academy of Foreign Trade. He returned to New York in 1977, again as a United Nations translator. Three years ago he was transferred to the Office of Planning and Coordination.

Mr. Yakimetz left his job when his contract expired in December, its renewal having been rejected by Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar. Since then, he said, his only income has come from occasional translation jobs. Mr. Yakimetz said he and his wife, Alla, a dentist who worked in the Soviet Mission before his defection, have been denied contact with their daughter and their parents in Moscow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Senate will convene tomorrow at 10:30 a.m.

After the time for the two leaders under the standing order, there will be two special orders, following which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 11:30 a.m.

Following that, at 11:30 a.m., the quorum call will begin, as required by rule XXII, on Senate Resolution 66. The vote will occur upon the establishment of a quorum, pursuant to the rule.

Does my good friend, the Senator from West Virginia, have any matter he wishes to pursue?

Mr. BYRD. I thank my good friend, the assistant majority leader. I have nothing to add or to suggest.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is possible that we would like to proceed to Labor-HHS or one of the appropriation bills that has been held up.

We do anticipate the probability of rollcall votes tomorrow, and there certainly will be one, as the distinguished Democratic leader has pointed out. So Senators should be on notice that the Senate will be conducting business tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 20, 1984

The House met at 10 a.m.

Rev. Dr. Ronald Christian, the American Lutheran Church, Minneapolis, MN, offered the following prayer:

O God:
Father of everything that has life;
Giver of all that is good;
Ruler of every nation;
Judge over our actions; and
Merciful to all.
Hear us as we pray.
For we speak this day:
As children, asking for that which is needful;
As beggars, desiring that which is good;
As parents, recognizing Your might and power;
As defendants, accused of misdeeds and inaction; and
As sinners, recognizing our errors.
Help us, O God:
Not so much to pray for ourselves as to pray for our neighbors;
Not so much to desire to be served as to be of service;
Not so much to make demands for me as to defer to someone else;
So that, in all our deliberations and decisions:
Your name may be honored;
Your rule observed; and
Your people remembered.
Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

COURT'S DECISION SHOULD LOWER COAL TRANSPORTATION RATES

(Mr. BOUCHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. court of appeals has sent a strong message to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The court unanimously held that the ICC erred when it permitted railroads to charge as much as they desire for the transportation of coal bound for foreign markets; 95 percent of American coal-exporting mines are served by only one rail line. There is clearly an absence of effective competition. Past ICC practices have served to make American coal less competitive in the world market, with disastrous consequences for the coal economy of my district in southwest Virginia and indeed for the entire Appalachian region.

When Congress adopted the Staggers Rail Act in 1980, there was a clear intent to protect coal operators who have no alternatives to a single rail line for the transportation of their product. In that event, Congress clearly intended that the ICC review rates to ensure that they are equitable. In permitting railroads to charge whatever they desire for the transportation of coal bound for foreign markets and in permitting increases of up to 15 percent annually for the transportation of coal to domestic users, the ICC has totally ignored its responsibility.

The court was clearly correct in holding that the Staggers Act requires the ICC to set rates where a single railroad monopolizes the market. The ICC is presently deciding to what extent rates for coal bound for domestic markets should be regulated. It is apparent that these rates are also within the reach of the court's decision and that Congress fully intends that the ICC should review the fairness with which they are set as well.

I sincerely hope that the court's decision will persuade the ICC that equitable coal transportation rates serve the long-term interests of both the coal and the rail industries.

DECISIVE ACTIONS OF THE PRESIDENT IN A CRISIS

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, after 11 months of dillydallying on the issue, Walter Mondale learned that the rescue of American students on Grenada was a good idea.

What if he had been President last October when the Marxists attempted to establish a nest on Grenada and placed the lives of American students in danger? What if he had waited 11 months to act?

We might have found ourselves in the middle of another hostage crisis or something even worse.

In this dangerous world, Americans cannot afford a President who is indecisive and takes almost 1 full year to figure out what to do in a crisis. We had enough of that when Jimmy Carter was President.

CONSTITUTION WEEK

(Mr. EDWARDS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, this is Constitution Week. We should all take a few moments to reflect on the good fortune this country had in the coming together of the brilliant men who wrote the Constitution in 1787. The fact that after nearly 200 years, our Constitution and our Nation are stronger than ever is a tribute to their vision and to the system of government they created that summer in Philadelphia.

In times of crisis and upheaval, our greatest ally has been the Constitution: The Civil War and its aftermath, the impeachment of two Presidents, the Vietnam war, and other turbulent events of the sixties and seventies. In each case, the Constitution has guided us and seen us through.

The history of this country—and of our Constitution—has been one of continued expansion of individual rights and extension of those rights to groups which had formerly been excluded from full participation in our society. Starting with the Bill of Rights itself, continuing through the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, women's suffrage, and the 18-year-old vote, we have seen this to be the case. I believe this will continue to be our history in the years to come and soon we will see equal rights for women being added to the important guarantees of our Constitution.

CONGRESS' RESPONSIBILITY WITH THE PURSESTRINGS

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Like the proverbial bad penny, more disclosures and horror stories from the Pentagon on wasting taxpayers' money keep turning up. Now we find out about a $7,822 coffeemaker. Add to this the $435 light bulb that you can buy at the local store for 79 cents, plus many, many more outrageous examples.

All this adds up to a national disgrace.

Three American servicemen and others had the courage to come forward and to put their careers in jeopardy so that the American people get the "real story." With even more disclosures of cost overruns, can we, in □ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

Congress, ignore the utter disregard for the taxpayer? I would hope not.

We, in this House, who control the pursestrings, owe a responsibility to those who place their trust and confidence in us, the American taxpayer. Let us show the American people that their trust and confidence in this House is not misplaced.

BANK REGULATION

(Mr. ROEMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, 1 week ago, I made the following statement on the House floor:

The bailout of Continental Illinois proves what the big banks know and don't want you to know: They are too big to fail. We won't let them.

Comptroller of the Currency Todd Conover told Congress that the Federal Government won't currently allow any of the Nation's 11 largest banks to fail.

Mr. Conover made the statement reluctantly during hearings before the House Banking Committee.

Now we know. My, my. This is the same Mr. Conover, a Reagan appointee, who is pushing for the complete deregulation of banks.

You cannot have it both ways, Mr. Conover. Deregulation and guaranteed protection from failure do not mix. If some banks are protected, and some must be, then all banks must be regulated, or else only the Government-chosen few will survive.

Listen to me closely: If you are a small business man or woman or farmer, or a homebuilder, or a buyer in real estate, securities, or the insurance business, this administration is shockingly wrong on bank deregulation. And comparing the statements versus the actions of Mr. Conover, they are hypocrites as well.

DEMOCRACY IN CENTRAL AMERICA

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, to suggest that democracy is not advancing in Central America as the gentleman from Connecticut did yesterday, is to look at the region with a blind eye.

Joining the established democratic Governments of Costa Rica, Honduras, and Belize, the inauguration of the government of Jose Napoleon Duarte in El Salvador on June 1 represented a dramatic and historic achievement in that war torn nation. More than 80 percent of the eligible voters, on three different occasions since 1982, have expressed their belief that a freely elected government offers the best hope for a solution to their long-running political and social crisis.

Add to those nations Panama and Guatemala. Panama will inaugurate its newly elected President next month after its first direct Presidential election in 16 years. Guatemala is following the example of El Salvador with the popular election of a Constituent Assembly July 1, with 73 percent of those eligible voting. The Constituent Assembly will write a new constitution and electoral law in preparation for direct Presidential elections next year. That's six out of seven countries in the region either with democratic governments or making serious progress toward democratic government.

Those who complain that democracy is not advancing in Central America would do well to direct their attention toward Nicaragua in an effort to get that single exception in the region also on the path toward truly free and fair elections.

FOR GOSH SAKES, MR. PRESIDENT, LET'S HELP THE FAMILY FARMER

(Mr. DORGAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Speaker, this week the President announced he was going to do something about farm credit. Well, it is a move in the right direction, but it comes too late and it is not enough. A year ago we passed on the floor of this House the farm credit bill. For a year it has been stalled in the Senate because the President said, "I don't want it and I will veto it if I get it."

Now this Government lends money to foreign governments at about a 3½-percent interest rate. The average lending from the Farmers Home Administration for the American farmer is at about a 11½-percent interest rate. And our family farmers, the most fragile, the younger ones, are going broke. It seems to me that what we do for foreign governments we ought to consider doing for some family farmers.

I would like to read you a short note from a fellow that is going broke, he is having his farm auctioned today. It is a long letter but I will just read a couple of sentences:

On the 20th of September, my wife Joanne and I are having a farm auction on all of our cattle and farm machinery. I am 32 years old, have a wife and five children. We have cried a thousand tears over losing our farm. We have built what we have with the strength of our backs, our sweat and love.

We had a dream for a future that is now lost.

Please work hard to keep that dream alive for others.

Mr. President, what we do for foreign governments, for gosh sakes, we can do for some of these family farmers. Let us stop threats of veto of good legislation, let us stop political posturing, let us do something real in the right way, to help the family farmers, for a change.

MR. PRESIDENT, LET US HELP OUT THE HARD-PRESSED MILL OPERATORS OF THE NORTHWEST

(Mr. AuCOIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, 48 hours ago in a policy switch, the President announced a new aid program for farmers in serious financial trouble. I rise today on behalf of the hard-pressed lumber and plywood mill operators who I work for in Oregon. I appeal to the President to help them just as he says he is going to help the farmers in the Midwest and for the same reason.

To use the President's words: because they need his help and they need it desperately.

Mr. Speaker, many of these timber operators and their workers believe in Ronald Reagan. Now they want him to believe in them and let them survive.

So far, however, all the administration has done on this problem is to give these mills a little extra time to make good on high-cost timber contracts signed in the late 1970's before the market collapsed for housing and for finished lumber products.

Time is nice. But time is running out for these operators.

Up to 75 percent of the mills in my region face bankruptcy unless they get relief from unworkable contracts, from the legislation that is being proposed by the Northwest delegation.

Unlike the farmers in the Midwest, Northwest timber operators have agreed to pay millions of dollars of penalties for turning back these contracts. So this is no bailout, Mr. Speaker. It is simply a way to let our troubled mills buy their way out of a hole and continue to provide jobs and payrolls for the people of my region.

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE FOR TOP QUALITY TEACHERS

(Mr. REID asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, whenever such an important subject as educational reform comes before a legislative body, it is important to remember that there are innumerable issues that need consideration. After all, at stake is the knowledge of a nation.

Efforts to implement these important reforms in our public schools would be futile, however, without top quality teachers. That's why I cosponsored H.R. 1310, the National Mathematics and Science Education Act, to provide for teacher training and other programs to upgrade instruction in math, science, and foreign languages.

Another bill, H.R. 4477, which passed the House in August, would establish the Carl D. Perkins Scholarship Program to provide annual college scholarships to students who graduate in the top 10 percent of their high school class and agree to go into teaching after college. For each year of financial assistance a student would pledge to teach for 2 years.

I am pleased that the House has passed these two bills because it is through legislation like this that we show our commitment to give our children the best possible educational foundation upon which to build their lives.

UNIFORMED SERVICES FORMER SPOUSES' PROTECTION ACT OF 1982 AMENDMENTS

(Mr. HANCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HANCE. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6246, which I have coauthored with my colleagues, Mrs. SCHROEDER from Colorado and Mrs. BOXER from California, is an amendment to the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act of 1982. H.R. 6246 would allow many former military spouses to receive the full portion of the former member's pension that is entitled to them under the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act.

Prior to 1982, when the act was signed into law, if a retired military member divorced his wife, the wife lost all her claims to a portion of his retirement pay and/or survivor's benefits. This occurred despite the fact that, for many of these women, their husband's career had been their career. It was, in fact, their life. Since the bill was enacted, a significant number of these women now fall under the protection of the act and are entitled to a pro rata share of the former member's pension. There are many of these women, however, who have yet to receive their share of that pension.

Because of a technical flaw in the Former Spouses' Protection Act, some retirees, who now earn salaries in the private sector and receive military pensions, can legally allow their total withholding for income tax to be deducted from their pension. This hurts the former spouse by significantly decreasing the amount that she is rightfully entitled to receive or it cuts her amount out entirely. In effect, by taking his income tax owed out of his pension, the retiree can eliminate what for many women is the largest portion of her total income. While this is done within the limits of the original law, it is far from the intent of the original law.

H.R. 6246 will close this technical loophole in the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act and allow many deserving women, presently receiving little or nothing of the pension that they are entitled to receive, to get their full amount of the pension. I urge you to vote for its passage.

THE DEFICITS ARE PILED UP IN THIS HOUSE

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, well now, we hear a little more criticism today about supply-side economics and the so-called Reagan deficits. Well, isn't that interesting? Supply-side economics is criticized and we therefore have to assume that the proponents of that point of view liked Carter-Mondale economics. They liked 21½-percent interest, they liked 12-percent inflation, they liked all the things that Carter and Mondale gave us before supply-side economics brought about a little correction. And now they moan and groan about the Ronald Reagan deficits. Where are the Reagan deficits being piled up? Right in this body. We are the ones who spend the money, right here. What does Ronald Reagan say? Well, let us effect a little discipline up there on Capitol Hill with a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

And what have we heard from the Democrats? Well, on more than 50 consecutive days Republicans came to the floor asking that that measure be brought out here and considered and on 50-consecutive days the Democrats refused to allow it to happen.

Now, it seems to me that that makes it rather clear who does not want the kind of discipline necessary to get those deficits under order. The Democrats are refusing to do anything to discipline themselves with regard to spending.

Those deficits are a House problem. The Constitution says very clearly that Congress is the one that raises the money and spends the money. If Congress wants to do something to discipline itself, let us pass the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

THIS ADMINISTRATION HAS NOT USED ITS CONSTITUTIONAL POWERS EFFECTIVELY

(Mr. COELHO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I find the comments of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] rather interesting, particularly from the point of view of talking about deficits. I am well aware and I think he and the American public are also, that this administration keeps talking about balanced budgets but doesn't have the will to use its veto power. That does not mean that the Republicans have refused to use it in the past. Jerry Ford, who I do not hear mentioned much in this Chamber by the Republicans, used it very successfully many times.

As a matter of fact the Republican Governor of California has used his veto power much more often than the President of the United States.

If the Republican Party is so interested in balanced budgets and deficits, then why do they not use the constitutional powers that have been given to them now. They have not.

I find it also interesting that the previous gentleman in the well talks about Carter-Mondale. Maybe what we should do is talk about Nixon-Agnew. Let us talk about the morality of past governments and let us talk about why Mr. Nixon was not at the Republican Convention. Let us start talking about past Presidents if we want to and I will be glad to join the gentleman in that discussion.

MONDALE'S CALCULATING CAMOUFLAGE

(Mr. LIVINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, many people seem surprised today by Walter Mondale's assertions that he would use American military force to quarantine Nicaragua. But if they would look at the September 12 issue of the New York Times, they would know the real story.

Reporter Leslie Gelb has done a masterful job of informing the American people of the true nature of the Mondale "shift to the right." Mondale knows his wimpy liberalism on foreign policy won't wash with the American voters, so he's made an about-face, and about time, so he thinks.

Mondale is just another desperate politican who will do anything for votes. Gelb was told that Mondale "is against unilateral concessions to the Soviet Union," and yet his party's platform and such Mondale proposals as a unilateral freeze and halting of the B-1 and Trident programs tell just the opposite story.

And now Mondale even supports our rescue mission in Grenada, but 11 months after he compared it to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Mondale's move is just more dishonest wimpy politics—and we don't need another wimp in the White House—we need a leader like Ronald Reagan.

PRESIDENT NEEDS THE LINE-ITEM VETO

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the gentleman from California [Mr. COELHO], the head of the Democratic Campaign Committee, attacks President Reagan for the deficits and asks why he does not do something by vetoing some of the legislative proposals that come out of this Chamber.

The fact of the matter is that garbage is added to very important pieces of legislation and the President has to either take it or leave it. If we gave him the line-item veto that he has asked for so many times, we could cut that deficit, and the President could get these things changed without vetoing the whole bill.

The line-item veto is what he needs, Mr. COELHO. We also need a constitutional amendment to balance the budget, but you will not support that either.

But what has Walter Mondale advocated over the last few months? He has advocated $400 billion in additional spending, over the next 4 years. He has promised a tax increase for everybody in this country ranging from $1,890 to $3,500 per family per year.

I sense in the Democratic majority of this House a real concern because many of you realize that if you tie yourselves to Walter Mondale's coattails you are not going to have a job next January.

THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

(Mr. JACOBS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the record about something. Any casual reading of the Constitution will tell you that the Congress does not spend the money. The administration spends the money.

If you want a grant from the U.S. Government, you do not write to the Congress, you write to HEW or you write for a contract over to the Pentagon.

It is not the Congress. Find me one statute that says the American people should be forced to pay $2,000 for a military screw.

Let me just add one other thing. The Congress spends one-half of 1 percent of the Federal budget, about $1½ billion, and that is too much, on the Congress itself. All the rest of the Federal spending is asked for by the President and is done by the President. He and his factotums sign the contract.

As far as a balanced budget is concerned, I am the one who began the movement in the House in 1976 for a balanced budget amendment. I wrote to President Reagan for support of it in 1980, right after he was elected. I got two letters back from his aides saying that I would hear from him later as to whether he would support a real balanced budget amendment. And I am still waiting for that letter.

The balanced budget amendment before this House is a phony. It is pale imitation of mine. It takes a three-fifths majority, no more than is required to end a filibuster in the Senate, to abrogate the balanced budget amendment and go into debt. Mine requires a three-fourths majority. It does not require the national debt to be paid off. Mine does. It does not require what is borrowed, when the three-fifths majority votes, to be paid back. Mine does within 36 months. It is a phony.

Why do you suppose the President asked the Michigan Legislature not to pass a balanced budget amendment a few days ago? He knows the State legislative route is the only one which will get a real amendment. The difference between my stand and the President's stand on the balanced budget amendment is that I'm not kidding. A balanced budget would mean the President could not be able to spend more than he is willing to tax, or tax less than he wants to spend. Of course no amendment would go into effect during the next 4 years, regardless of who is President, anyway. Somehow I am reminded of the church board which adopted a resolution to prevent other people from drinking.

Mr. Speaker, I did not raise my balanced budget amendment to serve as a figleaf for this administration which has turned out to be the great granddaddy of all deficits.

FREE WORLD SHOULD NEVER BOW TO TERRORIST TYRANNY

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, once again our Nation arises to the grim reality of terrorism. At 5:30 this morning a driver using forged diplomatic license plates approached the Embassy of the freest nation on Earth, the United States, slammed into the compound wall detonating an unknown amount of high explosives.

When the smoke had cleared, two Americans were dead, numerous others were injured and the American Ambassador lay under a pile of rubble.

Once again, there is no timidity on the part of the fanatical terrorist groups ready to claim responsibility for the killing. Already Islamic Jidah, a radical, fundamental alliance with strong Iranian ties, has proudly assumed responsibility. They promised just such action unless America abandoned its support in the United Nations for a free Israel.

The price of freedom is constant. The responsibility of the leadership of the free world is to never bow to terrorist tyranny.

THE BASIS OF OUR CONSTITUTION

(Mr. DARDEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, 197 years ago this week our Nation's Founding Fathers met in Philadelphia and signed what was to become the supreme law of the land—the U.S. Constitution. The document they signed is the very framework of our Government today. More importantly, though, we would not be guaranteed the freedoms we enjoy on a daily basis were it not for the Constitution.

On September 17, 1787, one by one, beginning with the northernmost State of Rhode Island and ending with the southernmost State of Georgia, the 39 signers placed their mark on history. But they did not stop there. For example, Abraham Baldwin and William Few, the signers from Georgia, the last names to be signed, went on to serve as U.S. Senators, working within the framework of the Constitution to see that the Document they signed became a reality. That is the secret of the Constitution, the American people's dedication to the principles set forth in it.

In 1821, John Quincy Adams said, "Our Constitution professedly rests upon the good sense and attachment of the people." This basis, weak as it may appear, has not yet been found to fail. How much more truth is there to that statement in 1984, 163 years later?

THE DEFICIT

(Mr. MURTHA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the point I wanted to make amidst this discussion about the deficit and the discussion about this President is that I think it was this President who sent a budget to the House this year. This President who says he wants a balanced budget sent a budget to the House of Representatives this year that said, "I would like to spend $925 billion and I would like revenues of $745 billion."

This President who wants a balanced budget said, "I want to spend $1 and I only want to take in 78 cents for every dollar I spend."

Question: Is this the same President these folks are talking about who wants a balanced budget?

□ 1030

Is that a balanced budget, $925 billion in spending and $745 billion in revenue? You do not have to change the Constitution to change the deficit. All the President has to do is send a budget to the floor of the House that is balanced.

TIGERS: AMERICAN LEAGUE EAST CHAMPIONS

(Mr. CONYERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer my congratulations to the Detroit Tigers who Tuesday night defeated the Milwaukee Brewers and by doing so won the American League eastern division title. The teams performance this season has been nothing short of outstanding as it is the first ball club to lead a pennant race from start to finish since the New York Yankees did so in 1927.

The Tigers' success this season has done much to unite the people of the city of Detroit who have waited 12 years for a baseball championship. I regret that I could not be at Tiger Stadium that evening to join in the fans celebration. The spirit that was demonstrated there in response to this achievement signaled to all of America that Detroit is truly a very special place; it is a proud city that is standing squarely behind its first place team. With that strong support, I have no doubt that our Tigers will bring home a 1984 World Series victory.

Under the rule, further proceedings under the call are dispensed with.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY TO SIT TODAY DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Science and Technology be permitted to sit this afternoon while the House is sitting under the 5-minute rule to consider two bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Florida has discussed this with me and as I understand it, the two bills we are talking about are the two bills where there is no controversy with the minority, and that the permission to sit is being gotten with regard to those two bills only.

Mr. FUQUA. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and that was the agreement.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY WETLANDS RESOURCES ACT OF 1983

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 579 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3082.

□ 1055

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3082) to promote the conservation of migratory waterfowl and to offset or prevent the serious loss of wetlands by the acquisition of wetlands and other essential habitat, and for other purposes, with Mr. MCCURDY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole House rose on Wednesday, September 19, 1984, the following Members had general debate remaining. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] had 15 minutes; the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] had 16 minutes; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] had 1 minute; the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] had 15 minutes; the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] had 15 minutes; and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STANGELAND] had 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MARLENEE].

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in favor of H.R. 3082, the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act.

H.R. 3082 will authorize a $75 million increase in the wetlands conservation fund for the next 10 years; it also increases funds to the migratory bird conservation fund by allowing new admission fees to certain wildlife refuges and by gradually raising the price of the duck stamp from $7.50 to $15 over a 5-year period.

Mr. Chairman, the funds generated by this legislation will be used to purchase on a willing seller/willing buyer basis productive waterfowl habitat. I am particularly excited about this proposal because my district contains some of the best migratory bird habitat in the world. Last year the Prairie Potholes, which cover 15,000 square miles in eastern Montana, produced 4,300 ducks and 2,100 geese just on Bureau of Land Management land. And 1983 was a bad year for waterfowl production because of the severe drought that has plagued my district.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3082 is a timely bill. The Department of Interior and Ducks Unlimited recently signed a memorandum of understanding which help to protect and restore waterfowl nesting areas. Under the agreement, Ducks Unlimited will fund projects like water control structures and nesting islands to improve wetlands that the Department of Interior acquires. In fact, one of the first of such projects will occur in my district at the Big Lake complex just north of Billings, MT.

Mr. Chairman, we must applaud not only this new effort by Ducks Unlimited to improve wildlife habitat, but also its previous contributions to conservation. Since 1937, Ducks Unlimited has raised $237 million to protect and enhance 3.2 million acres in Canada and 50,000 acres in Mexico. And, Ducks Unlimited did it using no lawsuits and no political pressure.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I thank my good friend from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] for yielding me 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3082, the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act, is intended to promote the conservation of migratory waterfowl through the acquisition of wetlands and other essential habitat. I strongly support this objective, and for that reason regret that I cannot support this measure unless title IV, the Oregon Inlet provision, is stricken.

As the title of this act suggests, an "emergency" in wetlands conservation does indeed exist. Almost half of the 215 million acres of wetlands estimated to have existed before the discovery of this continent have disappeared. The continued need for agricultural land and increased urban expansion have contributed heavily to this loss of wetlands. Between the 1950's and 1970's, the net average loss of wetlands was 458,000 acres. An estimated 450,000 acres of wetland habitat continue to disappear each year under the pressure of residential and economic development.

To address this problem, the Federal Government has taken an active and direct role in the preservation and conservation of our Nation's wetlands. I strongly believe that this Federal commitment should continue.

As a member of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, I have personally participated in the acquisition and preservation of thousands and thousands of acres of wetlands. Through duck stamp revenues—now estimated at $14.5 million annually—more than $270 million has been raised for wetlands conservation over the past 50 years, and some 3.5 million acres of waterfowl habitat have been purchased.

Even though these accomplishments are significant, much remains to be done. The current goal of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is to preserve another 1.6 million acres of key wetland habitat by 1986. To meet this challenge, there must be a significant and continuing Federal commitment. The legislation under consideration today—at least the first three titles—represents a step in the right direction.

It is both unfortunate and ironic that title IV, which would permit construction to go forward on an environmentally destructive Corps of Engineers project at Oregon Inlet, NC, should be attached to a measure intended to preserve our natural resources. An amendment to strike title IV will be offered by Mr. SEIBERLING, the chairman of the Interior Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks, and I urge my colleagues to support that amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the project proposed by the Corps of Engineers would involve the construction of two rock jetties, 18 feet wide and 1 mile long, on either side of Oregon Inlet. One jetty would be anchored on the Cape Hatteras National Seashore, and one on the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge.

In 1983, Interior Secretary James Watt stated that he could not permit—I imagine Jim Watt said this. Listen to this: Jim Watt said that he could not permit these public lands to be used for the jetty project because such use would be incompatible with public lands policy. This decision has been adopted by Secretary Clark as well.

Frankly, I find it curious that this House would even consider overturning one of the Reagan administration's most outstanding proenvironmental actions.

The Interior Department's determination that the proposed jetties would be detrimental to the adjacent national seashore and wildlife refuge was soundly based upon substantive law. None of the supporters of the project has challenged the legal validity of the decision, or provided any substantive justification for legislating a special exception to the Department's permit process for the benefit of this particular project.

Substantively, the Oregon Inlet project would be an environmental and economic disaster. The Outer Banks of North Carolina are part of America's fragile and dynamic barrier island chain. In fact, it was the untamed grandeur of the Outer Banks that led to the establishment of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore.

Scientific evidence is overwhelming that the proposed jetties would cause havoc by inducing serious to drastic erosion of the sandy beaches extending for miles beyond the project site. Recreational use of Oregon Inlet would be degraded not only for summer beachcombers, but also for fishermen who know this to be one of the most important surf fishing areas in the Nation—particularly in the spring and fall. In addition, construction and maintenance of the jetty extending from the Pea Island Wildlife Refuge would have a detrimental effect on wildlife management efforts at that facility.

Mr. Chairman, there are also serious economic problems with this project. In 1982, the Corps of Engineers was forced to admit that a "fundamental error" had been made in the economic analysis of this project, resulting in an overstatement of the project benefits by some 70 percent. After correcting that error, the project had a benefit/cost ratio of only 0.34 to 1.0.

□ 1100

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I also yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentlemen for yielding me this additional time.

Mr. Chairman, for 16 months, the Corps of Engineers labored to recook the books in an effort to justify the nearly $100 million cost of this project. Last month the new study was released, and it looks like it will turn out to be as fundamentally flawed as the original study.

First of all, the study double counts by crediting to the jetties both a cost saving from reduced dredging and benefit gains from increased fish catches that are supposed to result from an improved channel. Intensive dredging or dual jetties would each alone provide an adequate channel for increased fish catches; counting both provides an understatement of project costs of over $2.5 million per year.

In addition, the study vastly overestimates the likely increase in fish catches. I was particularly disturbed by the claim that an increase of 130,000 pounds of striped bass would be brought in annually after the completion of this project.

There is a bill coming out here to stop the catching of striped bass because it is becoming an endangered species. So how in the world are 130,000 pounds of a fish that is going to be illegal to catch be caught? Ridiculous.

Striped bass—once a prime game fish up and down tne east coast—is a very distressed species today. In fact, striped bass population have declined 90 percent in the last 10 years. Many observers are arguing that it is foolhardy to allow any further commercial exploitation of the striped bass, and I am inclined to agree.

As I said, legislation is pending before the House that would impose Federal restrictions on catching striped bass. The State of Maryland has recently banned the taking of striped bass, and in fact North Carolina itself has proposed an offshore waters limit of 500 stripers for 1984.

Under these conditions, projecting any kind of increase in commercial catches of striped bass seem speculative, if not irrational: Once the value of the phantom striped bass, scallops, and bluefish have been reduced to a more realistic level, the benefits to be obtained from this project drop way below the costs.

At a time when we are facing $200 billion deficits, we can hardly afford to proceed with projects that cannot survive the most basic kind of economic analysis. It is especially inappropriate when a perfectly feasible alternative—intensive dredging—can maintain a perfectly adequate channel at about one-fourth the cost of this environmental outrage.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that my colleagues support the Seiberling amendment to strike title IV from the bill, so that we can proceed with the conservation of our valuable wetland resources.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest respectfully that after the muddying of those waters by that great presentation, we will be lucky if there are any striped bass left.

We have to know this bill has nothing to do with the striped bass. We have to also recognize right now the area is losing 8.8 acres a year through natural erosion. The 150 acres everybody talks about saving will be gone by nature's hand anyway.

We are talking about, very frankly and very honestly, an attempt to save the Oregon Inlet and to make it safe for human life. We hear a great deal about the cost. Right today we are spending $4 million—$4 million—a year to dredge it. If we look at the total cost over a period of time and the saving of lives, the elimination of title IV would be wrong for the Oregon Inlet, and we have to keep that provision in this bill.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New Jersey yield to me, because I think the record needs to be corrected.

Mr. ROE. Yes, of course. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] has just made the statement that this bill has nothing to do with striped bass. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the so-called cost-benefit review that the Corps of Engineers used, among other things, attempts to justify the cost of this boondoggle by saying that the harvest of striped bass will increase by 130,000 pounds because of the project; whereas, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has just pointed out, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries just completed consideration of a bill, H.R. 5492, to protect the striped bass along the whole Atlantic seaboard because of a population decline.

I just thought the record ought to be corrected.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. ROE. May I remind the gentleman that I have the time. I think that we all have our time in our respective committees and ours is limited, so I would like to yield no further at this moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] has the time.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3082, the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act of 1983.

This bill was reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on October 25, 1983. It was sequentially referred to the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs and Public Works and Transportation because of the addition of the addition of title IV which concerns a Corps of Engineers navigation project and a national seashore and wildlife refuge area.

The navigation project involved is the project for Manteo (Shallowbag) Bay, NC, authorized by the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1970. The project includes maintenance of a channel through Oregon Inlet which is used for access by commercial fishermen in the area. It also includes construction of jetties on either side of the inlet on lands of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore and Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge in order to control sedimentation which blocks the inlet.

The National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act permits this type of activity on a refuge if it is found to be compatible with the purposes for which the unit was established. In a compatibility statement regarding issuance of a Department of the Interior permit for jetty construction and dredged material placement on the refuge, the Fish and Wildlife Service concluded that the project, as currently proposed, is not compatible with the purpose for which the refuge was established. Consequently, no right-of-way permit can be issued under existing authority to the corps. In addition, under existing law, the National Park Service does not have the authority to allow jetty construction on the seashore. H.R. 3082 would authorize the Army Corps of Engineers to use this land to carry out the project at Manteo Bay.

The bill, as reported by the Committees on Public Works and Transportation and Interior and Insular Affairs, also provides that no funds may be expended to carry out the project unless a benefit-cost analysis is first prepared by the Corps of Engineers and the analysis discloses a favorable cost-benefit ratio for the project.

In order to protect the national wildlife refuge and the national seashore, the bill also requires that the Secretary of the Army, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the construction and continued operation of the Manteo Bay project, carry out the project in such manner as to: First, maintain the essential integrity of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and the Cape Hatteras National Seashore; and second, ensure that adverse impacts to the uses and purposes of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and the Cape Hatteras National Seashore are avoided, if possible, or minimized, and that, if the Secretary of the Army finds appropriate, unavoidable adverse impacts are mitigated.

Mr. Chairman, the bill being considered incorporates the amendments adopted by our committee and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, and I therefore urge its passage.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX].

Mr. BREAUX. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would only say that this is a fairly simple, basic bill that does something that I think everyone can agree with. We have a provision that has been added to the bill which I think is one that is the subject of controversy concerning the legislation.

Basically, the bill is one that we can all stand up and vote for and be very proud of what we are doing. It increases the funds that are available for the acquisition of wetlands. All of the testimony in our committee indicated that is a tremendously serious problem that all States are facing, and that is the loss of their wetlands.

My own State of Louisiana has about 25 percent of all of the wetlands in the whole United States. What is happening in Louisiana is typical of what is happening in other States, and that is that we are estimated to lose about 40 square miles per year to erosion. Can my colleagues imagine if every State, every district, was losing 40 square miles per year, it would not take too long before our States would be rapidly shrinking. I am concerned that my district, which is not on the coastline, unless something is done, I will end up representing Shreveport in the northern part of the State.

This bill is aimed at trying to rectify that. It does that by putting more money into the wetlands acquisition fund to allow for the Federal Government and the State governments to acquire these lands and to do something to protect them; not to develop them, not to continue to do things that would allow the erosion which we are trying to stop. It does it by two simple ways.

No. 1, everybody should realize that we are increasing the price of the duck stamp from $7.50 to $15. Everybody who wants to buy a duck stamp who wants to hunt, or who wants to buy it for purposes of putting money into the program, is going to have to pay more for the duck stamp. I did a poll in my congressional district and I got back an 80-percent favorable response to, "Are you willing to pay more for the duck stamp?"

We are doing it over a 5-year period. We are phasing it in. I do not think any hunter, if he knows the money is going to be used for the acquisition of land, has any problems with ultimately paying $15.

We also levy a fee for those who want to visit a refuge, because we feel that they should also, keeping in mind the user concept, be willing to pay a little bit for the right to use that refuge whether it is for bird watching or whether it is for hiking or camping, or for whatever purpose they would like to enjoy the refuge.

So we are going to create a large pot of money to be used to buy wetlands to help prevent them from being eroded and prevent their rapid loss which we are seeing at the present time.

The only controversial piece that has been attached to this legislation, I would say, is one that is controversial but has been approved by three committees in the Congress. We can never be put in the position of saying, "I can't vote for that because it is somewhat controversial." Most things we do in the Congress are somewhat controversial.

The Oregon Inlet is a controversial add-on to this bill, but I would say to the Members of the House that the three committees which have had hearings and have listened to the testimony have heard the biologists and wildlife experts and the corps testify on this project and have said that they support it. That is three committees. It was not unanimous, but three committees in the Congress have approved this Oregon Inlet project.

What is it? It basically authorizes the construction and allows for the construction of some jetties—rocks, stones, if you will—to be constructed off the coast of North Carolina to allow fishing vessels and recreational vessels to be able to come into the coastline without being sunk, without being wrecked, without sinking, as the testimony has indicated has happened.

Is that going to cause some wildlife problems? Probably so. Is it going to destroy all the wildlife and the striped bass? Of course not.

Can we do it and carefully balance the good with the bad? I think we can. Three committees in the Congress have said so.

Some argue, "Well, it is near a wildlife refuge." Of course. My congressional district, which is on the coast of Louisiana, has three wildlife refuges. They are in my congressional district. Two are Federal, and one is State. I have several jetties along the coast of Louisiana that are constructed out into the Gulf of Mexico to allow for safe shipping and safe transportation. Do they affect the refuges? Probably. Have they destroyed the refuges? Of course not. The refuges in my area are probably some of the finest of any in the country. They certainly support more of the wildlife and waterfowl than any that I think any other Member can proudly point to in any other district.

So I think what we have here is a good bill that we can all support. It has a provision which is controversial, but three committees in the Congress have looked at it carefully and those three committees have approved it. I think it can be constructed in a manner that will protect the wildlife and yet allow for human safety. We are talking about balancing human concerns with waterfowl concerns, and we cannot have everything all the way we want it. This is a balanced bill, and I think it is one that we can clearly support.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREAUX. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman makes a very compelling argument. It seems to me that this is an ongoing project and one that ought to be continued.

Inasmuch as this bill has been approved by three committees, is it not also true that at some point later it must go before the Committee on Appropriations? So it is not an automatic granting of funds: it just allows the continuation of the project. We are not committing ourselves to something new or over our heads, but basically are reiterating an earlier decision.

Mr. BREAUX. The gentleman is correct. This is not any appropriation of funds obviously.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why we would want to make this kind of a change on an ongoing program. I think the gentleman makes a very strong case, and I think his position should be supported.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STANGELAND].

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in strong support of H.R. 3082, the Emergency Wetlands Act of 1983.

We spent approximately 5 hours in the Water Resources Subcommittee of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation hearing testimony on Oregon Inlet, the controversial section of this bill. Let me say that that testimony was excellent, both by the opponents and the proponents. I do not think there were any questions left unanswered.

We are very much in support of this legislation. We are very much in support of the Oregon Inlet feature, and I think this bill deserves passage. As has been said, this bill, with the Oregon Inlet feature, has passed three different committees.

I would also like to add a comment about something that came out in debate yesterday. It was said that one of the members, Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina yesterday was erroneous in some of his statements. Let me say that in the testimony we had in those 5 hours, I question if there was anything erroneous in the comments of our colleague, Mr. MARTIN. There may have been a difference in perception between two different viewpoints of the two gentlemen discussing the Oregon Inlet. But I do not know of anyone who has worked harder or knows more about the Oregon Inlet question than the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. JIM MARTIN, unless it might be the other gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES], the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Both gentlemen are certainly concerned, aware, and knowledgeable on Oregon Inlet, and I would like to have the record show that both have been very stalwart in support of the project and have really studied the issue.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 3082, the Emergency Wetlands Act of 1983.

The bill deals primarily with wetland matters under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The version reported from that committee on September 22 of last year also contained authority relating to the Manteo Bay project of the Corps of Engineers. Therefore, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Subcommittee on Water Resources, of which I am the ranking member, obtained jurisdiction.

The project, commonly known as Oregon Inlet, was authorized in 1970. It consists of, among other things, deepening the inlet channel to 20 feet and stabilizing the inlet with two jetties and sand-bypassing facilities. The project's purpose is to protect an important inlet through the Outer Banks of North Carolina. Pumping sand around the jetties is intended to improve project functioning and to assure the natural movement of sand southward to protect the national seashore and the national wildlife refuge which lie on each side of the inlet. The project has been delayed primarily because the Department of the Interior has declined to grant required permits on the grounds that it lacks adequate authority to allow the corps to build the project on park and refuge lands.

Title IV, which was added to H.R. 3082 in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, authorizes use of the approximately 150 acres of lands needed for the project.

The Water Resources Subcommittee held a hearing on February 7, 1984, on title IV of H.R. 3082. Witnesses included the Corps of Engineers, the Department of the Interior, and various individuals and organizations interested in the legislation. During this hearing, some testimony was presented by opponents of the project questioning the project's cost-benefit ratio. Other witnesses asserted that, not only does the project have a favorable cost-benefit ratio, but it is also needed for reasons related to safety and engineering feasibility.

During markup of H.R. 3082 in March of this year, the committee added a provision that prohibits funding for the Oregon Inlet project until a cost-benefit analysis for the project has been prepared and that analysis reveals a favorable cost-benefit ratio. This amendment was offered to provide assurance that the project will be economically viable before funds are spent on its construction. I understand that since our committee reported this bill such an analysis has been performed and a favorable cost-benefit ratio obtained.

The recent devastating impacts of Hurricane Diana provide clear and convincing evidence of the need for the kind of project that can proceed under H.R. 3082.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill deserves passage and I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STANGELAND] very much for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that a few moments ago we were entertained by remarks from the gentleman from Massachuestts, who talked about his views of what will or will not happen, and I will simply say that in my view his remarks poured a lot of silt into the debate at hand. Our fishing boats only catch what is there. We are not going to catch fish that are not there.

The Oregon Inlet project poses no environmental threat to the wetland marshes of North Carolina. If it did, the people, and the government, and the Representatives of North Carolina would not be in favor of it. We are in favor of it because we believe that it will be beneficial not only to the wetland marshes but to the adjoining beaches and to the lifestyle and livelihood of many of our good people who live there.

It will only have a modest increase in the tidal range of the estuarine Pamlico Sound, which has only about a 1-foot tidal range now.

Let us think about that. Tides are beneficial to marshes. That is why marshes are so fertile. If anything, this project will help by washing and helping to exchange the waters of those marshes.

Some say and continue to say that jetties will not work. Well, it may be that they do not work in Ohio. Jetties do work in North Carolina. For example, just 120 miles or so south of Oregon Inlet is Beaufort Inlet at Morehead City. It does now have dual jetties, and has had for some 40 years. They work. It is navigable to ships. It is dependable, it is reliable. It is a safe inlet, even after a storm. There is no adverse effect to any adjacent beaches north or south of that inlet; 50 miles further to the south is Masonboro Inlet near Wilmington. That is an excellent case in point because for years there was only one jetty on the north side of the inlet and it did not work. The inlet would move back and forth. It meandered, and it was not dependable. It would shoal to within 30 or 40 feet of that jetty unbeknownst to mariners trying to find a safe harbor. It now has dual jetties, and this has beneficially contained and straightened out the natural flows, so that it has naturally cleaned out a safe, dependable channel there at Masonboro Inlet.

Has it affected beaches north and south of Wilmington? No, it has not harmed them at all.

Just recently Hurricane Diana pounded away at the beaches to the north of Masonboro Inlet, and while there was some minimal erosion and there was extensive wind damage, the beaches were not breached. There was not the kind of damage that might have been expected. And there we are talking about 125-mile-an-hour winds, a class 4 hurricane. Diana gave up on the north side of Masonboro Inlet, turned about, came down and pounded away to the south and came in on the beaches south of Masonboro Inlet.

I personally inspected both areas. There was extensive wind damage there, as you would expect from a class 4 hurricane, but the beaches were subject to minimal erosion. The beaches and dunes held.

There has been a beneficial effect there, and there was good foresight shown in building up the natural dunes with grass planting which has helped to strengthen those beaches with substantial dunes which work. The jetties have not been adverse in their effect. If anything, they have been beneficial.

I have personally navigated all three of those channels, the one with no jetties, the one with one jetty and later with two, and the other with two jetties, and I can say from personal experience, if there is a storm blowing, even if there is a falling tide against incoming waves, you are much more secure in an inlet where you know where the bottom is, when you know where your channel is, than you are trying to find a channel which is dangerous and not stabilized.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to consider and reject those arguments that have been put forth which have no merit. Dual jetties may not work in Ohio; they do work in North Carolina. I want to see them work in the district represented by my good friend, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WALTER JONES.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill and everyone debating it I think agrees on that.

The issue before us is strictly title IV, the Oregon Inlet.

First, it should be said at the outset that the Army Secretary has not put his official approval on the cost-benefit calculation, and there are some very good reasons why he has not.

No. 1, the corps' calculation grossly overestimates the catch of fish. One of the increased catches is the striped bass, known as rockfish along the Maryland shore nearby. The corps estimates that the jetties would produce a 130,000-pound increase in striped bass and yet the population of this fish is in crisis state. Maryland has absolutely banned further catching of this fish after December 31 of this year. North Carolina prohibits all catches of striped bass from June 1 to September 30 as the result of the crisis state of its population.

The bluefish, another fish that is supposed to increase so much in its catch, according to the Corps of Engineers, this is an oily fish with a rather short shelf life, and a strictly second choice for most fish eaters. And yet this analysis by the corps projects a 500 percent—a fivefold—increase in the catch of this fish, from 1.6 million to 8 million pounds. The whole east coast catches only 16 million pounds and yet one-half of that total amount is supposed to be caught from the Oregon Inlet, this one spot in North Carolina if we simply build these two jetties. That is a totally unrealistic amount to expect. The market for that kind of increase is not there. The jetties are not the problem.

Croaker, flounder, king mackerel, and greased grey sea trout are also calculated by the corps for great increase. The North Carolina Department of Fisheries told me personally these types of fish are all in a very difficult situation as well and cannot sustain significant additional fishing. These so-called major benefits cited in the corps report are illusory. These fish should not be caught, and could not be sold substantially beyond current levels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. The commercial catches on these fish have been declining from their peak period of 1979 through 1980 with existing boat fleets because the populations of these fish are declining. Nonexistence of the jetties is not the reason, and spending $600 million to build them won't help. New jetties will not create more fish.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. With the little time I have, yes.

Mr. SEIBERLING. The bottom line, as I understand it, is that the corps' estimate of a favorable cost-benefit ratio just falls apart upon analysis and actually there is a negative cost-benefit ratio to this process.

Mr. MOODY. Absolutely. If we look closely at the benefits, claimed by the corps, we see that they fall apart.

The actual costs also are far higher than the corps' estimates, making the benefit-cost ratio even worse. For one thing, the corps uses 7⅛ interest rates, when the official interest rate for fiscal year 1985, which we are about to enter in a few days, is 8⅜. If you use an 8⅜ interest figure, this jetty project immediately falls into the negative category for benefit-cost calculations.

The Federal Government is borrowing money at 13 or so percent and yet the corps calculates the capital cost of the project at only 7⅛ percent. If we use only 8⅜ percent, which is what we must official do for water projects as of October 1, 1985, the project also has a negative benefit-cost result.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, would the Chair please advise the managers as to what the time allocation is at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] has 15 minutes remaining.

The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] has 16 minutes, plus 7 minutes.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] has 5 minutes.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STANGELAND] has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

One brief statement, if I may. Much has been said about the fishing situation in this particular instance. I did not realize that it was going to be a fishing bill, but the record as we have it is that the total of the striped bass, that the projected cost-benefit ratio contains, the striped bass is only sixtenths of 1 percent of the total estimated cost-benefit ratio.

Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further requests for time?

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3082, the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act. I am from a State where public concern over the erosion of wetlands is at an all-time high.

Since 1850, the State of Florida has lost nearly half its original wetlands. Of 20.3 million acres, only 8 million remain—a 60-percent loss. And this figure continues to dwindle: as of 1973 40 percent of the wetlands in south Florida had been lost.

H.R. 3082 will enable Florida to expand its already active wetlands acquisition programs through the establishment of the wetlands conservation fund. In the last 20 years, Florida has spent over $350 million acquiring approximately 325,000 acres, much of this wetlands.

Despite new awareness of the importance of wetlands and the dire consequences which result when wetlands erode, the loss continues. This bill will afford States like mine the opportunity to preserve their wetlands for the benefit and enjoyment of all.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I have no other requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the gentleman from Alaska advise the Chair whether that is on behalf of both committees that the gentleman yields back the time?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, let us get on with the amendments. I yield it all back.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as has been amply expressed here by different speakers, there have been three major committees of the House of Representatives that have been assigned H.R. 3082, the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act of 1983, and all three of those committees have approved and recommended approval to the House of that legislation.

I think it is important to point out that the bill as reported was sequentially referred, as I mentioned before. We have analyzed this legislation in depth.

The Public Works Committee strongly supports the legislation, particularly as far as the wildlife refuge area is concerned; the work that we are doing in wetlands is critical to our country. We know that. We have been a champion in our committee protecting those areas.

We have looked into the Oregon Inlet situation quite carefully and I think the one gentleman from North Carolina made a comment earlier and the other distinguished chairman has commented, that there is a lot of blue smoke and glass floating around in this body today in reference to the facts involved.

Now, people speak of the idea of jetties. Let me tell you something, if we did not have jetties along the coast of New Jersey on all of our major inlets and our major shores, we would not have any beaches left in New Jersey, literally and figuratively, based upon the technical facts that seem to be so lacking in this House of littoral drift of the sand and the beach buildup that take place along these coasts.

Now, ironically, in our technical evaluation of the jetties to be constructed, they would be protecting the wildlife areas that are involved in this area. We have investigated. We have looked into the issue. All we are simply talking about here is anchoring two major jetties to protect the Oregon Inlet. The Oregon Inlet, if that hurricane had hit that Oregon Inlet, God knows what would have happened to that entire area.

The irony of it is that everybody makes this like it is some great big situation that is a marvel of nature. Both those natural wildlife areas were created by the accretion originally that took place in building up these particular outer islands. That is a matter of fact. So the idea this is going to blow away because we build a jetty is so much nonsense and bunk. It is not true technically. It is not true accurately and has been attested to in testimony we have received before our committee.

The issue before the House of Representatives is whether or not we are going to protect that inlet, which is a key inlet going into that particular sound. It will not deleteriously affect the environment or we would not be supporting it as strongly as we have.

It seems to me it is fundamentally wrong to have people go out 2 days on a boat and in 2 days they come back after fishing and they do not know what the situation is going to be in that channel and there is no way they can tell it.

The testimony is replete with testimony after testimony of the danger of this particular Oregon Inlet unless it is properly protected and properly maintained.

This is an issue that belongs to North Carolina. Around here we have people who come from other States who have all the answers for things that take place in other States and they have never even seen the site or know it.

I begin to resent after 15 years in this House people telling me in my State of New Jersey what we should be doing with our jetties and our needs and our resources, when we have been the leader. We know what we believe to be true in our State, and I say we ought to listen to the people from North Carolina who have a little something to say about running their State. It is other people from inland States who mean well, who present their views, but they do not know the facts that exist in our coastal States.

I think when the House makes its decision, it ought to be a decision made on the facts before the House. It ought to be made on the technical facts that exist and we ought not to be running down every other State simply because we have a figment of imagination that is not true and has not been supported on the floor of this House in any of this testimony before or today.

Therefore, I want to rise again in strong support of the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act of 1983 and intend to speak if I am allocated the time when these amendments come before us.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 579, the text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 11, 1984, by Representative JONES of North Carolina, shall be considered by titles as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule in lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committees on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Interior and Insular Affairs, and Public Works and Transportation. Each title shall be considered as having been read.

□ 1130

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Wetlands Resources Act of 1984".

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, is it the intention of the committee chairman to go through this bill by title, or to open it up now so that an amendment could be made to strike any title?

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the unanimous consent was that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

Mr. SEIBERLING. So an amendment could be offered now with respect to any title?

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute, beginning with section 2, is as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) wetlands play an integral role in maintaining the quality of life through material contributions to our national economy, food supply, water supply and quality, flood control, and fish, wildlife, and plant resources, and thus to the health, safety, recreation, and economic well-being of all our citizens;

(2) wetlands provide habitat essential for the breeding, spawning, nesting, migration, wintering, and ultimate survival of a major portion of the Nation's migratory and resident fish and wildlife, including migratory birds, endangered species, commercially and recreationally important finfish, shellfish, and other aquatic organisms, and contain many unique species and communities of wild plants;

(3) our Nation's migratory bird treaty obligations with Canada, Mexico, Japan, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and under the Convention on Nature Protection and Wildlife Preservation in the Western Hemisphere, require Federal protection of wetlands used by migratory birds for breeding, wintering or migration, and are needed to achieve and to maintain optimum population levels, distributions, and patterns of migration;

(4) wetlands, and the fish, wildlife, and plants dependent thereon, provide significant recreational and commercial benefits, including—

(A) contributions to a commercial marine harvest valued at over $10,000,000,000 annually,

(B) support for a major portion of the Nation's multi-million-dollar annual fur and hide harvest, and

(C) fishing, hunting, birdwatching, nature observation, and other wetland-related recreational activities that generate billions of dollars annually;

(5) wetlands enhance the Nation's water quality and supply by serving as groundwater recharge areas, sediment and nutrient traps and chemical sinks;

(6) wetlands provide a natural means of flood and erosion control by retaining water during periods of high runoff, thereby protecting against loss of life and property;

(7) wetlands constitute only a small percentage of the land area of the United States, are estimated to have been reduced by half in the contiguous States since the founding of our Nation, and continue to disappear by hundreds of thousands of acres each year;

(8) certain activities of the Federal Government have inappropriately altered or assisted in the alteration of wetlands, thereby unnecessarily stimulating and accelerating the loss of these valuable resources and the environmental and economic benefits that they provide; and

(9) the existing Federal, State, and private cooperation in wetlands conservation should be strengthened in order to minimize further losses of these valuable areas and to assure their management in the public interest for this and future generations.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to promote, in concert with other Federal and State statutes and programs, the conservation of our Nation's wetlands in order to maintain the public benefits they provide and to fulfill international obligations contained in various migratory bird treaties and conventions with Canada, Mexico, Japan, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and with various countries in the Western Hemisphere by—

(1) intensifying cooperative effort among private interests and local, State, and Federal governments for the management and conservation of wetlands; and

(2) intensifying efforts to protect the Nation's wetlands through acquisition in fee, easements, or other interests and methods by local, State, and Federal governments and the private sector.

In establishing such priorities, the Secretary shall take into account—

(1) the significance of the loss or threat of loss of the respective types of wetlands; and

(2) the contributions which the respective types of wetlands make to—

(A) wildlife, including endangered and threatened species, migratory birds, and resident species,

(B) commercial and sport fisheries, and

(C) surface and groundwater quality and quantity, and flood control.

SEC. 203. ALLOCATION AND APPORTIONMENT OF AMOUNTS AVAILABLE TO CARRY OUT THIS TITLE.

(a) Of the sum appropriated for any fiscal year under section 209—

(1) such percentage of that sum (but not more than 66⅔ per centum thereof) as is considered appropriate by the Secretary, less such amount (but not more than 4 per centum of such percentage) considered necessary by the Secretary to defray the costs of administering sections 202 through 207 during such fiscal year, shall be apportioned by him among eligible States in accordance with subsection (b); and

(2) the remainder of such sum after paragraph (1) is applied shall be retained by the Secretary for expenditure by him to carry out Federal wetlands acquisitions that are consistent with the wetlands priority conservation plan established under section 202.

Each wetland acquired by the Secretary under paragraph (2) shall be included within the National Wildlife Refuge System.

(b) The moneys allocated under subsection (a)(1) for any fiscal year during the effective period shall be apportioned by the Secretary among the eligible States a follows:

(1) 50 per centum thereof shall be apportioned on the basis of the ratio, as determined by the Secretary, which each eligible State's expenditure of funds (other than Federal funds) for wetlands conservation projects in that State bears to the total amount of funds (other than Federal funds) expended by all eligible States for wetlands conservation projects in such States in that year. As used in this paragraph, the term "year" means the most recent year for which the calculation of such funds, for purposes of this paragraph, is practicable.

(2) 50 per centum thereof shall be apportioned to eligible States consistent with the national wetlands priority conservation plan established under section 202.

Apportionments made under this subsection shall be adjusted so that no eligible State is apportioned less than one-half of 1 per centum of the total amount available for apportionment under this subsection in any fiscal year.

SEC. 204. ELIGIBILITY OF STATES FOR PAYMENT UNDER APPORTIONMENTS.

(a) A State is eligible for payment of moneys under an apportionment made under section 203(b)if—

(1) the Secretary determines that a wetlands conservation plan submitted to him by the State—

(A) is comprehensive and will ensure the perpetuation of wetland resources,

(B) was prepared with opportunity for public comment,

(C) is substantial in character and design, and

(D) is in a format required by the Secretary which shall be compatible with standards and formats required of States for grants administered by the Secretary, particularly the Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration Act (16 U.S.C. 669 et seq.), Federal Aid in Sport Fish Restoration Act (16 U.S.C. 777 et seq.), and Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. 2901 et seq.); or

(2) the Secretary determines, after opportunity for public comment, that a wetland conservation project submitted to him by the State is substantial in character and design and meets such standards as the Secretary deems appropriate, and the State submits to the Secretary such surveys, plans, estimates, and other specifications for the project as the Secretary may require.

A comprehensive wetlands conservation plan or an individual wetland conservation project with respect to which such a determination is made under paragraph (1) or (2) is an approved plan or approved project for purposes of section 205.

SEC. 205. CONDITIONS RELATING TO APPORTIONMENTS.

(a) The moneys apportioned to an eligible State under section 203(b) may be used for the payment of not to exceed 75 per centum of the costs of (1) any segment of an approved plan, or (2) an approved project, as the case may be.

(b) No payment of any money apportioned under section 203(b) may be made by the Secretary with respect to any approved plan or any approved project unless—

(1) an agreement on the part of the eligible State setting forth its undertakings to implement the plan or project is submitted to, and approved by, the Secretary; and

(2) the Secretary finds that the approved plan segment or approved project has been completed, or is being undertaken, in compliance with such plan or project.

If the conditions in paragraphs (1) and (2) are met, the Secretary shall cause payment to be made to the proper authority of such State.

(c) The Secretary may from time to time make payments on an approved plan segment or approved project as it progresses, but such payments, including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the United States pro rata share of the segment or project in conformity with the plan or project specifications.

(d) The Secretary may enter into agreements to fund an initial portion of an approved plan segment or approved project and to agree to fund the remaining costs from subsequent apportionments if and when they become available. The liability of the United States under such an agreement is contingent upon the continued availability of funds for the purposes of this section.

(e) Moneys paid to an eligible State under this section shall be applied only to approved plans or approved projects and, if otherwise applied, shall be repaid by the State before it may participate in any further apportionment under this title.

(f) No property acquired or developed with assistance under this title shall, without the approval of the Secretary be converted to other than wetland conservation uses. The Secretary shall approve such conversion only if he finds it to be in accord with the then existing comprehensive wetlands conservation plan and only upon such conditions as he deems necessary to assure the substitution of other properties of at least equal fair market value or a reasonably equivalent usefulness and location.

(g) No enhancement project of preservation project shall be approved unless the State holds an interest in perpetuity on the wetlands being conserved.

SEC. 206. TREATMENT OF UNOBLIGATED AMOUNTS.

(a) The amount of any apportionment made to an eligible State under section 203(b) for any fiscal year that remains unobligated at the close thereof shall continue to be available to that State for obligation until the close of the succeeding fiscal year.

(b) If any amount to which subsection (a) applies remains unobligated at the close of the two-fiscal year period referred to in that subsection, such amount shall be used by the Secretary in accordance with subsection (c).

(c) During the fiscal year after any two-fiscal year period referred to in subsection (b), the Secretary shall make available—

(1) any, all, or none (as he deems appropriate) of the aggregate of all of the amounts unobligated by eligible States at the close of such period to those eligible States not having unobligated amounts at the close of such period for expenditure to implement wetland conservative projects that are consistent with the national wetlands priority conservative plan established under section 202; and

(2) if all such aggregate is not made available to eligible States under paragraph (1), the balance of such aggregate for expenditure under section 203(a)(2), which balance shall remain available until expended.

Any part of any amount made available under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year that remains unobligated at the close of such year shall be available, until expended, for expenditure under section 203(a)(2).

SEC. 207. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall issue such regulations as are necessary or appropriate to carry out this title.

SEC. 208. WETLANDS CONSERVATION FUND.

(b) Amounts in the fund shall be available, as provided by appropriations Acts, only for making expenditures to carry out this title.

(c) For each fiscal year within the effective period, there are transferred $75,000,000 to the fund from the land and water conservation fund established under section 2 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-5).

(b) USE OF CERTAIN FEDERAL LANDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is authorized to use land within the boundaries of the Cape Hatteras

National Seashore and land within the boundaries of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge which he determines to be necessary to carry out the Manteo Bay project.

(c) EFFECTS OF USE.—In implementing the authority under subsection (b), the Secretary of the Army, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the construction and continued operation of the Manteo Bay project, carry out the project in such manner as to (1) maintain the essential integrity of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and the Cape Hatteras National Seashore; and (2) ensure that adverse impacts to the uses and purposes of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and the Cape Hatteras National Seashore are avoided, if possible, or minimized, and that, if the Secretary of the Army finds appropriate, unavoidable adverse impacts are mitigated.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, these amendments are all technical and conforming in nature. A number of them are to correct printing errors in the bill. We have also had to change some of the dates referred to in the bill because of the passage of time since the bill was reported from committee. For example, the bill requires an increase in the price of the duck stamp for the 1984/1985 hunting season. Since those stamps have already been printed, and, indeed, many hunters have already purchased their stamps, the increase must be put off for a year. For the same reason, we have deferred the dates for completion of studies on wetland loss contained in the bill.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, are these the amendments that have been previously discussed between the staff of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the staff of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee?

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Yes, sir, the exact same things. These are strictly technical.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman, and I have no objection to the amendments.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, the minority side has no objections to the amendments. They have been cleared with all staff members and we have all looked at them, so we are all in agreement with the technical amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

The amendments were agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. JONES OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of North Carolina: Proposed section 302 is amended—

By amending subsection (b)(4) to read as follows:

(4) an analysis of the environmental, fiscal and economic impacts (including, but not limited to, the impact on property values and local economic impacts) of future Federal expenditures and financial assistance, or the elimination of Federal expenditures and financial assistance, whether direct or indirect, which affect wetlands, including but not limited to: public works expenditures; assistance programs such as price-support programs, commodity loans and purchase programs, and disaster assistance program; soil conservation programs; and certain income tax provisions;

By striking subsection (b)(5); and

By renumbering subsection (b)(6) as (b)(5).

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, has this amendment been cleared with the staff of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, between the staffs of the two committees?

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. I am informed that it has been.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is essentially technical, designed to accommodate certain jurisdictional concerns raised by the Agriculture Committee. The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to prepare a study on Federal programs that affect wetlands. This amendment simply adds that the Interior Secretary must consult with other agencies whose programs affect wetlands before issuing the final report. The amendment is intended to make sure that any potential for departmental bias is eliminated or minimized. The amendment in no way changes the substance of the bill. I want to emphasize that although we have deleted the naming of certain Federal programs that may affect wetlands, this does not mean that these programs should be excluded from the Interior Department study.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word and rise to state that we have no objections to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SNYDER

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: At the end of title III add the following:

SEC. 305. FALLS OF THE OHIO NATIONAL WILDLIFE CONSERVATION AREA.

Section 207 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the establishment of the Bandon Marsh National Wildlife Refuge, Coos County, State of Oregon, and for other purposes" (Public Law 97-137) is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 207. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to carry out this responsibilities under this title, at an estimated cost of $1,040,000. Any sums appropriated under this title shall remain available until expanded.".

Mr. SNYDER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to correct problems which have arisen since the enactment of Public Law 97-137 created the Falls of the Ohio National Wildlife Conservation Area. When that legislation passed the last Congress, we estimated that land acquisition cost for the conservation area would be approximately $300,000. In last year's Energy and Water Appropriations Act the funds were provided to implement the authorization.

However, recently the Corps of Engineers issued a report which revises the estimate for land acquisition costs. The corps estimates that it will now cost $1,040,000 to fully protect this valuable wetland area.

In order to expedite congressional action on this new estimate I am asking my colleagues to support this amendment so that we may realize the complete protection of this extremely valuable conservation area.

I am joined in offering this amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] who share my concern for the protection of the Falls of the Ohio National Wildlife Conservation Area.

Mr. Chairman, we urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman I thank the gentleman for yielding. We have examined the amendment on this side and we have no objection to it whatsoever.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, we have examined the amendment. I want to compliment the gentleman for bringing it to the floor at this time. We have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SEIBERLING

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEIBERLING: Strike all of title IV.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the staff could bring the photographs before us.

My colleagues, it is not with any great sense of pride or any other sense of well-being that I oppose our good friend from North Carolina [Mr. JONES]. We all love him and in fact that is the reason why three committees have approved title IV of this bill. He made a personal appeal to us and on that basis we agreed we were not going to mount major opposition in the committee. We were going to let the House work its will.

So here we are today.

However, let me point out that dissenting views were filed in the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and signed by MO UDALL, DICK CHENEY, TONY COELHO, JOHN MCCAIN, ROBERT LAGOMARSINO, PETER KOSTMAYER, JIM MOODY, BRUCE VENTO, and myself. I do not think that these gentlemen lightly take on the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

So the fact that our committee did not see fit to try to knock this out in committee does not indicate that there was any great enthusiasm for this particular phase of the project, although we do support the other three titles of this bill very strongly.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. I am under the impression, as a matter of record, a motion similar to what the gentleman has just offered was offered in his committee and was defeated by a vote of about 22 to 12.

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is correct. But we did not make a concerted effort to try to defeat it. I personally did not try to block it in subcommittee even though I was chairman of the subcommittee, because of out of consideration for the pleas that the gentleman himself made to the members, including this member.

Now the fact is that we are not dealing with a matter that requires authorization at this time by the Public Works and Transportation Committee. The Public Works and Transportation Committee authorized this project in 1970. At that time the estimated cost of these jetties was $16.5 million. Today the estimated cost just of the capital costs is about $100 million.

Furthermore, we have learned a great deal about what is happening to our coasts in the intervening 14 years.

□ 1140

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] said that people from Ohio should not be trying to tell other States how to handle their problems, and I do not think that is what we are trying to do. What we are dealing with here is the expenditure of the taxpayers' money which comes from the people of Ohio and all the other States.

Furthermore, the two marine geologists who testified at our hearings as to the disastrous effects on the national seashore of the construction of these jetties were both from North Carolina and practically every newspaper in North Carolina has repeatedly editorialized against this project.

So it is not fair to say that this is something outsiders are trying to tell the State what to do.

Interestingly enough, the latest issue of Newsweek magazine indicated on September 24 in an article entitled "The Vanishing Coast, Seawalls and Jetties Aggravate the Erosion Process." That is the headline, goes on to say this:

The main problem is that the sea level is rising. Since the 1930's oceans have risen at a rate of one and a half feet per century. To grasp what happens as sea levels rise coastal geologists are focusing on the barrier islands.

That is what we are dealing with here.

This picture shows this long, fragile barrier island with the Oregon Inlet in the center of it.

The article goes on to say:

These slender ribbons of sand wend their way along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and some of America's most beautiful beaches, such as Cape Cod, Atlantic City, Cape Hatteras, Miami Beach and Padre Island. The islands act as shock absorbers for the mainland, bearing the brunt of storms and tides.

They are so good at this because geologists have discovered they can literally roll with the sea's punches. Currents and winds make the islands travel toward the mainland much like the rollover of a tank tread. The result is that the islands merely relocate but with no net loss of beach.

As a matter of fact, this whole barrier island system since 1846 when Oregon Inlet was first blown open by a hurricane, has moved 750 feet shoreward from the ocean. Furthermore, Oregon Inlet has moved also.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. SEIBERLING was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. SEIBERLING. Furthermore, Oregon Inlet has moved 10,000 feet south, in a southerly direction, as Mr. MARTIN himself yesterday pointed out.

Now, continuing with this article, it goes on to say:

A system that has worked for milleniums geologists are learning does not tolerate human interference too well. Building seawalls along the beaches of the barrier island or even of the mainland has led to what geologists call New Jerseyization—

New Jerseyization—

Like the coasts of that State more and more shorelines are being fronted by long seawalls. Often there is no sand except at very low tide. What happens over the years is that waves bounce off the wall and into the surf, carrying the sand away. The shoreface gets steeper, the force of the waves increases because they break right on the wall instead of offshore, and while houses may be saved the beach disappears.

Jetties and groins, jutting out from the shore, are equally disruptive, but in a different way. These structures trap sand carried laterally along the coastline by "littoral drift."

Now, Mr. Pilkey, a marine geologist from North Carolina, calls them spite groins, and the article continues:

Since beaches upcurrent of the groin grow at the expense of beaches downcurrent, deprived of new sand, they erode much more quickly.

Now, we will remove the first photograph here and get to an enlargement of the proposed project.

Here we have drawn on to an aerial photograph the approximate location of the two jetties extending out 1 mile from Oregon Inlet and, furthermore, the project calls for the stabilization through riprapping of a big portion of this part of the Bodie Island on the side of the inlet. You will notice also that there is a little box here which represents the proposed sand bypass system. A dredge working on this side would pick up the sand that is trapped by this jetty and pipe it over this way to the other side of the inlet so that it will try to make up for the fact that this side will be starved of sand by the working of the jetty.

Now, nobody knows whether that will work. It has never been tried on this scale. But the reason for that is because of this very phenomenon that I just read you about that Mr. Pilkey described, that jetties block the flow of sand.

Now, I happen to know something about what has happened in New Jersey.

Back in the 1940's I used to go to Wildwood Beach and they have a huge jetty that extends out from the beach. It is one of the finest beaches on the whole eastern seaboard, very long, gradual beach. But what that jetty did was to take the sand that normally flowed to Cape May and stop it. At that time Cape May practically had no beach at all and the only way they recovered was to build additional jetties down near Cape May.

If you build this system and the so-called bypass does not work, and no one really knows whether it will, you are going to end up not just spending $600 million which is the 50-year cost of this system, but spending billions building jetties the entire length of this coastal barrier in order to keep it from being washed away.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. If I can get 5 more minutes.

(On request of Mr. HOWARD and by unanimous consent Mr. SEIBERLING was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey or the two gentlemen from New Jersey.

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In the discussion I believe some people might get the idea that all kinds of jetties or all kinds of things that might be built out from a beach area which has a littoral drift are somehow bad.

Mr. SIEBERLING. No, I did not say all of them are.

Mr. HOWARD. No. Certainly there are areas where what we call notch jetties, jetties that are not very high, which will build up a beach to a certain point and then permit the drift of sand to go over that to the other side so that it does not just block off the one on the leeside, you might call it, of the drift. So I just want to make it very clear that we have had some great successes in New Jersey. In my area where the littoral drift is north, the gentleman spoke about Wildwood and Cape May below, which I agree with him, putting up just a blockage right there, can erode it either way; that is, the beach to the south, if the drift is to the south. But we have had some very great successes in building up.

You cannot stop that sand, block it, without trouble. You can only try to maneuver it a little bit and get the best that you can out of it.

So I just want to make it clear for those of us who are concerned about good technology in preserving and building up our beaches that jetties are not just a minus in every case.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman, I think the gentleman is absolutely right, and I agree with him. That is the purpose of the sand bypass system that is proposed here.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, depending on how far out into the ocean it goes, also, because that sand is moving not just what we see above, but it is moving down below, on both sides.

Mr. SEIBERLING. If you go 1 mile out into the ocean you have a considerable problem.

Mr. HOWARD. There are special problems for special places.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Now let me just read Professor Pilkey's discussion of the sand bypass system. Here is what he said:

Downstream to the south, erosion of beaches will be prevented by the sand bypass system.

Now that is the claim. Here is his reponse:

The sand bypass system will be working on a periodic basis and cannot respond, as nature requires, during the big sand moving event; the storm. As a consequence, major beach erosion must occur either to the north or to the south, depending on approach direction of the storm. Furthermore, the sand bypass system depends on a floating breakwater—design of which is not yet complete—which is basically an untested concept. It is also reasonable to ask how a solid price tag has been put on the jetty project when a major component is not yet fully understood.

Now, Mr. MARTIN said jetties worked. Of course they work. They will work to do what they are supposed to do. If you build this immense structure here it will stabilize the inlet and permit the digging and maintenance of a 20-foot channel instead of a 14-foot channel, as has been successfully maintained without a jetty.

But what it does not do, what he did not tell you is what it will do to the rest of this barrier island.

If this sand bypass system does not work as Professor Pilkey indicated it probably would not, you are going to have the starving of this barrier island in both directions of sand to keep it from being washed out. You are going to have washouts and in the end you are going to have to build a whole series of jetties in either direction and spend hundreds of millions of dollars additionally.

□ 1150

I also happen to be familiar with West Hampton Beach, NY, where my sister has a home. They started to build jetties on that beach and all the way up to East Hampton. They ran out of money and did not complete it on the downstream side. The movement of waters being from east to west. The result is that they stabilized the beaches where all the jetties are, but the beaches to the south, to the west of that, where there are no jetties, have been wiped out and practically half the homes have been just plain destroyed. There is no beach. There are no houses. No nothing.

So, that is the fact of life as to the forces we are dealing with.

Now, I do not lightly undertake the task of opposing the gentleman's project. I know it is very dear to his heart, but a lot has happened since 1970 when this was approved. I submit to my colleagues when the Interior Assistant Secretary Arnett writes a letter to us and says this would be very damaging to the national seashore and the wildlife refuge, we had better take it seriously. We are dealing with the taxpayers' money.

Safety was made an issue. Let me just say on the safety issue that last winter they maintained a 14-foot channel, without jetties, and that that has worked successfully, despite the winter storms. There is no reason to suppose that such dredging will not succeed in the future. That cost is only one-fourth the cost of this project over a 50-year period and has very little capital outlay.

So I submit to my colleagues that there are alternatives from a safety standpoint and when we are running huge deficits this thing is going to be labeled a boondoggle, as it already has been by the National Taxpayers Union. Not only that, but every single national environmental organization opposes it.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Yesterday in general debate I made the comment that we had received information that the National Park Service and the Wildlife Service opposed this project. I was informed later that that was not accurate.

Would the gentleman tell me and the committee what the facts are with regard to this?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Well, they wrote very serious criticisms of the project and they refused to give a permit to build these jetties and that is why we have to have legislation, but they have not officially taken any position on it one way or the other. Nor has the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I want to commend the gentleman for his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SEIBERLING was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ROSE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Will the gentleman answer this question. If the corps had not taken the position on this and the Wildlife Service had not taken a position on this, what is the problem here? The letter from the Secretary?

Mr. SEIBERLING. The problem is that the overall weight of the evidence has indicated that this would be a disaster, that is what.

Mr. ROSE. If the Corps of Engineers has not given a final opinion, what in the world could be wrong with letting them hold title to this land until such time as they made a final determination whether it would be harmful?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Well, the corps is never going to fight a project that maintains their job security. They have simply submitted a review and indicated what they think the cost benefits are.

Mr. ROSE. The gentleman thinks the corps would be looking for more jobs to do?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I have never known them to turn one down.

Mr. ROSE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Let me just say that 2 years ago we passed a very wise piece of legislation, the Coastal Barrier Resources Act. It passed this House 399 to 4. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] was the manager of the bill. He pointed out that it is aimed at preserving undeveloped coastal barrier beaches and islands by prohibiting Federal financial assistance for new developement.

Now, I submit that although there was a caveat which said unless of course there is a need for certain navigation purposes.

But this defies the spirit of that legislation because it was based on the recognition that the coastal barriers are being ruined by the construction of artificial manmade devices on the coastal barriers.

We had testimony by marine geologists that at the present time when storms build up the water level inside the bay here that this inlet acts as a safety valve. When the water rushes out it pushes aside the shoulders of the inlets, since they are made of soft sand, and he said he has seen it move aside at the rate of one-half mile in an hour.

If you stabilize this that safety value is gone.

Let us be very cautious.

Mr. BAIGGI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I listened to the gentleman from Ohio as he offered his amendment and I was kind of confused. I understand there is a sense of collegiality here in the Congress, but that goes just so far. If his theory is correct, then every chairman of every committee who offers legislation would have that legislation be enacted. He suggests that the only reason that three committees have approved this project in the past is out of their respect for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES]. That respect is well deserved, but I do not think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES], nor any other Member in this body, believes for a moment that simply because of respect for a Member who offers a proposal that it would be adopted simply because he is the author.

The fact of the matter is this subject has been a matter of deliberate consideration over an extended period of time. It has been approved by three committees. This very same motion was defeated in committee. This is another attempt by the gentleman from Ohio to work his will. It was defeated in committee. He voted against it in committee. He is one of the dissenters. So, clearly, he is pursuing his prerogatives to express his view and hopefully to have it manifested.

The fact is he has been rejected. His dissent is recorded. The gentleman from Ohio is quite adroit and makes a lot of sense, or at least he has fascinated many of us by his presentation of these posters. But, again, we have had hearings. All sides were considered. This is not a new presentation. The presentation was made in the hearings. There were several sides presented. There was a distillation of the testimony with the conclusion that the project should be approved.

The gentleman also suggests that every editorial and the people of North Carolina oppose the project.

Well, if the action we take is to be dependent upon the editorials, I would say shame on the process.

But we have learned a lot in this business. You make your decision. You take your position and you welcome editorials, but you are not controlled by them.

It would seem to me the more logical and rational approach to take is to listen to the delegation from that State. And clearly the State of North Carolina and its delegation support this proposal. If they support the proposal, obviously they want to reject this amendment.

□ 1200

Now, the gentleman from Ohio, as I said before, was most impressive. But I would be more impressed with the statement made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], of the Public Works Committee, and by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE], of the same committee, both of whom have an expertise that is most uncommon. They take the very strong position that this project should be approved.

In summation, all of the concerns addressed by the gentleman from Ohio in the advocacy of his amendment have been expressed before in the various committees. There is nothing really new in this discussion. The gentleman is just taking it further, as is his right, to bring it to the floor.

I would urge the Members of this House to understand that the process still works. Many of us are not experts in all of the areas, and we depend upon the committee process and we know that all sides are presented. In the end, the committees approve the project. Let us not reverse the action of the committee. Let us not reject the full and wholehearted support of the North Carolina delegation.

Of course, we can disagree with the gentleman from Ohio, who said that we have great respect for the chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES]. But no one for a moment believes that this legislation has been approved by the committee simply out of that respect. It would be a shameful indictment of the committee process. This legislation, this project, was approved during the usual process, after being given serious consideration. It was advocated, it was discussed, it was deliberated upon, it was debated; and, in the end, it was approved.

I sincerely hope that this amendment is rejected.

Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in strong opposition to this amendment.

As member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I have had the opportunity to go through several hearings here in Washington, but I also took the opportunity to visit North Carolina and to try to go through that inlet on what I would call a day that was not perhaps calm but it certainly was not a stormy day. I come from a district that is completely surrounded by water and we have inlets up in the First Congressional District of New York, and I know when you are going through a treacherous inlet. I can tell my colleagues today that the Oregon Inlet when weather is bad is a treacherous inlet. I can also tell my colleagues that, as a Member of Congress representing a fishing community, perhaps the hardest thing that I have had to do in 6 years was to explain to a family why a loved one lost his life. Why the Government had not acted fast enough to present to the fishing community in my district or perhaps the fishing community in the chairman's district a safe harbor for people who earn their living in perhaps the oldest occupation in America. They earn their living on the sea, and we should provide for those people the types of safety we would provide for people here on land, whether it be safe railroads, whether it be safe airlines. We should have for the fishing community a method that they can come to safe harbor.

After personally reviewing the Oregon Inlet I can state emphatically this is not a safe inlet, and we should act as a Congress to ensure that it becomes a safe inlet. We are talking, ladies and gentlemen, about people. Not only are we talking about commercial fishermen, but we are talking about people who are involved in recreation. You might be talking about someone who is not familiar with the inlet, who is coming up from Florida to perhaps Maine, going through and having to find a safe harbor in a storm. Well, if this inlet were to be closed, you would have to travel at least 50 miles in a northernly direction or 50 miles in a southernly direction to find a safe harbor. If this inlet were closed, the Coast Guard station at Oregon Inlet would have to be closed. Again we are talking about the safety of people, whether they be commercial fishermen, or recreational boaters who are out on the ocean, and we have the responsibility to provide for those people safe access to harbors in times of foul weather. We also have a responsibility to recognize the fact that the Federal Government has made a substantial financial contribution to that area to create a fishing industry. We have spent $8 million in Federal dollars to build a fishing processing industry that is virtually left vacant today because the ships necessary to bring the fish in to be processed cannot get in and out. So we have, in other words, written off this $8 million contribution of Federal moneys to enhance an industry at the inlet.

Now, some might ask why would I be concerned since my area competes with that area. Well, we do, in a way, and we do not in another way. Ofttimes the boats from North Carolina, the boats that come out of Oregon Inlet, find safe harbor up on Long Island, ofttimes they bring their catch to Long Island if that is where the market is. So there is the benefit. But we have to recognize the most important thing here, Mr. Chairman, and that is people, the lives of people are at stake if we do not take remedial action.

We must also keep in mind that this bill will not trigger the project. It will only allow the project to take place on federally protected lands, and I think it would be in our best judgment to reject the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, support the chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee's efforts to go forward and provide for the people of the Outer Banks of North Carolina a safe harbor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CARNEY] has expired.

(On request of Mr. SEIBERLING and by unanimous consent, Mr. CARNEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARNEY. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I do not quarrel at all with the importance of making this inlet safe, but we already have had evidence that this can be done without building any jetties by merely putting a dredge there, a hopper dredge, as was used last winter, which maintained the 14-foot channel all through the season. So it is not a question of whether we want to make it safe but what is the best way and least expensive way to do it, and dredging is much, much less expensive.

Mr. CARNEY. I would agree with the gentleman except for one thing. We have demonstrated that the hopper dredge cannot maintain that channel's open situation year round. We dredge it continually. It is a very expensive proposition. I also think, too, that when you use the hopper dredge, the condition of the inlet changes so rapidly. We recognize the dynamics of the water, the tidal action, changing the condition from day to day, making it very difficult for even the best of sailors to navigate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CARNEY] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. SEIBERLING and by unanimous consent, Mr. CARNEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARNEY. If I may, I would just like to say that by stabilizing it, you would present a much safer inlet and over the years of the project a cheaper inlet.

I would be glad to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I would like to point out that an article in the Virginian Pilot, dated December 14, 1983, says:

> The channel through the inlet is in its best shape in years and improvements also have been made in the interior channel leading to Wanchese.

And this was done with the hopper dredge, and that is that only test we have had. We have no proof that the hopper dredge will not work. The only proof we have is that it did work.

Mr. CARNEY. We have proof that it fills in continually.

Mr. SEIBERLING. It did not. It was maintained all winter long.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CARNEY] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. JONES of North Carolina and by unanimous consent, Mr. CARNEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. CARNEY. I would be glad to yield to the chairman.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on the question of the dredges, I think, to put it back in perspective, recently we have had as many as three dredges at work in the inlet. Last year we had two side-cast dredges plus the hopper dredge. They cleared the channel, but as soon as they departed the channel started filling in. So that is the story of the dredges.

Mr. CARNEY. Having to compete for a dredge for inlets in my district, I realize we do not have that type of equipment available on a continuing basis. We could never afford to keep a dredge in that channel year round to keep it open, that would not be cost effective.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendent, and in so doing I would like to make just a few points.

First, we must remember that, when we are talking about the Oregon Inlet project, we are talking about an effort to improve the operation of a Federal navigation project that has been authorized for more than 30 years and has been in operation for more than 20 years. The proposed jetties and the necessary lands that are potentially affected by the gentleman's amendment are designed to maintain access to and from an already operational Federal project.

Second, Mr. Chairman, we must remember that nothing about this amendment or title IV of H.R. 3082 is intended to change the Department of Interior's charge to manage the nearby national seashore and refuge to accomplish important congressionally mandated conservation objectives.

Third, one of the most important purposes of the Oregon Inlet project is to provide for the safety of commercial and recreational boating interests in the area. Oregon Inlet is the only access from ocean waters to protected water over a stretch of approximately 160 miles. The location of the inlet, in the vicinity of Diamond Shoals and Cape Hatteras, an area that is often referred to by mariners as the "graveyard of the Atlantic," makes it that much more important to keep the inlet open and accessible. The U.S. Coast Guard maintains a search and rescue station in close proximity to the inlet. When the inlet is closed to navigation, the Coast Guard patrol boats have to travel over 100 miles to respond to a distress call that could be only 2 or 3 miles off the inlet. It makes absolutely no sense and, in fact, is unreasonably wasteful and dangerous to allow such a situation to go uncorrected.

Finally, the recently completed Corps of Engineers economic analysis helps put to rest the uncertainty about whether the Oregon Inlet jetty project is economic from the perspective of benefit-cost analysis. I would point out, however, that we should not lose sight of the fact that many unquantifiable benefits—such as preventing loss of life and providing free access to the Coast Guard vessels which are stationed near the inlet—are not reflected in the benefit-cost ratio. When these unquantifiable benefits are also appreciated and included in an analysis of the project, it becomes even more obvious that approval of title IV of H.R. 3082 is not only warranted but essential.

Mr. Chairman, for these reasons and others which have been discussed here by our colleagues, I strongly urge that the gentlemen's amendment be rejected.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I serve on both the Public Works and the Interior Committees, and have looked at this project intensively in both those committees. I share with the rest of my colleagues a deep respect and affection for our friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES]. I also want to reiterate that this is a fine bill that we all support; it is only title IV that we are talking about now.

In both the committees I serve on, Interior and Public Works, title IV of this bill was approved not as described by earlier speakers, but strictly subject to receipt of an adequate and positive benefit-cost analysis from the Corps of Engineers. Title IV was not approved without conditions, but was approved subject strictly to that caveat.

That caveat has not yet been fulfilled. We have not received either an officially approved nor an adequate benefit-cost analysis from the Corps of Engineers. First, it is not official because the Secretary of the Army has not yet provided his approval. And I doubt quite frankly that he ever will, knowing what we know now about the corps report, that he ever will because of the inadequacies that I will outline in a moment. Before I do that, I want to comment briefly on the safety issue that was mentioned earlier, and the fiscal implications.

Of course there is nothing more important than saving lives, but there are many ways to do that. Building jetties is not the only way to save lives. In this case, it is not nearly the most cost-effective way of saving lives. A dredge hopper, for example, to keep the channel clear, is a far less costly way of saving lives. So the lifesaving argument for the building jetties is not persuasive.

Now a previous speaker said we could not have the dredge hopper at Oregon Inlet all the time because it simply is not available. If you actually bought a dredge hopper and dedicated it strictly to this project so that it was there all the time, and intensive dredging was carried out, you would solve the problem of safety, and in fact achieve most of the benefits which this project claims. But you would do it in a far more effective and cost-efficient way.

As for the fiscal situation, here we are with a deficit of $170 to $200 billion per year, and a national debt heading toward $2 trillion, and we are talking about authorizing and spending on a project like this which is extremely controversial. There is almost unanimous opposition to this project in the environmental community and among the economists that have looked at the cost-benefit calculation, outside of the corps itself. We have enough projects of noncontroversial nature that we are not going to be able to fund, because of the scarcity of money, why do we want to approve a project which is extremely controversial and which is not cost beneficial? It will lose more money to the Nation than it will earn.

Now I want to talk about the specific errors in the cost-benefit calculation submitted by the Corps of Engineers. No. 1, and most serious, there is gross overestimation in the corps' estimation of benefits from building the jetties. The corps calculates benefits from additional fish catch, from both traditional and nontraditional fishing sources. For traditional fishing, such as bluefish, striped bass, croaker, flounder, king mackerel, and sea trout, the corps estimates a 9,200-metric-ton increase—a 73-percent increase—which is a gigantic increase indeed. Let's look at them individually, starting with striped bass. While striped bass is not a particularly large portion of the benefit claimed, and the chairman from North Carolina has pointed that out, it serves as an example of how the corps' cost-benefit calculation is so biased and so clearly overstated. It assumes a very big increase in the striped bass, 130,000 pounds per year. There is one key problem here: The striped bass is totally banned from fishing between June and September in North Carolina because of the extremely perilous state of the population of that fish. Maryland has just decided to totally ban that fish—called rockfish in Maryland—for any fishing whatsoever. As you know, and the fish migrate up and down the coast with the season, so we're talking about the same set of fish.

So, projection of a gigantic increase in the commerical fishing of striped bass, which ignores the ban States have placed on fishing, it is an indication of how flawed this report is. I talked to the North Carolina fisheries people and they were amazed that anybody would want to fish more striped bass. Yet, this is just an indication of the validity of the corps' cost-benefit analysis.

Let's take bluefish. It is also an important element of the increased benefits. The corps projects a 500-percent increase in bluefish. They cannot sell all the bluefish we are catching now, but we are going to catch five times as many and sell them all? Again, a highly unrealistic assumption by the corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY] has expired.

(On request of Mr. SEIBERLING and by unanimous consent, Mr. MOODY was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. MOODY. I thank my colleague and chairman.

In the whole east coast they are only catching 16 million pounds of bluefish from New England to Florida, and yet this cost-benefit calculation says they are going to catch 8 million simply out of the Oregon Inlet, one little spot along the way. Again, totally unrealistic.

I asked the North Carolina fisheries people how this could possibly be accomplished? They said the only way it could be would be to use the pair trawl system where you have nets being dragged by two boats. For really large catches, that technique is necessary. It so happens that the pair trawl is illegal in North Carolina for food fish. You cannot even use that technique that you would have to use to meet the Corps of Engineers estimates.

I asked the North Carolina Fisheries Department if there was any other way you could catch this quantity of fish. They said, well, the only other way would be to use a purse seine. This is also illegal in North Carolina. In short, North Carolina does not permit the kind of fishing techniques that are implicitly built right into the corps' analysis.

Now, the croaker, the flounder, the king mackerel, and the gray sea trout also figure importantly in the benefits attributed to this project by the corps. But it turns out that those species have been generally declining since their peak catch years of 1979 through 1980. Why? Not because of the lack of any jetties. It is the limited population of those fish that is limiting the catch. In fact several of them are already being overfished with existing facilities and boat fleets. So we couldn't realize the huge catch increases the corps estimates. Even if we could, intensive dredging would be a far cheaper way to do it. But even if we dredged the Oregon Inlet, we could not have those kind of increases. The corps estimated benefits are totally out of line, totally overestimated.

The second major flaw in the study is that the Corps of Engineers assumed that there would be no price drop for the fish sold in the market no matter how much the catch goes up. If we had a fivefold increase in the catch of some fish, say bluefish, the corps analysis assumes they sell in the market for exactly the same price as they do at the smaller catch. We are going to double the amount of fish sold in some cases, without a fall in price? Obviously not. That is a laughably inadequate and inappropriate assumption, and not only by my judgment. The Congressional Research Service has also done an analysis of the corps' report and they disclose this and some of the other errors I am pointing out.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. There was also an analysis by David Campbell, a resources economist at the National Wildlife Federation which was reviewed by a team of independent economists and was placed in the RECORD by Mr. CONTE yesterday at page 25959.

And the bottom line, I think, might be worth reading. The conclusion of that analysis says:

> Even if the assumption is made that intensive dredging does not allow for the same level of fishing effort that a jetty system would, the corrected estimated benefits are less than the costs of the project. The revised average annualized costs at 7⅛% are $8,974,000 and the revised annualized benefits are $7,106,000, an estimated annualized loss of $1,868,000.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I have reviewed Mr. Campbell's work and I agree with the results.

The third cardinal sin made by the corps analysis is that it takes the costs of intensive dredging, that is a substitute for building the jetties, and it subtracts those costs and calls them a benefit. Let me take a moment to make it clear what the problem is with this technique. In the case of Oregon Inlet you have two alternative ways of achieving your benefit: you can either dredge or build. Those are alternative ways to achieve roughly similar benefits. If you decide to build jetties instead of dredge you do not call the cost of not dredging a benefit. It is simply the alternative project not pursued.

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman will yield further, furthermore even with the jetties, they will still have to dredge. The only thing is with the jetties, they can have a 20-foot channel instead of a 14-foot channel.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman is right. That mistake alone throws the project totally into the negative channel and the CRS analysis of the corps study agrees that that is a fundamental error that the corps has made in the cost-benefit analysis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 5 additional minutes to complete my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object. We have discussed this over and over and over again.

I will not object to the 3 minutes, but I do object to the 5 minutes.

And there should be no further time allowed as far as I am concerned.

(On request of Mr. SEIBERLING and by unanimous consent, Mr. MOODY was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman would yield to me, I simply point out that the opponents of this project had 15 minutes allocated to them on general debate and the proponents had all the rest of the time; 1 hour and 45 minutes. I do not think this is an unusual request.

Mr. MOODY. I thank the gentleman.

I am trying to cover material which has not been brought out before, therefore I think my colleagues may be interested in this material.

Mr. Chairman, the fourth very serious mistake of the Corps of Engineers in their benefit cost analysis was to use an interest rate of 7⅛ percent in calculating costs of capital and discounting future benefits. In fiscal year 1985, which we would certainly be in by the time this project would commence, the official rate to be used in water projects is 8⅜, not 7⅛. As with the other three corps errors I point out, correcting for this mistake throws the project into the negative column. If you apply 8⅜ interest rate the project's benefits minus cost becomes negative, so that we would spend more than we would get out of the project.

If we were to use a 10-percent interest rate, which is what the OMB is asking all agencies to do, the result becomes far more negative. If we use the actual borrowing cost paid by the Government of 12 or 13 percent to build this project, the benefit-cost calculation becomes horrendously negative.

If we approve this project, we are asking the Federal Government to borrow money at least 12 percent while we tell the public that the money is only costing us 7⅛ percent. But 8⅜ would be a minimum number to use when considering this project because that is the official water discount rate for fiscal year 1985 and this project will not be started until well into 1985 at best.

So, Mr. Chairman, the overestimation of benefits is tremendous and by itself invalidates the corps' analysis. The underestimation of cost is tremendous and, again, by itself invalidates the corps' analysis. The corps' selection of interest rate is entirely understated.

Any one of those three things by themselves would make this project ineligible to spend public money. It will be wasted spending if we do. There are so many valuable, important water and coastal projects and other public works that we are not going to even be able to fund, that to go ahead with this one makes no sense.

Why would we want to take a project which is a big money loser, and one my State and your State will pay for, to achieve very dubious benefits in the State of North Carolina when this project has been shown to be not only economically unsound but also environmentally unsound. And the caveat that was attached to passage in the Interior and Public Works Committees, that it receive an adequate and a positive cost-benefit calculation, has not yet been fulfilled for the reasons I have outlined.

Therefore this title IV of this otherwise fine bill should not be adopted by this body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Seiberling amendment and I commend the gentleman from Ohio for offering it. I respect the gentleman from North Carolina and the local and commercial interests concerned in this matter, but this is, it seems to me, a national matter, national funds are being requested for it for two 1-mile-long jetties and it seems to me that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY] made some very good comments in regard to its cost.

Congress often fails to invoke, Mr. Chairman, the most cost effective solutions to the problems that we face. Those of us who support the balanced-budget amendment relish the thought that opponents of the amendment would give us another fresh example of why we need it.

Without a constitutional limit on spending, there will simply never be an adequate framework for forcing Congress to set priorities and seek the most cost effective solutions to problems.

Today we are about to vote to authorize spending $600 million for the 50-year life of two jetties to keep this inlet open when existing records demonstrate, I think beyond a doubt, that they could be kept open by proper dredging at a cost of only $3.5 million per year. In other words, four times as much for the jetties, almost, as for dredging.

Unfortunately an issue like this often becomes so emotional that the discussion of the merits becomes irrelevant. Proponents of the project want us to forget that the original justification for building such expensive jetties was discredited and had to be revised by the Army corps. Forget the notion that perhaps Congress ought to look at the most recent Army corps analysis before committing to build the jetties. Forget the policy Congress has embarked on that recognized the continuing lavish Federal subsidies for development of the barrier islands was counterproductive as a way to spend our tax dollars.

Ignore the warnings against building these jetties from coastal scientists at every major university in North America. Ignore the failure of expensive jetties elsewhere to work as they were intended. Forget the merits and ignore the costs because it will come out of someone else's pockets.

Not building these jetties obviously will not balance the Federal budget but deleting the funds for them is one small decision that can and ultimately must be made to bring our Federal budget into balance.

Here is the perfect place to pare Government waste. I urge the Members to support the Seiberling amendment to delete the funds for this project.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Seiberling amendment to H.R. 3082. Title IV as it now stands would commit the Federal Government on a course that in the long run is bound to fail. My overriding concern on this project has been that we are dealing with a coastal area that has the most dynamic ocean movements along the entire east coast. If there are any questions as to whether the jetty project as proposed will solve the Oregon Inlet passage problem, one would do well to look at the past record on the attempts at stabilizing these coastal ocean movements. The fiasco of the jetty project at Ocean City, MD, and the unsuccessful stabilization of the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse are very visible examples of the failures that occur when man attempts to best the natural dynamics of these areas.

Just look at the nature of the inlet itself. It was only reopened by a hurricane in the 1840's and since that time has been steadily moving along with the entire Outer Banks. We can attempt to put jetties up here and try to stop the littoral sand movement but our outer coastal areas are vibrant proof of the scientific principle that for every action there is a reaction. Block the movement at the inlet and you set in motion a reaction at points along the outer coast. We had scientists before the Interior Committee testify that in this case the attempt to alter the littoral sand movement within the inlet will prove disastrous to the sensitive lands of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore and Pea Island Wildlife Refuge.

Other Members will rise and make the case for the Seiberling amendment based on the shortfall in economic benefits. On this alone, Members should be very wary of proceeding with the Oregon Inlet project. I just want the House to know the sheer folly in thinking that you can proceed with this project without adversely affecting other important lands along the Outer Banks.

I urge support for the Seiberling amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to strike title IV from this bill.

There has already been a lot of debate on this issue, and I don't want to unnecessarily prolong it. But there has been an awful lot of rhetoric used in support of this project over the past 2 days, and I would like to respond to some of the claims that have been made.

First of all, we have heard that this project is necessary for the economic development of this part of North Carolina. Has anyone looked at the unemployment figures of North Carolina? At a time when the national unemployment rate was 7.3 percent, and North Carolina's was 6.2 percent, Dare County—listen to this—had an unemployment rate of 3.3 percent. That's right, in June, the most recent period for which the Bureau of Labor Statistics has data, Dare County had 3.3 percent unemployment. How many of my colleagues wish their districts had so little unemployment?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I would be glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, Dare County, which is where this project is located, according to the Coastland Times of September 6, says, "Dare Jobless Rate in July State's Lowest." Dare County had the lowest unemployment rate in the State during July, 2.8 percent.

Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will my friend yield for a moment?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] still has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. CONTE. I know it, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] has taken 1 minute and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. MARTIN] will take 1. I ask for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to yield to my good friend, the next Governor of North Carolina.

Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to point out to the gentleman that the statistic that he is citing for summer months reflects the fact that this is a very prized and important tourism area and, therefore, there are jobs during the summer for employment in the tourism industry. The fishing industry is a prime industry in the winter, when we find fishing fleets that want to come to that area to be able to harvest the fish catch along the Gulf Stream in the winter months.

That is what we are concerned about, because we do not have that kind of year-round employment. I think the gentleman would understand that it is quite a burden on an area to have unemployment very high at one time of the year and to jobs only in summertime.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard that we need to stabilize the channel in order to protect the investment in the local seafood industrial park. But the State of North Carolina, when it applied for the Federal grants to build that industrial park, certified that the seafood park would be built whether the Corps of Engineers project was built or not. Furthermore, the State certified that the industrial park was economically viable and cost justified whether the Oregon Inlet jetties were built or not. It is in the environmental impact statement.

We have heard about the safety hazards associated with the inlet, about the losses of lives and boats. There is no question that this is a dangerous passage. There is a reason that the area off of the Outer Banks is called the graveyard of the Atlantic. The combination of winds, tides, and currents in this area—the same factors that make this a prime fishing ground—also make it risky.

But look at the Coast Guard accident reports for Oregon Inlet. They do not blame the channel. They blame the inexperience of the skipper, the lack of adequate equipment on board the boat, or, in one case, the inebriation of the captain and passengers. Would the jetties have made a difference? They might have—the accident reports do not say and no one knows for sure.

But one thing is sure—jetties themselves are often a navigational and safety hazard. Many boats are lost against jetties every year, largely because of the unexpected eddies and currents that they cause. We may be creating a new hazard in trying to deal with an old one.

We have heard that the Coast Guard needs this project for its search and rescue mission. Now, let's not blame this project on the poor Coast Guard. Of course they often bring assisted vessels in through the southern part of the bay. When a northeaster creates the kind of weather in which rescues are likely to be needed, you want to tow a boat into the wind, not before it. I have been told that the southern entrance to the bay would be used by the Coast Guard no matter what is done at Oregon Inlet.

We have heard that the Coast Guard must get its patrol boats through the channel. Those patrol boats draw 7 feet. An adequately maintained 14-foot channel is more than sufficient to handle Coast Guard patrol boats. If weather conditions are so bad that a 14-foot channel is impassable, those boats are not going to be sent out anyway.

Finally, we have heard that the new cost-benefit analysis shows greater benefits than costs. Well, what did you expect? So did the last one, the one that turned out to be defective and had to be withdrawn. It took the Corps of Engineers 16 months to recook the books, and it still contains wildly optimistic projects of increased fish catches of striped bass, which is already fished to the limit and is under restriction in North Carolina, and Maryland and bluefish, for which there is little or no commercial market. No matter how deep and safe a channel you build, if the fish are not there you cannot catch them. The corps also included in its analysis a basic accounting error, double counting cost savings so that the cost of the project is badly understated.

Mr. Chairman, it is not often that we get to stop a project before it is underway. Scientific opinion is unanimous on the erosion effects of this project. Environmental opinion is unanimous on the damage to the federally protected seashore and wildlife refuge in the area. And taxpayer opinion should be unanimous that this is a useless way to waste nearly $100 million. Let's kill it now.

Mr. Chairman, my good friend from New Jersey, Mr. ROE, chastised us because we do not live in the district where this project is located. He seemed to suggest, therefore, that we should pass everything that any Congressman brings in here, whether it is good or bad, because it is in his own district.

Let me tell you something. I was elected by a half million people in my congressional district, and it is those taxpayers' money we are going to spend on this project. It is the taxpayers' money. I have a perfect right to stand up here and fight on behalf of my constituents against a $100 million boondoggle in North Carolina, New Jersey, California, or any other place. I paid an awful lot of Federal taxes last year. It is my money too, and I do not want my money going down there for this boondoggle. I urge the adoption of the amendment.

I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. I appreciate the gentleman's kindness and his generosity in referring to my name, but I am going to ask for my own 5 minutes on the issue.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCURDY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3082) to promote the conservation of migratory waterfowl and to offset or prevent the serious loss of wetlands by the acquisition of welands and other essential habitat, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

WAIVER OF REQUIREMENT FOR TWO-THIRDS VOTE ON CONSIDERATION OF RULE ON SAME DAY REPORTED

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the requirement for a two-thirds vote on consideration of a rule on the same day that the rule is reported from the Committee on Rules be waived.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY WETLANDS RESOURCES ACT OF 1983

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 579 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3082.

□ 1238

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3082) to promote the conservation of migratory waterfowl and to offset or prevent the serious loss of welands by the acquisition of welands and other essential habitat, and for other purposes, with Mr. MCCURDY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose earlier today pending was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond, in view of the fact that my name was used directly, to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

In the first place, let me suggest this: I think that the gentleman from Massachusetts is one of the finest Members of this House and one of the most responsible people we have in the House. I realize that we are involved emotionally in different matters of state around here and we do get carried away, but let me set the record enormously straight in this House.

I have been here for 15 years, and I agree that every Member has a responsibility to speak pro or con for a point which they believe in. It is nothing personal. But nobody has the right to challenge the motives of any Member of this House whatsoever, and I feel that my motives have been challenged.

We have fought in this House day in and day out, project after project after project. We have analyzed them, not just come to the floor with a speech. We have gone behind hundreds of projects going back to 1916.

We have looked at every one in-depth as to what was important to this House and what was important to this Nation, and what may appear to be important in one State may be something that is politically wise to be against because it may appear to have an umbrella of environmental concern or it may appear along the line that "I can capture a vote because I am opposed to that issue."

But I maintain one thing, that this country is made up of 50 States, and I maintain the point of view that there are 7½ million people in my State. I represent the State of New Jersey, and I also represent the people of this country, 230 million strong, and if I believe something is good for my State, it is my people that will decide whether they return me to office or not, not anybody in this House. And I take umbrage from no one nor do I draw water from anybody on that point.

It happens to be that there is a set of facts before this House, the facts on this issue. It has been distorted, it has been manipulated, and it is other people's opinion, and we cannot quarrel with another person's opinion. But the fact remains that for the safety of the boating people in the State of North Carolina, they genuinely believe it is important to them.

We had an argument on a number of similar items when we were talking about the water resources development bill 4 or 5 weeks ago, and brothers and sisters disagreed in two of those States, and we attempted to bring those brothers and sisters together to determine what was right for them, whether it was New Jersey, Alaska, Massachusetts, or whatever.

As I see this picture, it seems to me that the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina and the representation in toto from North Carolina have spoken favorably for this project, and I do not think there should be blue smoke and glass and all kinds of extraneous material put out, anything to bury the project. They bring in the national debt. If there is going to be a $200 billion national debt, then we should not approve one single project at all now. That is the argument. That does not even make any common sense.

The gentleman has not asked for $300 million or $400 million. He said, "Give me a chance to let this project be reviewed. Let it follow its procedure."

It was approved in 1970. This is not something new around here. He has not asked for $700 million or $800 million. He has asked for one thing. He says, "Give me the right to have this project further reviewed by the Congress of the United States. All I need is the authorization that is needed by law to consider and to anchor this project in those two areas."

That is all that is involved here. It is all cloaked now in the idea that somebody who is opposed to this amendment is somebody who is against wetlands. Balderdash. That is not what the issue is at all. Hours are spent on obscuring what the facts are. All the people in the environmental community are in favor of this? Nonsense. Who can make that statement in this House at all, including myself?

The fact remains that North Carolina needs help. North Carolina has a matter the State is concerned with. North Carolina has not voted on this issue. The House yet has to speak to appropriations. The House has to speak to this item. I suggest in this House that each State ought to have a right of some reliance and some self-respect.

I have worked with 295 Members of this House bipartisanly and individually. Many of them had projects that people disagreed with them, but they were important to their States; therefore, this was important to their country.

I want no one to be in a position to come to the floor of this House and indicate that BOB ROE is a big spender. BOB ROE is here to do what is the right thing as chairman of the committee that I was elected to chair, and my job is to bring the facts, as I see them, as God gave me the right to see them, before this committee. But I would be abrogating my responsibility as a Member of this House to stand back and allow nothing but blue smoke and glass and clouds to go over what the facts are, and I think when you are dealing with something in the House, you should deal with the facts, and the House will vote its will.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] has expired.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] be allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to H.R. 3082 being offered by the gentleman from Ohio which deletes title IV of the act, the jetties project at Oregon Inlet.

Oregon Inlet is the only navigable inlet through the Outer Banks from Norfolk, VA, to the north to Ocracoke Inlet to the south, a distance of 160 miles. It is the only safe harbor for shipping and recreational boating interests along that portion of the North Carolina coastline.

Oregon Inlet continuously experiences shoaling that renders it impassable—a major problem considering the inlet's status as a safe harbor. In the past, the Corps of Engineers has conducted intensive dredging activities to maintain the navigability of the inlet. Without the project continued maintenance dredging is estimated to cost $4.5 million a year—year after year. However, these efforts are only stopgap and solve none of the long-term needs of the area.

Title IV of the Oregon Inlet project was originally authorized in the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1970. The Corps of Engineers has just completed an updated economic analysis of the project. That study indicates a 1.4 positive benefit-to-cost ratio and does so without considering the unquantifiable benefits arising from savings in human life as a result of the construction of this project. Were the corps able to quantify those benefits and include them in the economic analysis, the already clear mandate for construction would become even more apparent.

Construction of the Oregon Inlet project is the most practical and economic way to ensure safe year-round navigation through the area, especially during the stormy winter months at the height of the fishing season. Construction will prevent groundings in the inlet and thereby save lives. The existing unsafe conditions in the inlet were in part responsible for the deaths of eight people since 1970—the year in which this project was first authorized by Congress. While differences may exist as to whether existing conditions were a primary cause or a secondary cause of the accidents—none dispute that those conditions were a contributing factor. It is time to recognize these facts and move ahead with the project.

We know that the Oregon Inlet project has a significant positive benefit-to-cost ratio. We know that construction will save lives and allow the Coast Guard free access through the inlet. We know that continued maintenance dredging is an expensive, nonproductive waste of the taxpayers' dollars—somewhat akin to dropping money into a bottomless pit. I urge my colleagues to reject that bottomless pit.

This project has been examined in detail before. A second study has recently been completed which demonstrates the correctness of our 1970 project authorization. I urge you to accept those findings. Efforts were mounted during committee consideration to delete title IV from H.R. 3082. Those efforts were soundly rejected. I urge my colleagues to take that same action today and reject the Seiberling amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING], and I would like to bring in or interject some things that I think the committee and the Members of this body ought to think about.

One of the concerns about this project is the damage that can be done to Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and Cape Hatteras National Seashore. The project requires about 150 acres of those two federally protected areas. I would just like to point out to the members of the committee that along the Atlantic coast there are 447,000 acres in 40 national wildlife refuges and 325,000 acres in 13 national parks. That is along the Atlantic coast. This is a total of 772,000 acres of federally dedicated land.

Oregon Inlet involves only 150 acres, which represents only two-hundredths of 1 percent of this acreage. I guess I would feel that if this was the only habitat and the only scenic area, we ought to preserve it. But we have got 772,000 acres, and I think we can spare the 150 acres.

Beyond this, the Atlantic States have numerous State refuges and parks along the coast, none of which are reflected in the above figures.

I would also like to point out for those environmentalists who are concerned about the project that as a part of this jetty project, there will be 125 acres of oyster beds created and maintained, and, in addition, the dredged material disposal areas will be managed to enhance them for waterfowl habitat.

This is a good project. It is a project that ought to go forward. As the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE], said, this is not a request here for money; it is a request for the opportunity to seek money to complete the project.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to defeat the amendment, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to cover all these facts we have been hearing now for 2 days. I just want to point out that I am familiar with this project. I have been there. I have seen it. I have been there several times. I think the project is needed.

The Corps of Engineers has come up with a benefit-cost ratio of 1.4 to 1. The Corps of Engineers points out that it is costing over $5 million a year to maintain this project and the maintenance is not satisfactory. There is a rich seafood industry in the area that is imperiled as a result of the dangerous conditions that exist in the inlet.

So I feel that it would be a mistake to accept this amendment. This project really should be built. These two jetties are needed. Actually it is costing over $5 million a year to maintain it, and once the two jetties are put in, it will cost about $4.5 million a year. So it is going to save money, and it is going to preserve the fishing industry in this area which is so vital and so critical to this part of the State of North Carolina.

The Corps of Engineers has supported this project from the beginning. The North Carolina delegation has given it 100-percent support. I just do not believe those people are trying to build a boondoggle down there in their State. I believe the Corps of Engineers, which has been doing this type of work and determining these cost-benefit ratios for many years, has a pretty good record.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment ought to be defeated, and I urge the Members to defeat the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me say that what we are voting on here, to delete title IV, contains no authorization or no appropriation. It is merely another step in the study of the need for the dredges.

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. He has ably enumerated the concerns many of us share over the proposed construction of 2-mile-long jetties at Oregon Inlet in North Carolina, including:

The environmental consequences of building the jetties;

The cost of building the jetties and running the sand-bypassing operation when compared to the simple alternative of dredging; and Questions surrounding the accuracy of the new Army Corps of Engineers Economic Analysis Report.

I would like to respond to an argument frequently offered by those in favor of jetty construction, an argument concerning the unsafe conditions of the inlet and the tragic loss of life which has occurred there since the project was authorized in 1969. Clearly the most emotional and perhaps the most compelling argument is the fact that the lives of eight fishermen have been lost in the Oregon Inlet area over this 15-year span; lives, the proponents claim, that would have been saved had the jetties already been in place.

I will be the first to admit that eight lives lost are eight lives too many and if jetties will prevent such future losses, then by all means we should give them serious consideration.

But let us get beyond the thin veneer of statistics—let us get to the heart of the matter. What, in fact, were the causes of the accidents that claimed the lives so frequently alluded to?

A recent investigation into the Coast Guard records turned up some revealing facts.

Of the four accidents which, in total, covered the eight lives in question, three were caused primarily, or exclusively, by human error and/or miscalculation. The Coast Guard concluded that, for the fourth accident, there was insufficient data to determine a cause.

I repeat, three out of the four accidents resulted from human error. To be specific:

The 1971 wreck of the Lane which claimed three lives was determined by the Coast Guard to have been caused by (and I quote) "error in judgment on the part of the Lane's unlicensed master in attempting to navigate a dark unfamiliar channel with an inoperative spotlight."

The 1978 grounding of the Barbara Joan which claimed one life was determined by the Coast Guard to have caused by (and I quote) "the operator being intoxicated * * * unfamiliar with the waters * * * and not adequately experienced in operating the vessel."

The 1981 accident involving the Oregon Inlet Queen which claimed one life was deemed by the Coast Guard to have been caused by (and I quote) "the decision of the master * * * to continue into the inlet in the face of rough seas * * * Contributing causes were his failure to anticipate possible adverse sea conditions * * * and his inattention to the position and action of his passengers and crew."

After reading these accounts, I asked myself an important question, which I hope all of you will too: Would the jetties have prevented these accidents from occurring?

Perhaps, but I think not. Human error is that bugaboo, that wild card if you will, that we find responsible for so many accidents—not just at sea, but on our highways, in the sky overhead, and even in our homes.

It is therefore presumptuous at best, and deliberately misleading at worst, for the corps to predict that 27 lives and 27 vessels will be lost over the next 50 years should the project not be built. This manipulation of the facts in order to evoke an emotional outcry obscures the real issues facing the Congress. Furthermore, the corps does not address the likelihood that additional accidents will occur as a result of increased boat traffic through Oregon Inlet if the jetties are built. An accurate and informed view of the safety situation at the inlet is necessary for all of us as we consider title IV of the wetlands bill today. I believe that the information I have just presented suggests that there is no evidence to indicate that jetty construction will save many lives at Oregon Inlet. I urge my colleagues to support the Seiberling amendment and delete the jetty project from H.R. 3082.●

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3082, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. MURTHA]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5585, RAILROAD SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1984

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 562 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 562

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5585) to authorize appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and each section shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes, for the purposes of debate only, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 562 is the rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 5585, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1984. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee of Energy and Commerce.

The rule also waives points of order under section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act against consideration of the bill. Section 402(a) requires authorizations to be reported by May 15 prior to the beginning of the fiscal year. The Committee on Energy and Commerce voted to report this bill on May 15, 1984, but delayed filing the report until May 21 in order to provide 3 days for submitting of minority views on this legislation. Since the bill authorizes the enactment of new budget authority for fiscal year 1985 a section 402(a) waiver is necessary.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 562 makes in order the Energy and Commerce Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute to be considered as original text, with each section to be considered as read. Finally, the rule provides one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 5585, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1984, is to reauthorize and improve the safety programs of the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA]. The bill authorizes funds for the Federal Railroad Administration safety programs, reimburses funds to States that participate in rail safety programs, and also provides funds for research and development of rail safety. The total amount of the authorization for fiscal year 1985 is $55.3 million and $57.7 million for fiscal year 1986.

H.R. 5585 directs the Transportation Department to encourage the formation of a private nonprofit corporation, supported by railroad employees and companies, which would help employees with alcohol and drug problems. The measure authorizes the Transportation Department to provide up to $100,000 in financial and inkind assistance if such an organization is established within 90 days of enactment.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5585 also provides additional protections for employees who experience discrimination as a result of reporting safety violations or refusing to work under conditions presenting imminent danger of death or serious injury. The bill would allow for an arbitration board to award such an employee an appropriate compensation of up to 1 year's pay. This would ensure safe railroad operations and also protect employees who seek to further safety.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5585 would guarantee the continuation of these programs that promote safe rail operations and protection for railroad employees. I urge support of House Resolution 562 so that we may proceed to the consideration of this important legislation.

□ 1340

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule that should be adopted.

The bill's importance has been underscored because of the serious rail accidents within the past few months. H.R. 5585 reauthorizes the safety programs of the Federal Railroad Administration for fiscal year 1985 and fiscal year 1986 and contains changes to existing law to help to eliminate drug and alcohol abuse which afflicts rail traffic. The bill also seeks to encourage railroad workers to report safety problems by increasing protections and rights, although Members should be aware there is controversy regarding this section.

The bill's authorization level for general railroad safety programs, research and development and reimbursements to the States is $55.3 million for fiscal year 1985 and $57.7 million for fiscal year 1986. This is considerably more than the administration's budget request of $42.4 million for fiscal year 1985.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 389, nays 2, not voting 41, as follows:

"On page 11, strike out line 1 and all that follows through line 3 on page 26."

Debate on the joint resolution and on the amendment shall continue not to exceed one and one-half hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and on the amendment to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes, for purposes of debate only, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 586 is a rule providing for the consideration in the House of House Joint Resolution 648, the continuing resolution for fiscal year 1985. The rule provides 1½ hours of debate, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. The rule waives section 303(a) of the Budget Act against consideration of the joint resolution. Section 303(a) prohibits the consideration of legislation providing new budget authority, changes in revenue, increases in the debt limit or new entitlement authority prior to the adoption of the first budget resolution for a fiscal year. The continuing resolution, of course, contains new budget authority for fiscal year 1985; and, as we all know, no budget resolution has yet been adopted for fiscal year 1985. We are on the verge of the start of the new fiscal year. We must adopt a continuing resolution and we must waive section 303(a) in order to consider the continuing resolution.

The rule further provides that an amendment printed in the rule shall be considered as pending. That amendment is not subject to a demand for a division of the question. The previous motion is considered as ordered on the amendment and on the joint resolution. Finally the rule provides for one motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, let me explain what the amendment which is printed in the rule does. On September 14, 1984, last Friday, Chairman WHITTEN presented the Committee on Appropriations with a continuing resolution which simply provided for continued appropriations for programs which are currently funded, but for which appropriations have not yet been enacted because 9 of the 14 regular appropriation bills are stalled in various stages of the legislative process. The Committee on Appropriations ordered that joint resolution reported with a number of amendments, most of which contained legislative provisions or appropriations for activities not currently funded.

Yesterday, on September 19, the Rules Committee heard lengthy testimony from members who wished to add additional amendments. Several Members requested that the rule make in order amendments which would have added entire major authorization bills to the continuing resolution.

Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee feels very strongly that it is inappropriate to load up a continuing resolution with all sorts of new appropriations and legislative provisions. We certainly sympathize with those Members who have meritorious projects in their districts that have not received funding. We certainly sympathize with authorizing committees which have worked for years on a major authorizing bill. Have managed to push a good bill through the House and then watch as the other body refuses to act on their legislation. However, we cannot continue to operate around here in a manner which ignores the normal legislative process—in which all of our real work is done on appropriation bills and, in particular, on the continuing resolution. It is not fair to the authorizing committees which see their work go down the drain as all attention is focused on the appropriation bills. It is not fair to the Appropriations Committee which is forced to pick up all of the loose ends. And it is not fair to the majority of Members who are not in a position to have their interests protected in the continuing resolution. But most of all, it is damaging to the integrity of the legislative process.

The Rules Committee believes it is time to put a stop to this drift toward Government by continuing resolution. We should simply refuse to include everything in a continuing resolution. If we take a stand here, we may be able to begin to return to an orderly legislative process.

As a result of these beliefs, the Rules Committee has fashioned a rule which does not make in order any of the additional amendments which were requested at yesterday's hearing. In addition we have provided for consideration of an amendment which should simply strike all of the extraneous matters which were added in the Appropriations Committee markup. Adoption of the amendment would essentially return the continuing resolution to the form originally drafted by Chairman WHITTEN. In which it simply provides for continuing appropriations for currently funded programs.

Mr. Speaker, let me take just a moment more to make sure that every Member understands that the parliamentary situation will be if the House adopts this rule. Upon adoption of this rule the speaker may recognize the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee to call up the continuing resolution for consideration in the House. The amendment I have described above will be considered as pending. No other amendments will be in order. At the conclusion of 1½ hours of debate on the amendment and the joint resolution there will be a vote first on the pending amendment and then a vote on the joint resolution itself.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that the rule itself does not at all alter the continuing resolution. It provides for consideration of the continuing resolution as reported by the Appropriations Committee. It simply gives the House an opportunity to vote on the amendment which would strip the continuing resolution of all extraneous provisions. It presents the House with a decision: Does this body want to continue the trend toward Government by continuing resolution or do we, as Members of this body, want to be responsible to those constituents who sent us here.

I urge adoption of this rule.

□ 1410

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as muct time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, the rule has been explained, and I know that all the Members listening understand, as I do, that a turkey is a turkey is a turkey. This rule should never have come up on the floor of this House.

The Rules Committee, of which I have been a member since 1965, has never tried before to tell the Appropriations Committee what to do and how to appropriate on the floor of the House. The Rules Committee has the power to do anything that it would like to do if a majority of the House concurs, but I think in this instance the Rules Committee is wrong in trying to impose its will. Rules Committee members are not on the Appropriations Committee and are not as familiar with the appropriations process as the members of the Appropriations Committee.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee came before the Rules Committee yesterday, and requested a rule on the continuing resolution. Some 17 other members came before the Rules Committee on that day, and requested particular provisions in a rule. The Rules Committee decided to bring a rule before this House, imposing its will against the will of the Appropriations Committee, and it is wrong. A turkey is a turkey is a turkey and this rule is a turkey.

I am opposed to this rule, and I urge that this role be defeated. It contains an amendment, if the rule is adopted, to knock out every project added by the Appropriations Committee, more than 50 water projects and other projects listed in the bill. I feel that such a rule, such a cutthroat operation should never be allowed to happen to such a fine chairman and ranking member of that committee.

Mr. Speaker, I urge this membership to defeat the rule so that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee can come back to the Rules Committee and the Rules Committee can offer a fair rule, not imposing the will of the Rules Committee against this great committee of this House. Let us just remember that the other committees of the House could be victims of the same cutthroat operation that the Appropriations Committee is suffering. So I would urge the defeat of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I have other requests for time, and I would hope that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] would yield other time at this point.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish the entire membership were all here on the House floor. I have listened to our friend, the gentleman from South Carolina. The rule that we have here would not correct the situation the gentlemen wishes to correct.

The Rules Committee seeks to correct a situation which is caused by the inaction on the part of the other body. If you adopt this rule, you could send us to conference with the Senate with no protection for the House. On the last 3 bills, the Senate has added 254 amendments to House bills in 1983, 132 amendments in 1982, and 432 amendments in 1981. You send us over there in a position where we cannot protect the hundreds of Members that we would like to protect against Senate action in this bill. You would strike out matters of importance to House Members, but you keep the $1.8 billion that we increased foreign aid.

I do not know how you can vote to strike $138 million for Members of the House and keep an increase of $1.8 billion for foreign aid. We would have to go to conference and not be able to protect the House Members at all.

May I say again that we have tried our best. We have not sought this job, but in the process, knowing that the other body does not seem to abide by any germaneness rule, they are waiting now for you to send this bill over to them again. If you adopt this rule, you are fixing it where we will be going over there and passing on how much of their stuff they can keep. Nothing of yours will be there.

I cannot understand it. I can understand the Rules Committee being upset and I can understand the legislative committees being upset, but you should not be upset at us for trying to protect the interests of the House.

I hope you will vote this rule down, and I hope that the chairman of the Rules Committee, and the Rules Committee, will realize that we are trying to do the best we can to protect the membership of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. When you strike out $138 million only for the protection of our own country but insist that we cannot touch the $1.8 billion in foreign aid, I do not see how you can live with that.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman suggesting to me that we have cut literally millions and millions of dollars out of critical public works projects and put a lot of money in for foreign aid? That is hard for me to believe, I say to the committee chairman.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman is correct. The amount that the Appropriations Committee voted for includes the higher foreign aid amount. I am not complaining that the committee adopted that, but that the Rules Committee has carefully protected that and would allow the $138 million for vital public works to be stricken.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, may I say this?

Mr. WHITTEN. Let me proceed.

Mr. LEWIS of California. They cut critical public works projects but left the foreign aid in? Is that what the gentleman said?

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman is correct. That could be the effect if the rule is adopted.

May I say again— and I hope I may have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina and the chairman of the Rules Committee—that we have worked together for a long time. May I repeat that what you complain about is us turning everything over to the Senate, and what you do, if you adopt this rule, is turn it over to our colleagues in the Senate. I'm sure they are ready to add many, many amendments again. In conference, we will be permitted only to decide whether to give them 50 percent or some other percent of what they want, but we will not be able to help House Members.

Now, for those with the 100 projects in here which look after our own country, despite the fact that the Senate will not pass authorizations bills, you will have to explain why you wanted to carry on foreign aid and were unwilling to look after our country.

May I say that we do not have the gold and silver to back our money. We have our own country. We have not had an authorization bill for water projects in about a dozen years to look at. I am saying to my friend, the gentleman from South Carolina, that this with only aggravate a bad situation, and it is fully as bad as I think it is.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I point out to the gentleman, as the gentleman well knows, that the first concurrent resolution that went over to the Senate last year was clean and there was no extraneous matter put in it. So how does the gentleman explain that?

Mr. WHITTEN. Well, that is a little different because when it went over there it was for only a 46-day duration.

Mr. DERRICK. That is what we are trying to do again.

Mr. WHITTEN. No. When it came back, it had several Senate amendments in it.

□ 1420

Mr. DERRICK. There was no extraneous material.

There were 26 amendments in it, but it applied only to the matters within this. There was no extraneous matter in it.

Mr. WHITTEN. Let me say this. The only way we could protect ourselves from the Senate taking over was to have a second bill, and I could have a second bill here that if they amend it, we would be forced to do it again.

The gentleman is taking it out on the Appropriations Committee, where we feel just as strongly as the gentleman does, but in the meantime, we want to get a rule that lets us carry this through.

Mr. DERRICK. Well, with all respect to the gentleman's back pocket, and I know it is a large one and it has helped many people, the fact of the matter is that we did have a clean resolution on the first resolution last year and the fact that the Senate is going to do all this and that, there is a precedent that they will not do it.

Mr. WHITTEN. All I can tell the gentleman is that the other body has done it year after year. I repeat again they added 254 amendments in 1983, 132 in 1982, and 432 in 1981. If we are sent over there and if we adopt this rule where we cannot protect our colleagues, I think it is a mistake to vote for it and I hope you will vote against the rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in support of this rule. This is one time when the Rules Committee members labored really for 2 days to try to figure out what was the best thing to do and the most responsible thing to do on this rule and the continuing resolution. We had 20 witnesses that came before the Rules Committee yesterday asking for their amendment to be made in order to add something or to put the authorization committee level in instead of the appropriations level and to be able to reduce the amount of the continuing appropriation in such areas as foreign aid or in health and human services.

We had at least 10 requests, and we are talking about the continuing resolution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, are we going to go ahead and abolish the Budget Committee, abolish the authorization committees, and even abolish the Subcommittees on Appropriations?

We are beginning to write the whole process into the continuing resolution. I do not blame the Appropriations Committee. I mean, we contribute to their problem by not being able to complete this whole process. But do we want to do it all in the continuing resolution?

There is an orderly process to do these things. Everybody's turf is being stepped on.

We need a straight traditional clean continuing resolution and that is what we have in this rule. The Rules Committee voted 11 to 1 after 2 days of negotiations and good-faith effort to bring a process to the House that was responsible and would get the job done.

Now, think this process through. We are saying, look, if we do not put our goodies in there, it is going to go to the other body and they are going to do it over there. Well, now if the other body wants to do that and be irresponsible, then that is their problem over there, but we should not do that. If we go through the normal process, if we add our goodies on and they put theirs on, we go to a conference and at 2 o'clock in the morning somewhere over here in the Capitol when 400 of us are somewhere else in this country, a decision is made. We have a lot of extraneous things in here, appropriations that were not even authorized. It could very well go to the President and be vetoed.

Where are we going to be 1 week or 10 days from now? Right back were we are now.

We have the opportunity to pass a clean continuing resolution.

I remind you that a couple years ago, the House acted responsibly. We passed a clean straight continuing resolution. It went to the Senate. They came up with one. We got it through and we went merrily on our way.

Now, we had a number of projects in here. Some Members say, "Well, look, I've got a project in this bill that came out of the Appropriations Committee. I worked on it 2 or 3 years."

Yes, there were 43 or 53 projects in an appropiations bill, but what about the 360 Members whose projects or their interests are not in there?

But regardless of our special parochial interests, what I am arguing is, let us do the right thing here.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I will be glad to yield to the chairman in just 1 minute.

We have an opportunity to vote on it. This is the rule. We are not voting on a motion to strike these extraneous matters now. We are just voting on a rule which sets up a process to have an automatic vote then on striking out the extraneous material.

I would urge my colleagues to vote for this rule.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I would be glad to yield to the chairman, surely.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the circumstances concerning the project in which the gentleman is very interested. May I say to the gentleman, I wrote a letter, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, to the Rules Committee regarding the continuing resolution suggesting that in those places where there was an oversight, or where something was deemed essential, that the Rules Committee might wish to make provision for it.

We have the same problem with the other body as the gentleman does, but allowing this continuing resolution to be stripped down will just aggravate the situation instead of correcting it.

Mr. LOTT. My point is that it is not a matter of a project in Mississippi or a project in Texas or a project in California. What is at stake here is the continuing resolution. We have an opportunity to pass a traditional clean CR. If we defeat this rule, the alternative is going to be that we will go back up to the Rules Committee and the Rules Committee is going to make everything but the kitchen sink in order and this whole process is going to sink slowly off into the sunset.

I understand we have an agreement on the defense authorization bill which will move the defense authorization and the defense appropriations and the budget; if we do that and pass the debt ceiling bill and a clean CR, we can complete our work early week after next and get out of here.

If we go through this traditional process of upping the ante on the continuing resolution, we are going to be in a mess and we are going to wind up without all these extra projects that we are trying to get and in the process losing a lot of other good projects.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the gentleman from Mississippi. It is true that there was one member on the Rules Committee who voted against that rule and that one member was JIM QUILLEN, and I am proud of it.

I am surprised that the Rules Committee took 2 days to hatch this turkey we have here today, when a turkey like this is not worth 2 minutes. This is a deliberate action to absolutely muzzle the House Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I urge defeat of the rule, because it provides an amendment with an automatic vote to strike these projects.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, before I yield, may I respond to what the gentleman said.

The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Tennessee was the only member of the Rules Committee that voted against this. The gentleman made a very eloquent plea for his project and I understand his needs. He certainly had my sympathy, but there were other members in the Rules Committee that also had projects and most of us felt that the integrity of the system, the integrity of the Government and the running of this House took a far higher priority than one individual project back home.

Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL].

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, we are in a rather unusual situation here. The appropriations for water resource projects are included in the continuing resolution in the same form they passed the House in October 1983.

Now, we have water resource projects all over this Nation that have been waiting up to 14 years to be authorized so that they can be built and this includes our inland waterways and our locks and dams that are crumbling. I have seen most of the major water resource projects in the Nation and just a few days ago, visited locks 7 and 8 in West Virginia and Pennsylvania in addition, the Gallipolis lock and dam has to be replaced. Those locks are crumbling and some of the cities in those areas are depending on those projects for water supply.

We are courting disaster here in talking about rules. Now, we have been talking about those projects for 14 years. We have not had a new start authorized in 14 years. What we are doing is using an extraordinary procedure, yes, to reestablish and get into conference the bill that this House had passed on October 6 last year. The bill has been in the other body waiting for authorization at our request because Chairman HOWARD, and Chairman ROE, and the Public Works Authorization Committee worked like trojans for many months putting that bill together and the other body has not passed it.

So this is the only way these projects can be built. It is an urgent situation. If you vote for this rule, you are voting for $1.8 billion in foreign aid to build projects in other countries.

We want a "no" vote, a "no" vote on this rule, so that we can get a rule that we can live with and take care of these emergencies that exist throughout our country.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEVILL. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks.

I cannot even remember a time when I voted against a rule and it is a little provincial, but the gentleman from Ohio, LOU STOKES, and I, the gentleman from Cleveland along with myself and other Members from Ohio, for 8 straight years have testified about something that is vital to the economy of our State, in general the area of northeast Ohio.

□ 1430

I cannot tell you how many times we have gone through this committee, that committee, and so on and finally we thought that there was hope at the end of that rainbow. Now we are seeing that unless we do something that is somewhat unique, all that work will go for naught and we will have to start all over again.

So I reluctantly oppose the rule because I have the greatest respect for the Rules Committee and the process, but there is no avenue to go by and so I want to thank the gentleman for his hard work and support and associate myself with his remarks.

Mr. BEVILL. The gentlewoman is absolutely correct. You have an emergency situation there in Cleveland. We have appropriated money but it is subject to authorization.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEVILL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Rules Committee would not permit the Committee on Public Works and Transportation to add a bill that already passed the House by a 10-to-1 majority, a 10-to-1 majority. What I am afraid of is that we are setting ourselves up here so that about a week after next, at the last minute, we will be faced with voting yes or no on $299 billion for the military and $18 billion in foreign aid. We will have the choice between that or taking everything the other body wants to add. We will be in an untenable position under this rule.

Mr. BEVILL. The gentleman is correct.

Mrs. BURTON of California. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEVILL. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. BURTON of California. What about the breakwater in San Francisco?

Mr. BEVILL. This is one of the many projects which we consider to be urgent.

Mrs. BURTON of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEVILL. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I urge a no vote. I appreciate what you are doing. In my hometown of Ada, OK, and the five counties around it, we have ground water that has been contaminated and people have to carry water in fire trucks.

Also, my hometown does not even have water rights. We do not even have the water, and if we do not get this, this is the last train for us to have any hope.

Mr. BEVILL. So if you vote aye for this rule you are voting to delay the construction of the Gallipolis lock and dam on the Ohio River, one of the busiest rivers in this country, one that is deteriorating and getting into a dangerous stage. You are voting to stop the second lock on lock and dam 26 in Chicago, and that is very critical.

Mr. DERRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEVILL. Yes, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DERRICK. If I might point out to the gentleman, he says if you vote on the rule you are voting to take these projects out. That is not the case. All you are doing is voting for the resolution that will come forward that will give the House that opportunity and time to vote on whether they want the projects or not.

Mr. BEVILL. I understand, and my position is to vote against the rule.

So we need a no vote on this, and let us get these urgent projects built that have to be built.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I reluctantly rise in opposition to this rule. As the gentleman from Ohio said, I do not often vote against the rule if it is a sound rule, and would not vote against this one if it were a sound rule.

We in the Appropriations Committee on the last several years have had some differences with the Rules Committee, but on this one it is major differences. On previous occasions we have not always agreed with the rule, but we have been able to support the rule. However, in this case this is one we just simply cannot support.

It is true, if I were charged with the sole responsibility of writing a continuing resolution, it would not be exactly like this. But no one of us would write exactly the same bill.

But this is a bill that I support, did support, and will support if given the opportunity.

As the chairman of our Energy and Water Development Subcommittee has said, there are some projects in there that were placed in from that committee that are very high in priority and have passed this House overwhelmingly, but have been waiting for years for something to be done. We have been unable to do it. The chairman identified several, Gallipolis in West Virginia and Ohio which was just one example where the backup of barges going through, carrying commodities you and I expect, the products that we build in this country for export, where it is costing more money, and taking away the competitive position that we could be in because it cost so much to go through that long delay in going through there.

Also lock and dam 26 at Alton, IL, between Missouri and Illinois. There are many others. We are deepening several of the harbors to 55 feet where we can be more competitive in exporting our grain, more competitive in exporting our coal. This cannot be accomplished because of a stalmate here.

The items that we have put in this continuing resolution are very high priority items. Yes, I would say to the gentleman from South Carolina, we have not always gone with the continuing resolution add items, but I do not think in recent years we have had a continuing resolution that did not have some items that were not authorized. And as the chairman of the committee has said, they always come back from the other body.

Mr. DERRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DERRICK. The first continuing resolution from last year falls into that category.

Mr. WHITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. WHITTEN. I checked into that a while ago and, as a matter of fact, that first continuing resolution covered a period of only 46 days, that is what the gentleman refers to. It was not for the rest of the year.

Mr. MYERS. That was for a short time, and there have been commitments made both by our committee and the other body as to when we are bringing other bills up. They are not authorized through our body, yet we do not feel comfortable in putting them in the regular bill. We will consider them in the continuing resolution.

These are very high priority items.

One last thing.

Mr. DERRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS. I am sorry. I do not have the time. If the gentleman will yield me 1 more minute I will be glad to yield.

As far as the President's balanced budget, I am for that, too. I think all of us are, most every one of us. But the President has the last say about which one of these projects will actually go into construction and how soon.

Several of these are high on his priority list. We are merely providing the vehicle so that the President can do it. He will have the last say-so with this CR. He is the one and only one who will decide whether this one will be constructed this year or wait until next year, or wait until some subsequent year to be built. These are very high priority items.

But I urge you to vote no on this rule so that we can move ahead with progress for our country.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule. This has been a most interesting debate.

As you can imagine, we agonized over this rule in the committee. As the gentleman from South Carolina has pointed out, each and every one of us on the Rules Committee, the 11 of us who voted for this rule, have projects in this bill that if the rule is passed, and the bill passed the way we prefer it, will not become law, but which we thought that it was in the best interests of the process of this House to do what we have done.

If I could, I would just like to address my colleagues to my right, on the Democratic side of the aisle. The short-term politics tells you to vote against this rule. Ms. OAKAR has a project; the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] talked about his project. Everybody has a little something in there. But let me, if I could, try to put some perspective on the long-term politics.

The people in the White House are sitting there hoping and praying with all of their might that we just load this thing down. They could not be more pleased than if we report a Christmas tree out of here, a turkey with all of the dressings, if I might, because what is going to happen is that the President is going to get this bill and he is going to begin his campaign against Congress with this piece of legislation.

If you think the short-term politics of a project is more important than dealing with that larger issue this fall, I suspect you might want to vote against the rule. But if you think that dealing with the question of a balanced budget is important, and I talk now to my colleagues on the left side of the aisle here, you might consider holding the line. You might back your rhetoric up by voting on this rule and on the CR, clean, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] has advocated.

I can envision us playing the game of chicken, going past the beginning of the fiscal year, finding ourselves in a situation in which we have no continuing resolution. I can see politics being played all over the papers of this country and all over the networks, and the Congress will be blamed again for its inability to act.

So I beg you to consider the long-term interests of our party. Consider the long-term interests of a balanced budget.

□ 1440

And I beg my colleagues on this side of the aisle to back up your rhetoric on a balanced budget by voting a clean bill.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I think this is an extraordinarily good continuing resolution. It comes as close to being a clean document as we have ever had at least in my career, from the Appropriations Committee.

I further think it is a surprisingly good rule because the Rules Committee tampered with it hardly at all, except to provide us the opportunity to remove some sections that normally should not be in appropriations bills.

The Rules Committee resisted some very tempting amendments.

As I listened to the Rules Committee hearing, the committee was given the option of putting a whole foreign aid bill on to this resolution, also a whole public works bill, and also the whole armed services authorization. It eschewed those opportunities, as it should have.

But what is wrong with this rule is that all we have talked about today are people's public works projects. Nobody has talked about spending at all. What we really ought to be talking about is the total amount of money that we are about to appropriate for the whole of fiscal year 1985.

We are talking about 9 of our 13 appropriations bills, more than half of all the money we appropriate, all rolled up into one lump. This rule does not give us the opportunity to reduce it by 10 cents.

The people of America are talking to us, saying, "Why don't you reduce your spending?" Here we are being given a bill that has all the spending we do, and we are not to be given an opportunity to cut a single dime out.

So, while I think it is a good rule and a good continuing resolution from the Committee on Appropriations, I am keenly disappointed that no one, other than myself, has raised a question or an eyebrow about the spending increases.

I give no one any advice on how to vote on the rule, but I can say for my part I am immensely disappointed that we have no opportunities for spending reductions, and, for that reason, I shall vote "no" on the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I support the rule. The Committee on Rules is to be complimented for the responsible manner in which they handled this very difficult situation.

Mr. Speaker, we have 11 days left until the start of the new fiscal year. We have nine of the regular appropriations bills not yet enacted. We must start now toward a continuing resolution that will be signed into law.

When our committee met last Friday we had before us a clean resolution, one that could have been brought promptly to the House floor.

When we left that full committee we had adopted 10 amendments and we had a big mess on our hands. We brought that mess to the Committee on Rules and said, "Bail us out."

The Rules Committee spent all day yesterday listening to Members who opposed the committee-reported resolution.

The Committee on Rules decided to recommend to the House that we go back with a clean resolution. I agree with that recommendation. The resolution reported by the Committee on Appropriations was clearly veto-bait, believe me. It was strongly opposed by this administration. It would not have been signed into law.

The administration supports this rule.

Mr. Stockman called today and said he supports this rule.

If the amendment carries, then the administration will support passage of the continuing resolution as amended.

If the rule is defeated or if the amendment is defeated, then those of you who have made plans for the week of October 1, forget about it. Look forward to another week or two right here in this Chamber.

My good friend from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] keeps calling this a turkey. Well, let me tell you something: If you do not pass this turkey, you are going to have the biggest pigpen that you have ever seen in your life.

You have seen it here today; they are all down here, saying, "Don't pass this rule; I got to have my project."

And then it gets over to the statesmanlike body over there, can you imagine what they are going to do?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman [Mr. CONTE] should not refer to the other body in a derogatory sense in any manner.

Mr. CONTE. That other House where the gentlemen of stature live.

Now the resolution as reported contains two separate public works bills. The so-called new-starts bill which passed the House last year and another package of public works projects that were added by that committee, by our committee.

Altogether, and listen to this, altogether we added 57 new starts, of which 25 are not authorized. We offended the Committee on Public Works, and I do not blame them; we offended that President, and he is exactly right; but most of all, we offended the millions of Americans who have clearly stated that their No. 1 concern is the deficit that faces us in this fiscal year and in the future.

Is this our response by voting down this rule? Is this the best that we can do? If so, then we should stay here, because we certainly will not want to explain this vote back home to our people.

I urge my colleagues, let us get back on the track toward a continuing resolution that will be signed by the President and guarantee us all an early adjournment.

Remember, there are no rollcalls Monday, we have Rosh Hashanah on Thursday, that means we will not have anything on Friday. So when are we going to meet with the other body?

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make just a couple of points in opposition to this rule. First, you would think from some of the debate that the Committee on Appropriations was asking for some extraordinary privilege from the Committee on Rules in bringing forth a continuing resolution with a modest amount of authorizing language. That is not true.

Our rules contemplate the kind of situation we are facing and they specifically authorize the continuing resolution to have authorizing language without a waiver from the Committee on Rules.

So what the Appropriations Committee has done is not something extraordinary but something that our rules specifically contemplate.

While there may have been occasions in the past where very short-run continuing resolutions have not had such authorizations, we should understand this is a continuing resolution which contemplates what I hope will be the case, that we will not have a lameduck session after the election, and that, therefore, this is going to be our last chance until a new Congress comes and organizes itself next January.

So this is really our last opportunity to deal with these issues for many months.

Finally, I simply would like to make a point that it is not just public works that are at stake here.

The Federal crime insurance program expires September 30 of this year. This program is vitally important to a lot of small businessmen in marginal neighborhoods. It is literally a little-businessman's program and small-householders' program.

The limits are $15,000 for businesses, $10,000 for households.

This program is one thing that has done a great deal to stabilize neighborhoods.

If you have a little businessman unable to get crime insurance in marginal neighborhoods, you are going to see abandonments, rapidly, because they cannot afford to stay there once they cannot get crime insurance.

So this is very important not just for people in this House who have public works projects, but if you have small businessmen and householders who are dependent on this crime insurance program, if you have some marginal neighborhoods in your district that could go belly-up and go on to abandonment, if your businessmen and households cannot get crime insurance, this is your last chance to preserve that program which otherwise is going to be dead as can be on September 30.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my colleagues we have heard a lot of debate and a lot of reasons why this rule should be sent back to the Rules Committee.

I would like to speak about something that has not been discussed yet. We heard that the Rules Committee, which has a difficult time being pulled and tugged in all directions, worked for 2 full days in developing this rule. Your Committee on Public Works and Transportation has worked for 3 full years to bring before this body the omnibus water resources bill, a bill that looks forward, not backward. In trying to eliminate the old pork-barrel projects that we have had down through the years, that committee evaluated and deauthorized over 300 projects that are no longer needed, saving over $11 billion.

We brought that bill, involving every State in the Union that have justifiable needs, we brought that bill here on June 29. The House of Representatives, bipartisan, overwhelmingly passed it. Only 33 votes against it.

We have been waiting since June 29 to be able to go to conference with the other body. The other body has not moved at all in our direction.

So, we are here today with one vehicle, this continuing appropriations. We asked the Rules Committee to permit us to offer before the House an amendment that would include this authorizing bill, adding no money to the appropriations, just the same authorizing bill word for word that the House overwhelmingly passed in June. In that way this bill can go to conference. By passing that bill in June the House went on record favoring the bill and wanting to go to conference. The only way we can go to conference is by including it here.

So, I hope that when this rule is defeated that the Rules Committee will merely permit us to offer an amendment, the choice, as the gentleman from South Carolina was talking about in the rule now, just the choice to have the House vote again to see if they still mean what they said on June 29. We want to go to conference. We want to authorize these projects so vital to over 300 Members of this body.

I hope we can vote down the rule and pass a rule that will permit us to have the House say, yes, we want to go to conference. It has to be done this afternoon. It is now or never.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, there are only a few times the House is given an opportunity by the Committee on Rules to preserve the integrity of the legislative process. This rule is one of those opportunities, and it should not be cast aside in a heated rush to load up the continuing appropriations resolution.

This rule endeavors to restore proper legislative procedure in this House, because it gets us to the point of considering a clean—and I mean clean from all perspectives—appropriations measure that the leadership of both Houses has determined to be necessary to continue the operation of Government agencies beyond October 1.

Mr. Speaker, during our hearing yesterday, the Committee on Rules was presented with 11 requests from legislative committees or members wanting to attach special provisions to this Appropriations bill.

In addition, we received several complaints that some of the specifics contained in the resolution as reported from the Committee on Appropriations were not authorized, and therefore visited an injustice upon the legislative committees.

The committee could have chosen the easy way, the path of least resistance. Oh yes, we could have given in to all of the requests and reported out a rule that made everybody's amendment in order.

Mr. Speaker, we did not do that. The Committee on Rules chose the hard course, the tough course. We turned down all requests to add extraneous items and we offer the House a rule that provides the opportunity to also strip out the controversial portions of the Appropriations Committee's bill relating to unauthorized projects.

Mr. Speaker, we were fair to everybody. We said "No" to all of them.

Mr. Speaker, our colleagues know that I spent many years as a member of one of the most important legislative committees of this House, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. I like to think that I know a little something about the legislative process, I like to think that I respect the concerns and desires of all the Members of the House when it comes to public works projects.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is the duty of the Committee on Rules to "take care" of everybody's legislative problems.

I do not believe it is the duty of the Committee on Rules to guarantee to a legislative committee that the eventual outcome of the legislative process will be the passage of their particular bill.

This is simply no way for us to do things, I think it is high time we put a stop to it.

Mr. Speaker, this rule says: Enough is enough, this time we will not allow a few individuals to load up a continuing appropriations resolution.

I urge my colleagues to listen to the Committee on Rules, realize that this is indeed the best way to proceed, and to vote for this rule.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN].

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, following up the last speaker I would say that one man's controversy is another man's bacon. Or maybe that follows up the last two speakers.

But as one Member who applied to the Appropriations Committee with projects from the district and was turned down, I feel very assured in supporting the Appropriations Committee and their recommendations. I think this House should support the committee. The House should not necessarily support Mr. Stockman who supports the rule. After all, the OMB also supports the Senate and he supports the $1.8 billion for foreign aid, which is preserved inviolate, untouchable, in this particular bill.

There are many urgent emergency measures in the Appropriations Committee bill such as Gallipolis. Gallipolis is not in my district or near my district, but it is one that I think is extremely important. It is important to the welfare of the entire country.

I urge that we vote down this bill.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, a turkey is a turkey is a turkey. There is no question about it. I do not think a vote for this rule proves any integrity on the part of the Rules Committee at all.

Rather, I think it is a slap in the face to the Appropriations Committee and to the Public Works Committee, on which I served my first 2 years in this body. I think it is a slap at all of us when the Rules Committee tries this kind of a rule.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUILLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The suggestion has been made here several times that this rule, or the Appropriations Committee, is trying to ride over the authorizing committees.

Did any authorizing committees testify before the Rules Committee an objection to the Appropriations Committee's continuing resolution as we reported it?

Mr. QUILLEN. To my knowledge, no. And I think I was there all the time.

Mr. MYERS. It has been suggested several times it is overriding, we were riding over all the authorizing committees. Certainly that is not the suggestion of the Appropriations Committee, nor is it happening in this continuing resolution

I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. QUILLEN. I agree and I thank the gentlemen for his contribution.

□ 1500

Mr. Speaker, I feel strongly that this rule should be defeated. Let the Appropriations Committee come back, let the Rules Committee reconsider and correct its error. I know that we all sometimes are prone to try to defend our actions, but I am sure the Members on this floor listening to the debate will agree that this is a bad rule. And a turkey is a turkey is a turkey.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today with perhaps some sadness in my heart because I have served with the gentleman here in this House for 15 years. On no occasion have I voted against a rule since I have been in the House of Representatives, on no occasion. This will be the first time that I will vote against the rule.

Let me suggest this: I think the Rules Committee took a monumental courageous step when they came back and they attempted to protect the authorizing committees. I think they have tried that. But there is a very extremely unique situation that exists here that I only pray and hope the Members understand.

In effect, what this rule does is it cancels all water resources projects, and we are relying upon the other body to do their wisdom and their judgment and add what they think is right. That is not wrong. That is part of it. But we have the people's House, 435 Members of this House, who are speaking to the needs of the country.

We spent hours on this floor and we debated the water resources development bill. It was not another porkbarrel, whatever. It was meticulously gone through. Every point that had to be made that was good that should have been made we made.

Comments were made here today, "load down the bill." We are not asking anybody to put one single penny into the rules at all, not 1 added cent are we asking for, no more money are we asking for. Let that be the process of the Appropriations Committee and the will of the House, as it should be.

Another point was made that it is a Christmas tree. We are not speaking of a Christmas tree. We are speaking of an authorization process where no project can move in this Nation unless the Congress acts on the project. You have absolutely no vehicle that exists other than this vehicle to work the will of the House. The House has voted already, with only 30 negative votes on that issue.

We speak about increasing the deficit. We do not ask you to increase the deficit. Not a penny do we ask you to increase. Not a sou, mark, cent, as they would say. That would be the will of the House, and that would be the will of the Appropriations Committee in due course along the line.

Let us talk about two things. "To thine own self be true." My people are drowning in my State. I need help. We have hurricanes in North Carolina, and they need help. We have no water supply left, practically, to speak of, any sustainable water supply in Florida. Our hydropower programs, our flood control programs, is that pork-barrel? Is that something that is evil in America?

Somebody made the comment "the long-term interest of our country," when they spoke about the deficit. Yes; let us speak to the long-term interest of our country, the things our people need to be able to keep the economy going. The vitality, the dynamics, the resurgence of the economics of this country depend upon what we do in rebuilding the Nation. The capital base of the Nation, the economy of the Nation, depends upon that.

There has been no bill passed here since 1970. It has all been bonbons, pick, choose, get the vote, do what you can do. "To thine own self be true," is part of the issue that we are talking about here.

Let me just close on one point, because you have heard me three times here, and I know it is dangerous territory to be on the floor when you speak so firmly, you believe in something. You cannot blame somebody for believing in something in this House. We fight for every one of you. It is not a project that is the issue. It is the building of our own country. Do we have the right in this resolution, do we have the fundamental right to ask us to vote for $17.9 billion of foreign aid and I cannot get anything fixed in my State for my people, their water supply, the things that Americans need? Is there some evil by somebody coming before this body and suggesting that the Rules Committee take another look?

All we are simply trying to say is to give us a chance to negotiate with the other body, and the only way we can do it is to vote down this rule and give us the chance to make this fight.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 6 minutes.

The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] has expired.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I do not come before this body to say that there are any projects that are not needed. There are a lot of things that are needed. But I will tell you something else: There is something else that is needed in this country and in this House and in this legislative process more than all of those projects, and that is some sort of continuity, some sort of rationale that we can tell the American people that we are in fact serious about getting some handle on finances in this country.

Now, for all of you who have been up here talking about turkeys and all of this, I suggest to you that if you went home and you explained this situation to your constituents, the legislative situation, and they were able to look further than just a dam or further than this little bit of water or that little bit of water, to the entire legislative process, and to see that this trend that has started, that if it is not stopped now could very well break down the entire legislative process, and we could very well, in just a very few years, probably have one concurrent resolution. And that would be the only thing that we would vote on in the period of a year.

I do not need to tell the distinguished chairmen of these committees what a concurrent resolution is. A concurrent resolution is something that we use because our bodies have not done the job that they were supposed to have done, and that is to pass appropriation bills.

Now, I am not going to argue with you whether it is the House or the Senate; but the fact of the matter is that they have not carried out their obligation to the people of this country.

A continuing resolution is something that is an emergency matter, an emergency measure, to continue on so that the Government can run when this body or the other body has not done their work.

But, no. What we intend to do and what we want to do is, we want to add it with everything, we want to add 25 water projects, 25 water projects that have not even been authorized by this body. We want to hang everything that we possibly can on a continuing resolution that is supposed to be simply a matter to cure what we have not done, and that is to go directly through appropriation process and correctly through the authorization process.

Let me say that we on the Rules Committee do not delight in having to sit down here and take all of this abuse. But we really sincerely believe that what we are doing is something that you want us to do and something that you will give us your support on. We have been sitting up there all year listening to chairmen of appropriation committees come up there and complain to us about the Appropriations Committee and complain to us about the process, about what is being done. And what was being done that they were complaining about is what they want us to do now on the continuing resolution. So, you know, somebody better make up their minds whether they really want to run this legislative process in an orderly manner. And if we really mean what we say when we go back home and we are going to be telling these constituents every day for the next 45 days that what we want is rational Federal budgets and rational spending, and if we really believe that, we are going to vote for this rule for the continuing resolution and we are going to say to the American people that we can rise above this project and this project and that project because we believe in the financial integrity of this Federal Government.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BEVILL. The gentleman is obviously very concerned about the integrity of the Government, and I wonder if the billions of dollars of foreign aid provided here, where they are going to build water projects all over the world, is authorized. Is that authorized?

Mr. DERRICK. I will reclaim my time. I am glad the gentleman brought this up, because there has been a strong rumor going around the floor that there was more foreign aid put in there.

Now, let me tell you, the six resolutions were put in there as they were passed by the House, the foreign assistance bill was put in there as it was reported out by the House committee, and the only reason we did not put it in as passed is because it had not been passed. Now, it is either more or less, depending on whether you use the IMF or you do not use the IMF. But that is just in my opinion no argument whatsoever.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say that I understand the frustrations the gentleman has and the Rules Committee has, and we have the same frustrations. What we are doing here various legislative committees have asked us to do. We have the last legislative vehicle, the last bill. We can live with the frustrations that we all have, the problem is on the other side of the Capitol, but to tear down the one vehicle that helps us live with it would be a serious mistake.

I hope you vote against the rule.

□ 1510

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your remarks. You know, you have been up before the Rules Committee, and you pulled out your hair with us all year long. As a matter of fact, I even felt we kind of made you an honorary member, but I guess you will not claim that any more.

Mr. WHITTEN. I say again, this is the only vehicle we have to be able to work with the other body.

Mr. DERRICK. I just say vote for the integrity of this Federal Government and the legislative process.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 168, nays 225, not voting 39, as follows:

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON RULES TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT TO FILE RULE ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 648, CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules have until midnight tonight to file any rule reported on the continuing resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. LEVIN of Michigan]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we are being asked to give unanimous consent for a late filing on a rule where we do not have the foggiest idea of what that rule might be or might not be, or amendments that may or may not be made in order.

Can the gentleman enlighten us a little bit more about exactly what he is asking for and what we are talking about?

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I would say to the gentleman that the Committee on Rules obviously is faced with the problem of reconsidering the terms under which a continuing resolution is brought to the floor. As the gentleman knows, the House was divided on this question just immediately acted on, and divided on both sides of the aisle.

It is, therefore, our hope that some conclusion can be made this afternoon or this evening by the Committee on Rules. I do not have a map to offer the gentleman from Mississippi to describe what that rule would be, but in the event that the Committee on Rules were able to come to a conclusion, we would hope that it could be filed tonight in order to be taken up tomorrow and that, what this accomplishes, consideration could also be given to the continuing resolution tomorrow.

Mr. LOTT. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman cannot really answer that question at this point, because I do not think anybody knows what we will be able to do in the Committee on Rules. I know that we would want to work with the leadership on the gentleman's side of the aisle to expedite this procedure, as we did earlier today. We worked with the gentleman's side to get unanimous consent to bring the rule and we would like to be able to find a way to do that now.

But I would be constrained at this point to object until we have an opportunity for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], and the chairman of the committee to maybe talk and get the minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois, to perhaps visit with the chairman of the Committee on Rules and get some idea of where we are headed because now we are being asked to give unanimous consent on something where we do not have the foggiest idea of what we are talking about.

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will withhold his reservation further, perhaps he would yield to the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida, further reserving the right to object.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules to meet at 3:45 and we well call a meeting of the full committee sometime shortly thereafter to consider what the next rule might be.

Mr. LOTT. The chairman is saying we are going to have a meeting at 3:45 and he would expect to ask unanimous consent sometime after that?

Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand all that the distinguished chairman said. Was he saying that there would be a meeting of the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules to make that decision, and if he is, I am going to object, because we feel that we ought to be involved in this discussion so we would at least be aware. I would yield to our ranking member on that point.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I did not get the question of the gentleman.

Mr. LOTT. My question was, Mr. Speaker, is there going to be a meeting of the Committee on Rules at 3:45 to discuss this issue?

Mr. PEPPER. If the gentleman will yield further, I thought it appropriate that the Committee on Rules meet this afternoon and consider what kind of a rule, if any, it might offer back to the House. That is the reason I said I called a meeting of the Democratic caucus for 3:45, after which, in due course, the full committee would be called into session this afternoon.

Mr. LOTT. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, the ranking member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. QUILLEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that a bipartisan effect should be made on this rule. I think if the Democrats are going to meet and caucus and decide what is going to be done, why do you invite the Republicans to come to a general meeting?

Mr. PEPPER. If the gentleman will yield further, I think the able gentleman is appearing more naive than he really is. The gentleman knows that it is customary for us to have a caucus and then a full committee meeting. I suspect we will do that this afternoon.

Mr. QUILLEN. If the gentleman will yield further, I certainly do not want to question the gentleman's ability, Mr. Speaker, and I do not plead to be the smartest man in the House, but I think the gentleman is using bad judgment when he calls a Democrat caucus on what is going to be done in the Committee on Rules on this measure. However, I do not mind your caucusing; go ahead.

Mr. LOTT. Further reserving the right to object, until we have an opportunity to discuss this issue on both sides of the aisle and try to find a reasonable solution, and because this vote we just had was a bipartisan vote, I am sorry to say——

Mr. PEPPER. I would think that the full committee should be meeting not later than around 4 o'clock.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned. We did have an opportunity here to pass out a clean bill and do it in an orderly fashion, which we did last year. We went over to the Senate and said, "Hey, look; we have a clean bill here. We do not have this bill all loaded down," and the Senate backed down on about 250 amendments or so.

Not knowing in what direction we are going on this rule, Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

NATIONAL QUALITY MONTH

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 304) to designate the month of October 1984 as "National Quality Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

Mr. GILMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the resolution being considered.

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 304 designating October 1984 as National Quality Month is a simple idea to get Americans to recommit themselves to "Quality First" and to restore the pride and confidence of "Made in America." It is true both in terms of improving our trade competitiveness and in terms of improving our productivity that real attention to quality pays off.

I agree with W. Edwards Demming, the renowned statistician who helped launch Japan's economic miracle in the 1950's, that the fundamental reason for the loss of America's competitive position in the marketplace is neither unfair market practices nor government subsidies, neither automation nor cultural nuance. Rather our decline is due to poor quality practices in manufacturing and services.

Attention to quality is what turned Japan around from a country known for low wages and shoddy products to a nation which now manufactures some of the best quality products in the world. Most of Japan's success today can be attributed to that nation's simple dedication to quality.

I firmly believe that quality is an American idea. For many years "Made in America" was a pledge of high quality to customers around the world. Armed with a reputation for high quality, American goods dominated world markets. The entire country benefited from our commitment to making the best products in the world. Management and labor worked together toward that common objective and as a result, American industries flourished and supported a thriving economy that provided more and more jobs every year.

But in the last decade all of this has changed. As foreign manufacturers have dedicated themselves to quality, they have begun to erode America's position in the marketplace. Part of our problem in international competition is that we became sloppy as a major supplier of manufactured goods. No other country is up to our technological capability. The competition is not smarter than we are. We simply did not advance quality to the extent we could have. We lost the commitment to high quality that we taught others was essential for productivity and profits.

And whether the measure of trade leadership is productivity or profits, high quality pays tremendous dividends. Doing things right the first time means they don't have to be done over again and that reduces costs and boosts paychecks and profits. Doing things right the first time means there is time to do more things and that means more productivity for the same amount of effort. Quality is the key to saving time and money; quality is the key to productivity.

The principle of high quality was developed in this Nation. From colonial days when our forefathers practiced their trades in small, backyard shops, American goods enjoyed a reputation for high quality and precision crafting. Perhaps we were spoiled by our success. As consumer demands for products rose, we too often fell into the error of seeing high quality as a cause of delay in meeting those demands rather than as a means of improving performance. We misplaced our emphasis.

All of this has begun to change. There is a revival of concern for high quality all over the country. It is evident in the strategies of our major corporations. It is evident in the small businesses on Main Street. There is a spirit where everyone understands the importance of quality. Executives have realized that high quality means customer satisfaction and customer satisfaction means sales. Workers have realized that high quality means jobs. There is a heightened consciousness among workers about quality and the satisfactions associated with taking pride in their work and the products and services they produce.

This commemorative legislation is an important opportunity to increase corporate and public awareness about the need for "Quality First." It is an important opportunity for everyone to acknowledge the vital role quality pays in producing goods and services for the international marketplace. It is an important opportunity to rededicate ourselves to the idea that "Made in America" means "Quality First."

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 304

Whereas the United States has been preeminent in quality technology development since the Industrial Revolution;

Whereas the performance and spirit that typified early American craftsmen was based on individual interest in quality of goods and service;

Whereas the pride of workmanship that once prevailed must be reinforced through a renewed commitment to quality and knowledge of quality technology in more complex contemporary industrial, commercial, and governmental organizations;

Whereas American goods and services represent the highest standards of excellence in quality;

Whereas the strength of the Nation relies on the ability of industry to produce quality goods and services;

Whereas the United States must produce high quality goods and services to maintain a position of leadership in the world marketplace;

Whereas the commitment to quality involves recognition and implementation of a consistent quality policy, the use of quality technology, and utilizaton of talents throughout an organization toward quality improvement;

Whereas the emphasis on quality in manufacturing and service will increase productivity through emphasis on defect prevention, waste reduction, and improved reliability of products and services;

Whereas the White House Conference on Productivity Report of the Preparatory Conference on Private Sector Initiatives recommended that a quality awareness campaign be implemented at the National level and within the private sector to demonstrate that rapid improvement in quality and productivity is essential to the survival of the national economy;

Whereas the American Society for Quality Control has been a leader in the development, promotion and application of quality and quality related technology since 1946;

Whereas the American Society for Quality Control is engaged in a campaign to convince officials in government and industry that increased productivity, reduced costs, and consumer satisfaction will result from commitment to improved quality standards;

Whereas the American Society for Quality Control will sponsor activities to observe National Quality Week; and

Whereas the theme of National Quality Week will be "Quality First" to emphasize that quality is an integral part of the processes that produce goods and services: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of October 1984, is designated as "National Quality Month" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate programs and activities.

WORLD WAR I ACES AND AVIATORS DAY

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 333) to designate September 21, 1984, as "World War I Aces and Aviators Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

Mr. GILMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation being considered.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 333. Introduced by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Mr. HELMS, the resolution designates September 21, 1984, as "World War I Aces and Aviators Day."

There are only 60 known surviving Aces of World War I. These heroic men defended the skies of Europe with valor and distinction in a war which began 70 years ago.

It is appropriate that this day be set aside to express our gratitude and respect for these air warriors for their extraordinary feats in the defense of this country's liberty.

Thank you.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 333

Whereas World War I, the "war to end all wars," began seventy years ago;

Whereas that war spawned a new breed of warrior, the aviator, who engaged in single combat high above the conflict on the ground;

Whereas these truly remarkable men defended the skies of Europe with valor and distinction;

Whereas some of these aviators achieved the title "Ace" by gaining at least five confirmed victories over opponents in the air;

Whereas there are only about sixty known surviving Aces of World War I, who meet periodically to share memories of a conflict familiar to many Americans only through recorded history; and

Whereas all Americans should express their gratitude and respect for these gallant air warriors for their extraordinary feats in defense of liberty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That September 21,

1984, is designated as "World War I Aces and Aviators Day" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate programs and activities.

NATIONAL HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES WEEK

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 340) to designate the week of September 23, 1984, as "National Historically Black Colleges Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewomen from Indiana?

Mr. GILMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation being considered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 340, which designates the week of September 23 as "National Historically Black Colleges Week" to recognize the contributions that have been made by black colleges and universities of this Nation. This legislation is the companion bill to House Joint Resolution 637, which I introduced, and I urge the adoption of the resolution.

I would like to thank the numerous cosponsors of this bill, along with the distinguished member on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. The chairman of the committee, Mr. FORD, and the chairwoman of the Subcommittee on Census and Population, Mrs. HALL, deserve special recognition for their interest and assistance on this bill.

The 103 historically black colleges and universities in the United States have made significant contributions to the progress of education among blacks over the last century and a half. I am especially pleased to have seven of these outstanding institutions in my State of South Carolina: Allen University, Benedict College, Claflin College, Clinton College, Morris College, South Carolina State College, and Voorhees College. These schools, along with their counterparts around the country, graduate more than 30,000 young black Americans each year in every field of education. In fact, over 85 percent of the black doctors and lawyers in this Nation are graduates of one of these postsecondary institutions.

History attests to the many achievements of those who have excelled in the area of black education. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have sponsored this resolution, and I urge the adoption of this bill.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There ws no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 340

Whereas there are one hundred and three historically black colleges and universities in the United States;

Whereas they are providing the quality education so essential to full participation in our complex, highly technological society;

Whereas black colleges and universities have a rich heritage and have played a prominent role in American history;

Whereas these institutions have allowed many underprivileged students to attain their full potential through higher education; and

Whereas the achievements and goals of these historically black colleges are deserving of national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of September 23, 1984, is designated as "National Historically Black Colleges Week" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States and interested groups to observe that week by engaging in appropriate ceremonies, activities, and programs, thereby showing their support of historically black colleges and universities in the United States.

● Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 340 designating the week of September 23, 1984, as "National Historically Black Colleges Week."

I have cosponsored this legislation in order to recognize the many achievements of America's historically black colleges and universities.

Today there are 103 historically black colleges and universities in the United States. Many are more than 100 years old and have played a prominent role in our country's history.

The historically black colleges and universities have produced more than 70 percent of all black college graduates since the founding of our Nation. More than half of black business executives and elected officials are graduates of these institutions, as are 75 percent of black military officers and more than 85 percent of black doctors and lawyers.

The 103 historically black colleges and universities have championed the cause of equal opportunity and given a chance to many who had been denied it. These institutions represent a source of pride to many and, therefore, merit recognition by the Congress of the United States as a small tribute for their longstanding contributions to America.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.●

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate joint resolutions just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

RAILROAD SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 562 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5585.

□ 1545

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5585) to authorize appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes, with Mr. WEAVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO].

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the House is now considering H.R. 5585, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1984. This important piece of legislation, which will help improve both the safety of rail operations and the safety protections provided to railroad employees. The recent tragic Amtrak accidents have highlighted the importance of rail safety. The bill also reauthorizes the safety functions of the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA].

Before I highlight the key provisions of the bill, let me assure you that our committee is very concerned with the recent accidents on Amtrak. Recently, I requested the General Accounting Office to investigate Amtrak's safety procedures. I have also developed an amendment to this bill, which I will offer shortly, to further strengthen the rail safety program. This amendment will focus on improving the inspection procedures to ensure safe track, among other areas.

Let me highlight some of the key provisions of the bill. First, the bill would require the Secretary of Transportation to issue a final rule within 60 days of enactment, to ensure the prevention of alcohol and drug use in railroad operations. Alcohol and drug use are a major problem adversely affecting the safety of rail operations. A number of recent accidents have been attributed to alcohol or drug use. Indeed, published reports indicate that drug use may have been a factor in the recent head-on collision of two Amtrak trains in New York. It is clear that regulatory action is needed. I am pleased that, shortly after this bill was reported, the Secretary issued a notice of proposed rulemaking in this area. The Secretary has indicated she hopes to have a final rule in place by fall. In the meantime, this provision will keep the pressure on.

In the same area, the bill also requires the Secretary to encourage the formation of a private, nonprofit corporation to support and promote greater employee awareness of the drug and alcohol problem and to encourage peer intervention. This innovative provision was the result of the initiative of the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. LENT.

The bill will also improve the safety protections available to railroad employees. The current law protects from retaliation those employees who report safety violations or who refuse to work under certain limited conditions presenting an imminent danger of death or serious injury. However, the usual remedy is backpay and/or reinstatement, if an employee is suspended or discharged in retaliation. Unfortunately, there is no remedy where an employee is harassed, but not suspended or discharged. This bill would allow such an employee to be awarded appropriate compensation of up to 1 year's pay. This remedy is justified because of the need to ensure safe railroad operations and to protect employees who seek to promote safety.

The bill would also provide standing to employees to sue the Department of Transportation where the Secretary has failed to perform a nondiscretionary, enforcement related act or duty and such failure results in a danger of serious injury or death to employees. Concern has been expressed that the FRA has failed to properly enforce the rail safety laws and regulations. This provision would provide a remedy, as the court would be able to compel performance of the nondiscretionary act or duty. I want to emphasize that this remedy would only be available where the Secretary has failed to perform a nondiscretionary act—an act the Secretary is required by law to perform.

The bill also requires the FRA to examine two areas of safety concern—the maintenance, inspection, and testing of grade crossing warning devices and the need for qualification standards for employees who inspect and test brakes and inspect freight cars. Several of the recent Amtrak accidents occurred at grade crossings. It is crucial that grade crossing warning devices be adequately inspected and maintained.

Finally, the bill reauthorizes the safety functions of the FRA for 2 years. The bill would specifically reauthorize the State safety participation program. Under this program, half the cost of State safety inspectors are paid for by the Federal Government. There are currently about 102 such State inspectors. The administration has recommended eliminating the funding for this program. If this proposal were implemented, most of these inspectors would be eliminated and rail safety would suffer.

This is an important bill to improve the safety of rail operations, and I urge the support of the House.

□ 1550

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5585, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1984.

H.R. 5585 reauthorizes the Federal Railroad Administration's Rail Safety Program for 2 years and authorizes funds for conducting safety research and development. The bill also authorizes funds for the State Rail Safety Participation Program. This program reimburses States for expenses associated with the employment of State safety inspectors. Currently, there are over 100 safety inspectors employed by participating States.

In recent years, the safety of railroad operations has greatly improved. During 1983, the total number of accidents was the lowest ever. Railroad worker fatalities dropped 24 percent over the 1982 level and injuries declined 15 percent over the same period.

Despite this positive trend, serious safety hazards still exist. We have all become increasingly troubled by the recent rash of accidents which has occurred on our Nation's rail passenger lines. Some of these incidents have occurred at highway grade crossings. Appropriately, section 3 of the bill requires the Secretary to issue regulations as may be necessary to ensure the safe maintenance and testing of signal systems and devices at highway grade crossings.

One of the most serious of the recent rail accidents took place in New York. A head-on collision between two passenger trains occurred on a trestle in Queens, NY; 1 person was killed and 106 were injured.

It recently has been brought to our attention that one of the signalmen involved in this tragic accident may have been under the influence of drugs. This incident, as well as others, has raised serious concerns about drug and alcohol use in rail operations and grade crossing safety.

In this light, the consideration of the bill by the House is particularly timely. Section 10 of H.R. 5585, Which I offered as an amendment at the subcommittee level, would require the Secretary of Transportation to encourage the establishment of a nonprofit corporation within the rail industry to foster prevention of alcohol and drug abuse. This program would be a private initiative, funded by voluntary contributions from rail employees, with matching grants from rail carriers. The Federal Railroad Administration will be authorized to provide startup support in an amount not to exceed $100,000 for this initiative.

The Federal Railroad Administration has recently issued a proposed rule on the use of alcohol and drugs in railroad operation. The rule seeks to address the problem of drug and alcohol use at many different levels—ranging from preemployment screenings to post accident testing. The Administration plans to have this rule finalized and in effect by this fall. I hope that a consensus can be reached on the details of the rule so that the industry can quickly set about to resolve this serious safety problem.

Questions have been raised as a result of the recent rash of Amtrak accidents on the crashworthiness standards for rail passenger cars, the inspection of track and the notification of train crews as to threatening weather conditions. My colleague, Chairman FLORIO, will be offering an amendment, which I will support, to require the Secretary of Transportation to conduct a rulemaking proceeding in these areas. This amendment will also require the Secretary to conduct an inquiry into whether training standards are necessary for train dispatchers. If the inquiry shows that a rulemaking proceeding is necessary, she is given the flexibility to conduct a rulemaking proceeding on this issue. This portion of the amendment responds to the Amtrak accident which occurred in Queens, NY, which may have been caused by a dispatching error.

While I am supportive of the provisions of the bill which improve rail safety, I am, however, troubled by the concerns raised by the Administration with respect to section 6. This section would grant employees, or their union representative, "standing" to sue the Secretary of Transportation. Current law permits standing in emergency situations where a danger of "imminent injury" to a rail worker exists.

Section 6 would broaden standing to such a degree that the administration fears its prosecutorial discretion would be virtually nonexistent. The effectiveness of the Safety enforcement Program would be severely undermined by costly and time-consuming litigation. Indeed, the Department of Justice recognizes the increase in litigation in this area is potentially overwhelming in terms of volume and opposes the provision as it would subject any decision by the Secretary concerning enforcement of railroad safety laws to review.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, while I support H.R. 5585, I do have some serious reservations over the wisdom of section 6.

Thank you.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENT. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. RUDD. I simply would like to get a clarification on this bill, if I may. The railroads have had 100 years of impeccable record in the preservation of safety regulations, of devising their own safety regulations which were strictly enforced, and when disobeyed, just punishment, up to dismissal, was immediately carried out, where other members of the railroad community or fraternity, if you want to put it that way, were willing to indicate when a brother had taken too much alcohol, or any alcohol at all, in order to break those strict rules, to assure that this carrier of our fellow citizens, of human beings, would result in no injury or damage or accidents that could have taken place.

Now, this piece of legislation is imposing Government regulations on this to carry out what the railroads have always been able to do for themselves. I know there is an answer to this and I am just wondering why we need this piece of legislation in view of the record that the railroads have had for over 100 years.

Mr. LENT. The gentleman is correct. Our hearings indicated, and the statistics indicate that over the years the number of accidents and fatalities on our Nation's railroads have been reduced to the point where, in 1983, we had fewer than ever.

But, by the same token, during 1984, we have had a rash of accidents. Our hearings indicated that there has been a great deal of evidence that the use of alcohol and drugs by railroaders has been on the increase. Evidence shows that the old system of turning in your buddy or stopping your buddy from taking the helm of a railroad locomotive has been breaking down.

So we have been working, and we have encouraged work between the Federal Railroad Administration and the Brotherhoods, to try to develop some sort of a rule that will not be too onerous, but yet will set up a system whereby individual railroaders who are involved with drugs, or feels they have been overcome with alcohol, addiction can seek out guidance and help.

So I am pleased to be able to say to the gentleman from Arizona that the Federal Railroad Administration's rulemaking is presently in the works. It is unfortunate that we have to put this directive in this legislation. But, we feel we have to respond to the circumstances that exist in the railroads involving drugs and alcohol.

Mr. RUDD. I understand there will be some Federal funds involved, perhaps $100,000. What will they be used for?

Mr. LENT. As I said in my opening remarks, that $100,000 would be start-up money for the establishment of a program. That program will then be voluntary and it would be thereafter completely financed by contributions and matching funds from individuals and the rail corporations themselves.

Mr. RUDD. I thank the gentleman from New York for his responsible statement.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

□ 1600

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I support this bill. I think it is very important.

Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee I chair on the Committee on Science and Technology has been concerned about railroad safety for a number of years. We have held a series of hearings on this issue. We are particularly concerned about the skyrocketing rate of derailments in the late 1970's. That number of derailments annually peaked in 1978 to 8,763 derailments, but that has dropped down to about 3,000 in 1983. The Staggers Rail Act may have contributed to this reduction either by increasing revenues to the railroads or by making abandonments easier. But still there remain many problems with the Federal Railroad Administration's rail safety program. I would like to list four of them. No. 1, track inspectors: They have only 88 track inspectors for the entire country. In 1982, the GAO found that the FRA's primary means of monitoring industry compliance with Federal safety standards were time consuming and ineffective. No. 2 has to do with Amtrak contracts. Most people do not realize that Amtrak has an agreement with the railroads over which Amtrak operates to protect the railroads from accident liability risks.

The taxpayer must assume those risks.

That whole process causes me great concern in terms of who actually is responsible for maintaining the roadbeds, Amtrak or the railroads or perhaps the Federal Government.

No. 3, reduction in track standards: The National Transportation Safety Board has expressed its concern about the FRA's reduction in track safety standards in 1982. In fact, NTSB has indicated a number of concerns on safety issues that are routinely ignored by the FRA. No. 4, little use of modern technology: Our subcommittee found that there are several areas where the FRA really has not modernized. The automated track geometry cars, now these are cars that Amtrak has recently started systemwide track inspection, using modern track geometry cars, something which many folks advocated several years ago. Use of those track geometry cars could have saved lives and injuries in recent derailments.

No. 2 is weather and communications. There is no current regulation requiring that railroad locomotives have access to severe-weather warnings, nor that they even have a working radio. Imagine that, no regulation requiring railroads even have communication equipment.

Three is lack of modern signaling systems. Only recently through the efforts of Mr. FLORIO has modern signaling equipment systems been implemented in the Northeast corridor.

Finally, unprotected grade crossings are still a major problem and cause most of the fatalities.

In short, Amtrak and the FRA rely almost totally on private railroads to assure public safety. That is in sharp contrast to the way things are done in aviation.

Now, notwithstanding all of the above, this is a fine bill that will help promote rail safety. We have had a whole slurry of rail accidents in this country the last couple of years, accidents which have been caused by many, many factors. Some have to do with poor performance of operators of the railroads, some have to do with bad track. The fact of the matter is that people who ride on Amtrak or people who live near Amtrak or freight lines need to be assured that the railroads are safe in the same way that they believe our air system is safe in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FLORIO. I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, one of the amendments the gentleman from New Jersey is going to offer will deal with the issue of weather and communications. I intend to support it. I also intend to offer an amendment which will require basically a statement of disclosure of how much the railroads have spent before and after the Staggers Act to improve track and roadbed and capital equipment. The railroads are one of the reasons why this country is strong. They are still probably the strongest form of transportation in America. We have to make sure they are safe, safe to ride on for passengers, safe to transport freight.

Mr. Chairman, this bill will help on that process.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the railroad safety improvements of H.R. 5585 to stop alcohol and drug abuse by persons who operate our railroad trains. This bill also upgrades Federal inspection of railroad tank cars to make sure new safety standards for flammable gases and other hazardous commodities are met.

We cannot permit repetition of train derailments where an engineer or brakeman is functionally incapacitated because of alcohol consumption or drug use before or during work. Nearly 2 years ago, on September 28, 1982, more than 3,000 residents of my congressional district, Livingston, LA, had to flee their homes literally for their lives under emergency conditions for as long as 2 weeks, when an Illinois Central Gulf railroad freight train derailed causing tank car explosions and toxic chemical release. Hundreds of thousands of dollars in immediate physical property damage resulted. The National Transportation Safety Board after investigation held this derailment was caused by the train's engineer who did not operate it safely due to alcohol consumption. This horrible accident did not have to happen. Had this bill been law, perhaps it would not have.

Fast civic coordination and public response insured no loss of life occurred, but the magnitude of potential human danger remains fresh in the minds of the residents of Livingston and other communities nearby where the same rail line passes

On August 2, I submitted testimony to a Department of Transportation panel on rail safety calling for fast and effective action to prevent the events of the Livingston derailment from being repeated. This bill serves that purpose, and I support it.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the chairman [Mr. FLORIO] in a colloquy.

I wonder if I might have a moment of the chairman's time to discuss with him what I consider to be a serious rail safety issue. I am referring to the problem of accidents which often occur at rural, low traffic volume highway/rail grade crossings.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to discuss this important matter with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, thank you. Without question, we have made headway in improving safety conditions at the most dangerous highway/rail grade crossings, and the chairman and the members of the Public Works Committee should be saluted for their efforts. But, there are problems remaining that are unique to rural areas. There are over 200,000 highway/rail crossings in this country and many, perhaps more than half, are located in rural and small town America with relatively low volumes of highway and rail traffic. In my State of Oklahoma, 95 percent of the grade crossings are located in rural areas. I know many of my colleagues represent rural districts with similar grade crossings. These crossings continue to experience accidents, injuries, and fatalities. Such tragedies cannot be ignored, and they cannot be accepted. I believe there are many things that can be done to improve these crossings at a reasonably low cost. I feel that reflectors on railroad cars may be a solution, but I am willing to try an alternative. The Federal Highway Administration, in conjunction with the State of Illinois, Southern Railway Co., and several local communities, recently completed a low-cost rail/highway crossing corridor improvement project utilizing several techniques particularly appropriate to these low traffic volume crossings. The Federal Highway Administration, in fact, has found that utilizing low-cost rail corridor techniques similar to those in this Illinois project could be of significant benefit. I am convinced that the Congress and Federal Government must develop, refine, and increasingly utilize this type of low-cost grade crossing safety improvement alternative. Mr. Chairman, I know that you share my interest and concern about this matter. In that regard, I intend to pursue with you and with our colleagues the creation of a special national program to examine and demonstrate innovative, low cost approaches to safety improvement at low-traffic-volume highway/rail grade crossings. At this time, I envision the implementation of three or four such corridor demonstration projects at various locations around the country. These projects would be carried out by the Federal Highway Administration with funds from the Federal highway trust fund with the advice and assistance of the Federal Railroad Administration, State and local agencies, and the railroads. Such information will be invaluable especially to State an local officials in their efforts to eliminate deaths and injuries at these locations. Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of our colleagues. I hope I can have your support and assistance in pursuing this low-cost rail/highway crossing corridor improvement program which I have discussed.

Mr. FLORIO. The gentleman from Oklahoma has eloquently described what is truly an important problem. But, as the gentleman indicates, it is a problem for which effective solutions can and must be developed. I would additionally point out that while low-traffic-volume grade crossings frequently exist in rural areas, they are also found in our cities and towns. I would hope and anticipate that the demonstration effort described by the gentleman and the knowledge gained therefrom would be applicable to appropriate urban locations. You certainly have my supprort, and I look forward to working with you.

Mr. WATKINS. The chairman is absolutely correct about urban low-traffic-volume crossings. The problems and solutions of such locations would certainly be fully examined in the demonstration program I propose.

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for the amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. FLORIO, on track inspections and weather monitoring.

This past summer the people of Vermont and the Nation were made brutally aware of the need for adequate weather monitoring and track inspections when on July 7, Amtrak's Montrealer train, making its daily morning run north through Vermont to Montreal, derailed at a collapsed culvert weakened by heavy summer rains. This accident, one of the worst in Amtrak's 13-year history, claimed 5 lives, and resulted in numerous injuries and extensive damage to equipment and railbed. Suffice it to say this accident could have been averted if there had been in place a system of alerting the train of severe weather conditions and conducting a spot inspection of hazardous track sections.

Throughout this country our so-called structural infastructure is showing signs of age and is sorely in need of repair. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the Northeast where structures are old and harsh weather conditions have paid their toll. Short of replacing all aging track, bridges and grade crossing, a system of weather monitoring and track inspections will increase the safety and reliability of our railroads.

As a result of the Vermont incident, Central Vermont Railroad, one of three rail lines over which the Montrealer runs, now requires that weather conditions be monitored continuously and that all Amtrak engines using their lines be furnished with radio equipment to receive this information. It is unfortunate that actions such as this are many times only taken after tragedy strikes. But, nonetheless, I am encouraged by this action and hope that it will be effective in avoiding future mishaps.

The amendment presented by the gentleman from New Jersey, today, as I understand it will direct the Federal Railroad Administration to issue rules to establish a similar system coupled with track inspections nationwide. To avoid a repeat of the unfortunate incident that occurred in Vermont this summer, I urge all my colleagues to support this provision.●

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLORIO: At the end of the bill, insert the following new section:

RAIL SAFETY

SEC. 11. (a) Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431), as amended by this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(n) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1984, issue such rules, regulations, orders, and standards as may be necessary to insure safe rail passenger and other rail operations, giving special consideration to the need for—

"(1) improved inspection of track used for rail passenger and other rail service, and improved weather information in conjunction with such inspections; and

"(2) crashworthiness standards for rail passenger cars.

"(o)(1) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1984, conduct and complete an inquiry into whether training standards are necessary for those involved in dispatching passenger and other trains.

"(2) Upon the completion of such inquiry, the Secretary shall report the results of such inquiry to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate along with the Secretary's recommendations, and if the Secretary recommends that rules, regulations, orders, or standards are necessary, the Secretary shall promptly initiate appropriate rulemaking proceedings.".

(b)(1) The Secretary of Transportation shall require that all sections of the mainline of the Northeast Corridor between Boston, Massachusetts, and Washington, D.C. are equipped with automatic block signals with cab signaling before December 31, 1985, consistent with the document entitled Corridor Master Plan II, NECIP Restructured Program, dated January, 1982, prepared for the United States Department of Transportation, Federal Railroad Administration, Northeast Corridor Improvement Project, in cooperation with the Federal Railroad Administration and the National Railroad Passenger Corporation (Amtrak), by DeLeuw, Cather/Parsons, NECIP architect/engineer.

(2) The deadline established under paragraph (1) shall not apply to the extent that the owner or operator of such mainline tracks, or, where appropriate, the Secretary, is unable to meet such deadline solely for reasons beyond their control. If such owner or operator, or, where appropriate, the Secretary, fails or expects to fail to meet the deadline for such reasons, the owner or operator or Secretary shall notify the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate of—

(A) the portions of the mainline that will not be properly equipped by the deadline;

(B) the reasons for such failure; and

(C) the anticipated completion date of the work.

(c) The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 215. UNSAFE FACILITIES.

"(a) The National Railroad Passenger Corporation (hereafter in this section referred to as 'Amtrak'), or the owner of any facility which presents a danger to the employees, passengers, or property of Amtrak, may petition the Secretary for assistance to the owner of such facility for relocation or other remedial measures to minimize or eliminate such danger under this section.

"(b) If the Secretary determines that—

"(1) a facility which is the subject of a petition under subsection (a) presents a danger of death or serious injury to any employee or passenger of Amtrak or serious damage to any property of Amtrak; and

"(2) the owner of such facility should not be expected to bear the cost of relocating or other remedial measures necessary to minimize or eliminate such danger, the Secretary shall recommend to the Congress that the Congress, as a part of its periodic reauthorizations of this Act, authorize funding, by reimbursement or otherwise, for such relocation or other remedial measures.

"(c) Petitions may be submitted under subsection (a) of this section with respect to any relocation or remedial measures undertaken on or after January 1, 1978.".

Mr. FLORIO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, the recent tragic Amtrak accidents have raised understandable concern about the safety of rail operations. The recent Amtrak accidents have varying causes. But we have learned some lessons already and it is imperative that we take advantage of what we have learned to prevent future accidents.

The amendment I am now offering would build on what we know about the recent accidents to ensure a safer rail system. To begin with, the amendment would require the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA] to conduct a rulemaking proceeding to examine the safety of rail operations. As part of this rulemaking, FRA would have to look at several specific areas.

First, FRA would have to consider the need for better track inspection procedures especially the need for better weather information. The recent derailment in Philadelphia resulted from the effect of heat on the track while the recent derailment in Vermont resulted from a washout due to rain. Better inspection procedures and particularly better weather data may have prevented these accidents. In addition, as part of this effort to improve track safety, the FRA may want to consider the need for bridge standards.

Second, the amendment requires FRA to examine the need for crashworthiness standards for rail passenger cars. Despite our best efforts, some accidents will occur. It is important to ensure that rail equipment can withstand accidents, so that passengers can survive the crash.

The amendment also requires FRA to conduct an inquiry to consider the need for training standards for those involved in dispatching trains. Concern has been raised that dispatchers and tower operators may have inadequate training.

The recent head-on collision in New York also revealed another problem. The accident occurred on a stretch of Amtrak track that had a less sophisticated signal system called manual block signals. Most of the rest of Amtrak's Northeast corridor mainline between Washington and Boston has a more sophisticated signal system, automatic block signals with cab signals. Such a system works automatically and has fail-safe features that would have prevented the recent head-on collision. The amendment would require the Secretary of Transportation to ensure that the entire Northeast corridor mainline spine between Boston and Washington was equipped with this more sophisticated signal system by December 31, 1985. This schedule is consistent with and based on Amtrak's plans as part of the Northeast corridor improvement project. Thus the amendment would ensure that this necessary work is done.

This is an important amendment which will help prevent future rail accidents. I urge its adoption.

Finally, the amendment establishes a procedure to encourage the relocation of facilities which may create a hazard to Amtrak passengers, employees, or property. The procedure merely provides for the Secretary of Transportation to make recommendations to Congress on this issue.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLORIO. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I have gone over this amendment and I have been happy to work with the gentleman on it. It is essential that we learn from these various Amtrak accidents, so that similar situations do not reoccur.

The gentleman's amendment requires, as I understand it, the Secretary of Transportation to look at some of the causes of the most recent accidents and, if it is necessary, to then establish regulations in those areas. In this manner we can hopefully improve further the safety of our Nation's railroads.

It is a good amendment and I am pleased to support it.

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire about the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey.

During hearings held last summer by the subcommittee I chair, the Science and Technology Subcommittee on Transportation, Aviation, and Materials, it was apparent that substantial improvements in rail safety could be achieved by the use of relatively simple modern technology. The most obvious example is the need for modern communication links between trains and the National Weather Service. There are indications that access to emergency weather alerts could possibly have prevented the Amtrak accident in Vermont last July 7, the accident near Connellsville, PA, on May 29, and the accident near Emerson, IA, on June 15, 1982. In every case emergency weather alerts had been issued, but the information never reached the engine crews. In the case of the accident in Vermont last July, there had been a flash flood watch issued by the National Weather Service, but railroad personnel were not aware of the warning. In fact, the engine crew did not even have a working radio, so they could not have received a warning in any case.

As I understand it, the amendment would require the Federal Railroad Administration to conduct a rulemaking to insure safe rail operations. As part of the rulemaking, the FRA is to give special consideration to the need for weather related information in conjunction with improved track inspections. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. GLICKMAN. As the gentleman knows, I was prepared to offer an amendment requiring that all locomotive cabs be equipped with effective radio devices which provide access for employees to National Weather Service radio frequency bands and two-way communication between the operating employees and off-train railroad operations personnel. One major purpose of this amendment was to ensure that operating personnel had access to the latest weather information and thus be able to act on that information.

However, it appears your amendment is directed to the same purpose.

Mr. FLORIO. The gentleman is correct. I know we share the same goal of preventing tragic, weather-related accidents such as the recent Amtrak derailment in Vermont.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I would ask the gentleman one question. I notice his amendment does not refer specifically to the issue of radios. Is it the gentleman's intent that FRA consider the need for radios in the context of the rulemaking required by his amendment?

Mr. FLORIO. Absolutely. The amendment requires the FRA to consider the need for better weather information. Certainly, the use of radios in locomotive cabs can help ensure access to such vital information. It is definitely the intent of this amendment that the FRA consider the need for radios in locomotive cabs in the context of the required rulemaking.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KOSTMAYER

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KOSTMAYER: Page 3, line 5, add a new section, and renumber following sections accordingly.

"AMTRAK MAINTENANCE OF EQUIPMENT

"SEC. 5. Sec. 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end a new subsection as follows:

"(n) In order to ensure the safety of operations and the proper maintenance of track and switch points, the Bristol, Pa. Maintenance of Equipment shop and its support facility at Cornwells Heights, Pa. shall not be closed or moved for a period of six months after enactment of this subsection, and the Board of Directors of Amtrak shall submit to the Congress no later than March 1, 1985 a report on any plans to close or move this shop and its potential impact on the safety of operations and the maintenance of track in the Northeast Rail Corridor between New York and Baltimore."

Mr. KOSTMAYER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOSTMAYER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have had an opportunity to review the gentleman's amendment. It is a good amendment. I would be happy to accept the amendment.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Chairman, let me just say very briefly, and first of all thank the gentleman from New Jersey, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. FLORIO], and also the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT] for permitting me to offer this amendment.

Very simply, this amendment would require the Board of Directors of Amtrak to submit a report to the Congress by March 1 of next year and in the interim not to move a maintenance-of-way facility located at Bristol, PA, prior to issuing that report to the Congress.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOSTMAYER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to very regretfully have to oppose this amendment. It is regrettable that the amendment is offered at the 11th hour. The minority, frankly, has had no opportunity to look at this amendment very carefully or to explore it, other than to make a telephone call to the Amtrak people.

We are advised that with respect to this particular facility in the gentleman's district, or nearby the gentleman's district, Amtrak is looking for alternative property for a site and that the alternative property that is under consideration is being offered at a reasonable price. Amtrak seems to be somewhat concerned with the fact that the gentleman's amendment would put this whole process on ice, so to speak, for what might be an inordinately long time, 6 months.

I was wondering if the gentleman would agree to perhaps shortening that period for study so then perhaps I could withdraw my objection.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. I appreciate the concerns of the gentleman from New York. I look forward to working with him but must offer the amendment at this time to save these jobs.

Mr. LENT. Well, may I inquire of the gentleman whether he is going to persist with the amendment as it is written with the 6-month delay period in it?

□ 1620

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Well, if the gentleman from New York would indicate to me in what fashion he would like to see the amendment altered, I would be willing to attempt to accommodate him.

Mr. LENT. Well, my understanding is that the present site, I guess it is in Bristol, PA——

Mr. KOSTMAYER. That is correct.

Mr. LENT. Right now is inadequate for the purposes that Amtrak would like to use it because of its present location. Apparently, certain equipment that is used for track laying and track rehabilitation of the railroad has to be shipped an inordinately long distance into Bristol, PA. Moreover, Amtrak needs an indoor facility to perform this maintenance and, therefore, the facility at Bristol is inadequate.

I just wanted to voice those objections to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. This would be the very subject of the study which I am asking for, and all I am simply asking for is that this matter be studied. I am sure they would be seriously considered in the study which would take place and which we would receive back by March 1, 1985.

Mr. LENT. Well, I just wanted the record to note the objections of Amtrak to the 6-month delay that would be involved with the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KOSTMAYER].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LUKEN

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUKEN: At the end of the bill, insert the following new section:

RAIL SAFETY FUNDING AND IMPROVEMENT

SEC. 11. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the transactions described in the amendment made by subsection (b) will increase the availability of funds for rail safety purposes; and

(2) the transactions described in the amendment made by subsection (b) will result in significant improvements in rail safety nationwide, and more particularly in the Cincinnati area especially with respect to grade crossing safety.

(b) The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 215. RAIL SAFETY FUNDING AND IMPROVEMENT.

"(a)(1) In order to increase the availability of funds for rail safety purposes and to improve the safety of railroad operations, the Secretary, upon being notified by the Consolidated Rail Corporation (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Corporation") that the Corporation has entered into an agreement for the sale of the lands described in subsection (c), out of the proceeds of which sale the Corporation will transfer to the Secretary $1,500,000 for disposition under this subsection, shall, within 5 days after such notice, request that the Administrator of General Services convey to the Corporation all right, title, and interest of the United States to such lands. The Administrator shall effect such conveyance within 30 days after such a request from the Secretary.

"(2) Upon receipt of the $1,500,000 from the Corporation under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall deposit such funds in an escrow account.

"(3)(A) If, within one year after the establishment of the escrow account under paragraph (2), the Corporation enters into and executes an agreement under which the lands described in subsection (b) are conveyed to the Cincinnati-Hamilton County Port Authority and under which such Port Authority pays to the Secretary $325,000, the Secretary shall, within 30 days after the execution of such agreement, transfer from the escrow account to the Corporation $1,500,000, to be used by the Corporation for the improvement of rail safety, and shall deposit any accumulated interest thereon, plus the $325,000 received from the Port Authority under this subparagraph, into a Rail Safety Fund, which shall be available, to the extent provided in advance in appropriations Acts, for rail safety purposes as authorized under section 214.

"(B) If, upon the expiration of one year after the establishment of the escrow account under paragraph (2), the corporation has not executed an agreement described in subparagraph (A), all funds in the escrow account shall be deposited in the Rail Safety Fund established under such subparagraph.

"(b) The lands referred to in subsection (a), to be conveyed to the Cincinnati-Hamilton County Port Authority, are located partly in section 4, township 3, fractional range 1 M.R.S. and partly in section 34, township 4, fractional range 1 M.R.S., in the city of Cincinnati, County of Hamilton, State of Ohio, more particularly described as follows:

(c) The Secretary of Transportation shall, within 2 years after the transfer of lands described in subsection (b) of the amendment made by subsection (b) of this section, submit a report to the Congress on the effect that such transfer of lands has had on the improvement of rail safety, and on the effect that the increased availability of funds resulting from the amendment made by subsection (b) of this section has had on the improvement of rail safety.

Mr. LUKEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will serve to expedite the sale of Conrail property in both Washington, DC, and Cincinnati, OH, that the Corporation has been unable to dispose of in the absence of this legislation making title to the District property clear.

Under the amendment, the Cincinnati-Hamilton County Port Authority will pay $250,000 to the Secretary of Transportation for use in the Department's rail safety programs.

With the conveyance of the Cincinnati property to the port authority, there will be development of a currently abandoned rail yard; this should result in revitalization of the riverfront. This particular location is the last major site of its kind with both water and highway access. Development of the property, under plans of the authority, will be designed to maximize the number of jobs created. This is an important part of the community's efforts to reduce the unemployment that has plagued the Midwest during the recession. We are looking to create permanent jobs.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUKEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I have reviewed this amendment. It is acceptable, and I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. LUKEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUKEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, the minority has reviewed this amendment, and we thank the gentleman for his cooperation in renegotiating some of the numbers in the amendment. We have no objections to the amendment.

Mr. LUKEN. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. YOUNG OF FLORIDA

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YOUNG of Florida: At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

RESUMPTION OF SERVICE

SEC. 11. Section 404(f) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 564(f)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Within 30 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1984, the National Railroad Passenger Corporation shall reinstitute rail passenger service between Tampa, Florida, and Saint Petersburg, Florida, as such service was in operation as of January 1, 1984."

Mr. YOUNG of Florida (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this is the same amendment that Chairman FLORIO placed in the previous Amtrak authorization bill. I have checked with the gentleman and with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT], and I understand they have no objection.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. This is the same amendment that was previously accepted by the House?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Yes, it is.

Mr. FLORIO. I have no problem with the amendment.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. I just wanted the gentleman to clarify for me that this is the exact same language as was incorporated in the Amtrak bill, H.R. 3648, which passed the House in March 1984?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. That is correct. This amendment dealing with the safe, efficient rail service was adopted by this House with no opposition of any kind.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YOUNG].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GLICKMAN

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GLICKMAN: At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

TRACK AND ROADBED STUDY

SEC. 11. The Secretary of Transportation shall study and report to the Congress, within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, a comparison of levels of investment by the railroad industry in track and roadbed maintenance and modernization and its impact on rail safety before and after the enactment of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980.

Mr. GLICKMAN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would just require the Secretary of Transportation to study and report to Congress a comparison of levels of investment by the railroad industry and track and roadbed maintenance and modernization and its impact on rail safety before and after the enactment of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980.

I think the Congress needs to know exactly what the investment of the railroads in track and equipment was before deregulation and afterwards, all to deal with the issues of rail safety.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. The gentleman's amendment is very valuable, it will be a very valuable tool for the Congress, particularly next year as we look at the Staggers Act, and I commend the gentleman for his amendment and I support it.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am going to support the gentleman's amendment. I just wanted to clarify that this amendment simply requires the Secretary of Transportation to conduct a study comparing the levels of investment by the railroad industry in tract and roadbed maintenance and modernization prior to and after deregulation and that this report must be completed in 180 days after enactment; is that correct?

Mr. GLICKMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman. I think it is a good amendment. Now, thanks to the success of the Reagan economic recovery program, so many rail carriers are starting to get back on their feet financially. It is only appropriate that we discern if deregulation has enhanced rail safety through increased investment in track and roadbed.

I want to thank the gentleman for his amendment.

Mr. GLICKMAN. This gentleman is not going to make a qualitative judgment as to what the cause of the accidents are or the decline in accidents until the report comes in, but he appreciates the comments of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. The gentleman does recognize, does he not, that the rail industry has realized a resurgence of activity in the last 4 years since deregulation?

Mr. GLICKMAN. Clearly, derailments are down. We do not know for sure if they are down because of increased revenues. Some of that may be down because of abandonments. But I think it is useful to know how much the railroads are plowing into track and maintenance before and after Staggers, and a lot of this may help us decide what kind of legislation we want in the future on rail safety related issues.

So I appreciate the gentleman's comments.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman for this amendment. It is quite obvious that people in many parts of the country, in my State, in my district, will be interested in the information generated by the study that the gentleman would require through this amendment. I thank him for his effort.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I appreciate the comments of my colleague from the north in Nebraska.

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Glickman amendment to H.R. 5585, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act.

This amendment will require the Department of Transportation to study the impact of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980 on investment in rail track and roadbed maintenance and moderinization for the purpose of determining the safety implications of this investment or lack thereof.

In my congressional district we have had a number of close calls due to train derailments. For example, on April 3, 1983, a Norfolk & Western freight train derailed at Matewan, WV, which is in Mingo County.

According to a report filed by the National Transportation Safety Board, while moving on the main track in Matewan at a speed of only 35 m.p.h., the 5th and 6th locomotive units and 1st through 15th cars derailed. One damaged tank car contained the highly toxic and corrosive chemical acetic anhydride which leaked from the car.

Due to this chemical spill, 45 families were evacuated. As reported by a local newspaper:

Homes are bunched only 50 feet from the tracks. The narrow valley would hold poison fumes like a bowl. A tank car explosion between the mountainsides would be like a grenade in a barracks. If the chemical spill had been major instead of minor, the toll would have been far worse than eye burns for firefighters and the evacuation for 45 families.

But this was not the first train accident at this spot. Two Norfolk & Western trains derailed at the same place in the last 2 years. Obviously, these derailments are being caused by bad track.

I would offer another example of unsafe track. It has been brought to my attention by the United Mine Workers of America that employees at a coal preparation plant in Logan County, WV, are concerned for their safety due to the condition of the tracks at the site. This unsafe condition, according to the union, involves high and low joints, rotten ties, missing spikes, missing bolts, and defective switches.

The mineworkers have informed me that there have been numerous derailments in Logan County due to poor track maintenance. At least one serious injury and one fatality have occurred due to a defective derail switch. I have urged the Federal Railroad Administration to investigate this matter and am waiting for that agency's report.

It is with these examples in mind that I find great merit in the Glickman amendment. We gave the railroads a great deal of freedom in the Staggers Rail Act with the hope that the level of service to shippers would be improved. It was also our desire that the Nation's railroads would see fit to invest in improving rail track. The findings of the study suggested by this amendment will be of great interest to all of us concerned with railroad safety. I urge the adoption of this amendment.●

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BEREUTER

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEREUTER: At the end of the bill, insert the following new section:

EMPLOYEE PROTECTION

SEC. 11. Section 106(c) of the Rock Island Railroad Transition and Employee Assistance Act (45 U.S.C. 1005(c)) is amended by striking out "1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "1985".

Mr. BEREUTER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment merely extends the deadline 1 year for the payment of benefits under the Rock Island Railroad Transition and Employment Assistance Act. The same language was included in H.R. 3648, the Amtrak Improvement Act of 1983. This additional extension of time will permit the Railroad Retirement Board to correct some of its internal errors which denied benefits to a small but significant number of people across the United States and their surviving spouses. It is for that reason that this amendment is offered. It is necessary.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEREUTER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman for his leadership in offering this amendment. I rise in strong support of it.

This amendment adds a provision which is identical to one that had been inserted in H.R. 3648, the Amtrak Improvement Act of 1983, which, as was indicated during the earlier colloquy, passed the House in March 1984.

This amendment really seeks to right an injustice against a number of widows, particularly the widow of a Rock Island Railroad employee, who, because of an error on the part of the Railroad Retirement Board, was denied benefits she would otherwise have been entitled to but for the artificial deadline of April 1984. Is that correct?

Mr. BEREUTER. That is correct. One lady from Fairbury, NE, whose complete and fully eligible application was admittedly mishandled by the Railroad Retirement Board, will be particularly grateful to have that error corrected.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman, and I endorse the amendment.

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the gentleman for his support and assistance.

This might well be entitled "The Amendment for the Eleven Widows."

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEREUTER. I yield to the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to support this very desirable amendment.

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the chairman. I appreciate the assistance of the chairman of the subcommittee, and that of both the ranking minority members of the subcommittee and the full committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

□ 1630

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr.

LUKEN] having assumed the chair, Mr. WEAVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5585) to authorize appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 562, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 5585

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 5585, the Clerk be authorized to correct section numbers, punctuation, and cross references and to make such other technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the actions of the House in amending that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous matter therein, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Is that debate to take place the first order of business on Tuesday, or is that to take place after the consideration of the eight suspensions?

Mr. WEAVER. It will be the first order of business on Tuesday. I will make the point that the House will adjourn on Wednesday afternoon for Rosh Hashanah and will convene the following Friday.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that there was a possibility that we might adjourn, be adjourning early on Wednesday because of the nature of the holiday. Is that the fact?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. WEAVER. I am delighted to tell the gentleman that that is the case. The House will adjourn at 3 o'clock on Wednesday.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1984

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon at Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1984, TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1841, NATIONAL PRODUCTIVITY AND INNOVATION ACT OF 1984

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight Friday, September 21, 1984, to file a conference report on the Senate bill (S. 1841) to promote research and development, encourage innovation, stimulate trade, and make necessary and appropriate amendments to the antitrust, patent, and copyright laws.

This is the joint research and development bill, Mr. Speaker, and the minority has been consulted and has given its permission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

UNFULFILLED PROMISES OF SUPPLY-SIDE ECONOMICS, NO. 3—WHEN DEBT EXPLODES

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, when Ronald Reagan became President he blamed Congress and his predecessors for the nearly $1 trillion in public debt they had accumulated. "This trillion dollar figure," he said, "can stand as a monument to the policies of the past—policies, which as of today, are reversed."

Later this month Ronald Reagan is going to ask this Congress to raise the limit on the amount he can borrow to finance the astronomical deficits required to finance his programs.

That, debt limit will be the highest in the history of this country.

In fact, by the end of this present term, Ronald Reagan will have doubled the national debt. Stated differently, the deficits accumulated under Ronald Reagan's leadership will actually exceed all the deficits of all the Presidents from George Washington to Jimmy Carter.

Mr. Speaker, today I submit for the RECORD, the third in a series of eight articles entitled "Unfilled Promises of Supply Side Economics" written by Leland DuVall of the Arkansas Gazette. Today's article is entitled: "When Debt Explodes." It is a frightening commentary on the impact of the massive Reagan deficits, particularly in terms of their long-range implications for the world economy and the economic future in which our children will live.

[From the Arkansas Gazette, Sept. 11, 1984]

WHEN DEBT EXPLODES

(By Leland DuVall)

Several months into his term, President Reagan had the dubious honor of signing a bill that lifted the nation's debt ceiling to $1,079,800,000,000. That 13-digit number required to express the public obligation dramatized the need for the kind of fiscal responsibility Mr. Reagan had been preaching since 1954 when his agent sold his services to General Electric for a reported salary of $125,000.

For the benefit of those who may not remember, the GE assignment required Mr. Reagan to assume the role of a corporate homiletic who denounced the evils of big government and praised the virtues of big business. Since, in an earlier incarnation, Mr. Reagan had been known as a "liberal" and had even supported the policies of the New Deal, there are those who believe he saw converted by the eloquence of his message and the power of his own preaching.

The signing cermony when the debt ceiling was raised provided an opportunity to strike a blow for what he called his "New Beginning."

"The trillion-dollar debt figure," Mr. Reagan said, "can stand as a monument to the policies of the past that brought it about—policies which, as of today, are reversed."

He used the occasion to criticize past administrations that "have failed to come close" to their budget targets.

"Those times are over," he said.

When someone mentioned that interest rates were high, Mr. Reagan took the cue and explained the reason.

"We will bring down interest rates," he said, "when we bring down inflation and when we get government out of the financial markets and end excessive public borrowing."

The Federal Reserve was not to blame for the high cost of borrowing.

"Interest rates," he said, "reflect the simple truth of the marketplace where the government completes with private borrowers to finance its trillion-dollar debt. The government is taking too great a percentage of the money that is available."

According to Mr. Reagan's analysis, which happens to be correct, one consequence of heavy government borrowing is higher interest rates.

Our monetary system obligates the "independent" Federal Reserve to exercise some undetermined amount of influence over the supply of lendable funds. In recent years, a deep concern over the threat of inflation has been a major factor in the equation by which the Federal Open Market Committee, the policy-making arm of the central bank, calculates the rate it will allow the money supply to grow. The expansion, at a given time, established the total amount of credit that will become available through the supervised lending institutions.

Mr. Reagan was making the point that when the government came in for a large share of the lendable funds, the private borrowers had to scramble for the remainder. The process exerts upward pressure on interest rates.

His analysis hinted (also correctly) at the influence inflation was having on interest rates. Back in 1981, the "Theory of True Interest Rates" was popular with lenders. They argued that the anticipation of inflation was an essential factor in determining the cost of credit. The people who made loans simply had to take into account the declining value of the dollar. Therefore, nominal interest was the "true" rate, traditionally about 3 per cent, plus the anticipated rate of inflation.

Interest rates would come down, Mr. Reagan said, when inflation was brought under control and when the government took smaller portions of lendable funds.

The Consumer Price Index has been rising at a more moderate rate for the last couple of years, but "true" interest rates are at a near-record level. Part of the explanation has to be the fact that the government is coming into the market each year for amounts ranging up to almost $200 billion.

Mr. Reagan has not delivered on his promise to reverse the policies that expanded the public debt. In fact, a single year (fiscal 1983) produced a deficit that exceeded the total of all deficits accummulated in the four years of the Carter administration.

The credit market has not yet felt the full impact of the Reagan deficits. Demand from the private sector was modest while the economy wallowed through the longest and one of the deepest recessions of the postwar period, meaning the government had much of the field to itself. Now the recovery that began early in 1983 is changing the picture.

Consumers borrowed moderately at first, but in recent months their segment of the credit supply has been setting records.

Business loans at the large commercial banks remained low and stable through the recession and almost a year into the recovery. They rose modestly during the winter—from about $215 billion in October to about $220 billion at the end of January—then shot up to $245 billion.

With all three of the principal borrowers—government, business, and consumers—going into the market to finance the recovery, the cost of borrowing has been inching upward, despite Mr. Reagan's complaint about behavior in the marketplace. Now he's changed his explanation: the people "out there" simply refuse to believe he has brought inflation under control.

But he was right the first time. The string of large budget deficits, now projected to continue through the remainder of the decade, has the effect of providing a "price support" for interest rates. By indirection, this contributes to the rising cost of carrying the debt.

The total public debt, as of August 17, was $1.57 trillion, or an increase of $400 billion over the limit authorized when Mr. Reagan signed his first bill to raise the ceiling. All of this growth was posted after Mr. Reagan promised that policies contributing to the trillion-dollar debt "as of today, are reversed."

Interest on the public debt, through the first nine months of this fiscal year, was $117 billion. The high cost of borrowing—maintained, in part, by a strong demand from the public sector—and the need to go to the market for huge amounts make the cost of carrying the debt one of the fastest-growing items in the federal budget. Economists are free to speculate on when—1985 or 1987—the cost of servicing our public debt will match a $200 billion deficit.

Those who claim a government "should be run like a business" are certain to be disturbed over the prospect of having to borrow in order to pay interest on the debt. In the private sector, that road would lead to bankruptcy.

One unanticipated consequence of the exploding debt can be found in the world currency exchange. The dollar, boosted by the high interest rates needed to move new securities, has emerged as the favored investment instrument of the industrial world.

Now, a "strong dollar" can be a mixed blessing. It generates a measure of pride among patriots, who feel justified in waving the flag and proclaiming the virtues of a free-enterprise economy. Investors in Europe and the petroleum exporting countries, attracted by favorable interest rates, park their money in government securities and, in the process, help underwrite the growing debt. The role of the dollar as the world's reserve currency is unchallenged.

The exchange rate also influences the movement of goods in the world market. A dollar that buys 250 yen or 2.9 marks invites the Japanese and West Germans to flood the United States with their goods.

A 15 per cent swing in the relative value of the dollar and the yen—and the change since 1980 has been considerably greater than that—translates into a $900 "advantage" in the price of an "average" Japanese automobile delivered in this country. The difference is in the currency exchange, rather than in the "cost" of producing the car.

More often than not, the rise in imports is explained by the statement that Japanese workers are more efficient than Americans; therefore, the manufacturers can sell their cars cheaper. A more detailed explanation can be found only if we look at the interest rate structure that has made the dollar a desirable investment vehicle.

Finally, the most complex—and, potentially, the most dangerous—aspect of the high interest rate structure could be the destabilizing influence on the international debt.

Developing countries, the so-called Third World, are struggling under a debt sometimes estimated in the range of $800 billion. Some of the borrowers, particularly in Latin America, have experienced difficulty in making interest payments and, in the process, keeping their notes from going delinquent.

Banks in the United States and around the world are heavy lenders. Something could be said about the wisdom of making the loans in the first place, a question that could be debated interminably. But it's unarguable that high interest rates in the U.S. increase the likelihood of default because the rates offered the third world countries are often tied to indicators like the U.S. prime rate or the London Interbank Offered Rate.

Economists and bankers can only speculate what might happen if the debtor nations refused to repay their loans.

Mr. Reagan's intentions were honorable when he dedicated the trillion-dollar debt ceiling to "the policies of the past that brought it about." His promise to reverse the policies "as of today" cannot be dismissed as campaign rhetoric, since it was made in the first year of his term.

What he did was to invite a budget disaster with, among other things, a misguided tax policy that virtually guaranteed an explosion of the national debt.

ELECTION OF WALTER MONDALE WOULD GUARANTEE IMMINENT ECONOMIC DISASTER

(Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 5 minutes.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, when Walter Mondale released his budget plan last week, he confirmed what the American people have been led to believe all along. As President, he will return this country to the disasterous economic policies of the previous administration. Mr. Mondale is asking America to throw away the economic progress we have made in the past 3½ years, and return to an era of high inflation, high interest rates, and high unemployment.

Mr. Mondale's plan for increased taxes will take us no closer to our goal of a reduced Federal deficit. His figures are based on unrealistic assumptions which have already been proven faulty. His budget calls for $85 billion in new taxes which amounts to almost $1,000 per household. Of course, this figure will be greatly inflated once he succeeds in eliminating tax indexing, due to go into effect in January 1985. Tax indexing is an essential ingredient in our efforts to maintain a higher standard of living for all American workers. But it only gives nightmares to the big spenders in Washington.

Eventually, the overall tax burden will be carried on the backs of middle-income Americans. Although Mr. Mondale denies this, the facts are clear. According to the Congressional Budget Office, only about 15 percent of all income is taxed at rates above the $35,000 level. Additionally, corporations and wealthy Americans, at whom the tax increases are targeted, will simply lower their taxable incomes by hiding their money in tax-sheltered devices. In turn, tax revenues, investment capital, and industrial productivity will decline while lower- and middle-income Americans will be forced to pick up the tab through higher inflation, higher unemployment, and higher interest rates.

But how much of the Federal deficit can actually be reduced under the Mondale plan? According to Mr. Mondale, every cent that is raised in new taxes will be placed in a trust fund solely for the purpose of deficit reduction. However, in the same breath, he proposes $30 billion worth of new programs. That leaves a deficit reduction of $57 billion. He then claims a $17 billion savings from higher economic growth. This is highly unrealistic. The economy is currently expanding at a record pace, thanks to the 1981 tax cuts. Mondale's proposed tax increases would inevitably bring the economic recovery to a screeching halt because a tax increase only absorbs capital from private credit markets that is needed for continued industrial expansion and individual borrowing, which are necessary to maintain economic growth. As a result, the demand for limited resources will cause interest rates and inflation to rise, while suffocating the economic recovery. That now leaves $40 billion in supposed deficit reduction.

Mr. Mondale also claims an additional savings of $51 billion from lower interest rate payments on the national debt. But how much can actually be saved by a policy which initially brought about 21.5 percent interest rates? To tidy up the figures a bit, he proposes savings of: $12 billion from reductions in Government health care costs through a cost-containment program—imposing much stricter Government regulations, on the health care industry; $4 billion through cuts in farm price supports made necessary through an improved farm economy—this would entail a doubling of commodity exports, which in turn, would engulf an already flooded world agriculture market, sending prices plummeting; $5 billion through better Government management—he can't even manage his own campaign; and $8 billion through cuts in discretionary spending—assuming Congress would be willing to part with such a powerful political tool.

When you add Mondale's false savings to the $176 billion needed for him to keep his hidden campaign promises, over $200 billion a year in new taxes will be required to meet his goal of a two-thirds reduction in the Federal deficit. This equals a tax hike of at least $1,890 per household. It is shocking that Mr. Mondale continually fails to recognize the need to reduce Government spending. It is the only way to get a handle on the enormous Federal deficit. However, this would require fiscal disipline on the part of Congress, which is under increasingly intense pressure to take positive action. The election of Walter Mondale as President would only take Congress off the hook, and guarantee an imminent economic disaster.

CURRENT POLITICAL PHILOSOPHIES ERRORS TO RESULT IN POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC CRISIS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PAUL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I have a deep concern for the direction in which our country is going. I have expressed this concern by pointing out the political and economic contradictions that surround us and have suggested that these contradictions merely are manifestations of philosophic errors made by our intellectual leaders.

Although the country currently is more or less in a euphoric mood, I am convinced the errors we are making today will eventually result in a severe political and economic crisis.

I don't believe anyone precisely knows the future, yet we all make projections as to our expectations. It's impossible to know exact events and their timing but trends are known to us and certain policies do have specific consequences. Economically definable laws do exist and cannot be repealed. For what it's worth, I would like to make a few comments about what we can expect if our current beliefs about Government's role are not changed. The odds of a significant change in attitude occurring in Washington in the near future are utterly remote. Repealing the welfare-warfare state may be popular with a growing number of frustrated American citizens, but that attitude is not yet reflected in Washington. The constituency for the monolithic state is alive and well in the U.S. Congress. When disagreement exists in areas such as welfare versus warfare; the poor versus the rich, labor versus business, compromise is always reached and both sides receive an increase in funding. This is a policy of utter folly and is tragically locked in place.

Government is literally out of control. Spending, taxes, regulations, monetary inflation, invasion of our privacy, welfareism to both the rich and the poor, military spending, and foreign adventurism around the world will one day precipitate a crisis that will truly test our will to live in a free society. If Government were not so much out of control, would not the most conservative President of the last 50 years been able to do something about the runaway deficits? The deficits have tragically only gotten very much worse under Reagan. All the problems we face, high interest rates, inflation, deficits, vicious business cycles with accelerating unemployment are serious problems indeed, but the real threat under the conditions to come will be the potential loss of our personal liberty. Without liberty, prosperity is lost and equality of poverty prevails.

We have a cancer in the land—the malignant growth of big government—and we can ignore it, treating only the symptoms, hoping they are not reliable signs that a horrible disease has struck our Nation. But if we do, we are treating our problems as some foolishly deny the early signs of cancer, by taking aspirin and hoping the pain to be only that of inconvenience and that the symptoms will go away in the morning. Instead, the pain gets worse requiring more and more narcotics to numb the pain. Magic cures are sought and tried. Although big government is the disease, attempts to solve all the problems by making government even bigger and more intrusive in our lives are continually tried. This will soon end. We cannot forever ignore the root causes. It's highly unlikely that we'll reach the 1990's without a convulsion of our economic and political system.

Although nothing goes up or down in a straight line, we can be sure the long term will bring us ever-increasing interest rates—higher with each cycle and over 20 percent before this cycle completes itself in 1986 or 1987. Without the introduction of a commodity money, one with quality—as well as limitation on its quantity—we will never see the return of long-term fixed low interest rates. The reform will come eventually, if we're to continue to have even a relatively free society. I just hope we don't wait too long.

Price inflation, although difficult to predict on a month-to-month or even year-to-year basis, will reach unbelievable heights in this decade. Currency destruction, through the insatiable desire to create massive new fiat monetary units, must eventually bring higher prices. Wage and price controls will return regardless of whether a Republican or a Democrat occupies the White House. Free market rhetoric will do nothing to protect us from the pressure the administration will receive to "do something," even if it's the wrong thing. Nixonian Keynesianism will continue to dominate, and abusive people control in the form of wage, price currency and credit controls will return; more vicious than ever before.

There will come a day that the world financiers will rush from dollars just as they have recently rushed into dollars, causing even worse chaos in the international financial markets. Without a stable monetary unit, the speculation will continue and worsen. Overreaction is now becoming more commonplace, but this is a predictable consequence of a world gone mad with fiat currencies, debt creation, and overspending.

Massive debt liquidation will come. The early stages have already started. It will occur with old-fashioned defaults, threats of deflation, and further currency destruction through monetary inflation and liquidation of debt with a depreciating dollar. Whether or not the liquidating debt collapse willl be dominated by deflation or inflation of the money supply is yet to be determined since that will depend on Government actions and many market forces. An inflationary collapse is a more likely scenario—knowing the special interest, the Congress, the administration, and the central bankers' unwillingness to face up to the reality of cutting spending, balancing the budget, and curtailing the supply of money. So in spite of all the tough talk, we can expect the Fed to accommodate and reverse any trend toward deflation.

Without a significant change in attitude by the American people and Congress as to the purpose of government, the choices are horrible; an inflationary collapse or a deflationary one. The form and timing of the collapse is yet to be determined; the event itself is certain. This crisis will come, as others have, because we refuse to face up to reality and live within our means.

The people's insatiable appetite for the goods of life without providing a commensurate amount of work and effort needed to produce them (while demanding that politicians deliver the loot) guarantees the process will continue. But a penalty will have to be paid. That penalty—a major banking, currency, economic, and political crisis—will hit this Nation and the western world, most likely before the 1990's.

The economic hardship, of which we had a taste in 1981 and 1982, will be much worse. That in itself is bad enough news, but historically, when a Nation debauches its currency international trade breaks down—today 40 percent of international trade is carried out through barter—protectionist sentiments rise—as they have in Congress already—eliciting hostile feelings with our friends. Free trade alliances break down, breeding strong feelings of nationalism, economic isolationism, and militarism—all conditions that traditionally lead to war; a likely scenario for the 1990's, unless or economic policies and attitudes regarding government are quickly changed.

Many who concede we are moving in this direction of war, carelessly believe that the lack of military spending is the problem and insist on new massive military spending as the solution. This only serves the inflationists, the internationalists, the banking elite, and industrialists who benefit from the massive manufacture of military weapons. It ignores the important fact that most military conflicts throughout history have been the consequence of economic events. Economic events, when combined with a foreign policy void of wisdom and fraught with folly, sets the stage for needless war.

Conservatives are quick to correctly point out that guns don't cause crime, criminals do, but fail to see that weapons, or the lack of massive weapons, don't cause war, politicians' bad policies do. This is a good reason why the current conservative administration should have stopped subsidizing trade and foreign assistance to the Soviet bloc nations and to Red China, which includes nuclear and military technology, instead of increasing it. This is sheer madness.

Massive military spending to stop the spread of communism which our own taxpayers are also required to finance, contributes to the economic problem of deficits, inflation, and high interest rates. In addition it justifies, in the political world of compromise, increased domestic spending, higher deficits, accelerating inflation and higher interest rates—all compounding the economic problems that started the trouble in the first place.

Depression and war are the needless consequences of politicians' folly. They are prevented by limiting government power, not by expanding it. Today, campaign rhetoric is frequently heard about balanced budgets and reducing the size of the Government; witness the success of conservatives in 1980; yet nothing ever happens. The spending, the regulations, the taxing, and the deficits continue. Time is running short, the frustration running high. Hiding from reality won't help; kidding ourselves won't do. The sooner we admit, "you can't get blood from a turnip," the better off we'll be.

SOLUTION

What is the solution?

Most importantly, a new attitude about the role of government is necessary if we expect to solve our problems. As long as we, as a nation, accept the notion that government is the ultimate provider and world policeman, implementing the elusive concept of liberty will be impossible. The degree to which governments are permitted to exert force over the people determines the extent to which individuals retain their liberty as well as the chances for peace and prosperity. Historically, governments have always initiated force against the people with disastrous results. America is the best example of what can happen if that force is restrained, thus maximizing individual freedom and prosperity. Yet today, that wonderful experiment is all but abandoned. We must once again clearly reject the idea that government force and threat of force can be carelessly administered.

Voluntary contracts must be permitted. The trend toward government dominance, interference, and altering of voluntary contracts is prevalent and a most dangerous sign. Responsibility to care for one's self is necessary for a free society to function, and trust that individuals will look out for their own self-interest, even if imperfectly, is required and should be achieved through contractual arrangements. Government interference in voluntary agreements between two parties must be strictly prohibited. Enforcement of those contracts in event of a violation, invites the government's participation in settlement of the dispute. This limited involvement of government in voluntary contracts is necessary in a free society.

The strict limitation of government power imposed by the Constitution must be respected. We must accept the principle that government's function is not to regulate and plan the economy, protect us from ourselves, arbitrarily attempt to make us better people, or police the world by interfering in the internal affairs of other nations. Its proper function in a free society is to protect liberty and provide for a common defense. When that proper role is assumed, our problems will vanish.

To bring about real changes, we first need to recognize that the politician, per se, is a lot less important than it appears. He is basically a puppet of public opinion that reflects the prevailing ideas of the intellectual and thought leaders. John Maynard Keynes, in one of his more lucid moments, said: "Practical men who believe themselves to be quite exempt from any intellectual influence, are usually the slaves of some defunct economist. Madmen in authority, who hear voices in the air, are distilling their frenzy from some academic scribbler of a few years back."

Media opinion is critical in establishing popular views just as that same media may support or destroy certain political careers. Having accepted the philosophy of economic interventionism and political pragmatism, our society grants political knighthood to the highly paid lobbyists who represent the powerful special interests. But we must remember the lobbyists are the result, not the cause, of our problems. The politician is the puppet of the opinionmakers.

Political success is the single goal that drives participants in our political system. No invitations to participants are sent to men of principle, upholders of equal rights, and defenders of the Constitution. Determined political aspirations under today's circumstances are key to achieving a successful political career—the career being an end in itself. We must be aware that this system of politics is not conducive to bringing about changes necessary to solve our problems. The legislative and political intrigues that control the system for the benefit of the special interests must one day come to an end if personal liberty is to be restored.

The resort to power to control people and the economy must be rejected. Also violence, to bring changes beneficial to liberty, serves no purpose (unless exerted in true defense under reprehensible conditions). The illicit use of power, even with noble intentions, has created history's dung heap of human misery. True change will come through persuasive intellectual influence. If the people refuse to listen, mere recording of significant movements in history will be the limited result of the effort. Yet, not making the effort to persuade the thought leaders to accept freedom and total nonviolence of the state, guarantees that the perpetuation of organized force—the tyranny of the state—will flourish and the suffering will continue for all of us.

Ideas do count; all government action is a result of ideas. It's incorrect to suggest that freedom ideas must be rejected because they are idealistic—the planned economy is also a result of an idea. It's only a choice between good and bad ideas. The job of the true believer in liberty is to convince the majority of our leaders that freedom ideas are superior to the ideas of government coercion. Never can we relax by hoping that the good intentions of the big government proponents will protect us from the evils of government power that intimidate us all. All politicians, from total statists—Marxists and Fascists—to average conservatives and liberals of today's Congress, devoutly promise that all their actions are based on good intentions. But it doesn't matter: Bad ideas regarding the nature and role of government breed bad results and suffering occurs nevertheless. Twisted logic, Machiavellian justifications, excuse making, and shortrun benefits can never justify the removel of one iota of liberty from any one person if we intend to live in a free society.

Once the role of government is agreed upon, and government initiation of force is rejected as a legitimate function, the consequences will quickly occur—all positive.

Individuals will reclaim their moral and natural right to their lives and liberty as granted to them by the Creator. The state will be put in its proper place as the protector of equal rights, not the usurper. That in itself should be enough reason to institute a system of limited government, but the benefits go far beyond the moral justification of true liberty. Prosperity will abound and the chance for war will be greatly reduced.

If this is done, the welfare-warfare state is repealed and spending by the Federal Government reduced by 80 percent. Special interest politicians will not be served and will vanish. Lobbyists will become mere petitioners for liberty. The budget will be immediately balanced and the debt repaid. No more wealth will be transferred to the poor, the rich, the foreigner, the bankers, or the arms manufacturers. Military spending will once again be used for defense and not for the domination of an unofficial American empire.

Money will be honest, the unit precisely defined, and its integrity guaranteed by government or by voluntary contracts. Counterfeiting privileges of the Fed will be abolished and relegated to notorious underground figures. Honest money will allow credit to be freely created in the market and not by the privileged banking cartel, yet controlled by the integrity of the market and the convertibility of the dollar. The economic benefits of low-long-term fixed interest rates will be welcomed by all, since credit can then fuel true long-term economic growth.

This scenario sounds utopian, yet it's more practical than the ill effects of the planned society financed by fiat money and debt creation. It's difficult to understand the persistence in following the impractical ideas of runaway government coercion.

The philosophy of the free market, sound money, private property ownership and equal rights, offers the only real "compromise" to the impasse existing in Washington where only token attempts are made to cut the deficit. A truly practical approach to this dilemma can be immediately implemented. I suggest six points:

First, instead of debating forever over whether or not the cuts should be made in domestic welfare or military spending, the answer is simple: Cut both, and quit arguing—that is, if anyone is serious about his declared hostility toward massive deficits.

Second, all votes on spending should be tradeoffs. Welfare to the poor versus welfare to the rich; domestic aid versus foreign aid; aid to friends versus aid to Communists; water projects in the United States versus water projects in Africa; subsidized loans for steel plants in the United States versus those in South America. Sure, many projects will still exist inconsistent with a truly free market but these projects would only be financed by dropping expenditures elsewhere.

Third, centralized planning fails everywhere else so we can expect it to fail with centralized control over bank credit. Sound money, and breaking up the credit/bank cartel, will solve the problem of high interest rates and long-term financing.

Fourth, talks with the Soviets need not stop—only be redirected. But all subsidies to all Communists must end. We can discuss ways to enhance free trade and voluntary cultural exchanges. True friendly unsubsidized relations with even the apparent enemy go a long way toward reducing the chances of war. A nonaggressive purely defensive foreign policy which would prompt troop and missile withdrawals from Europe and elsewhere would be actions much stronger than all the political rhetoric heard surrounding disarmament conferences.

Fifth, equal rights must be guaranteed and enforced regardless of circumstances of race, color, or creed. Equal rights cannot, however, be defined vaguely to include demands on another's life or property. The goal of freedom must surpass our obsession with material wealth and its forced redistribution.

Sixth, prosperity with freedom for the individual is the only humanitarian system ever offered that prevented mass starvation and suffering. Refusal to accept the free market based on a natural rights philosophy is the most impractical thing we can do. A system that provides sound money, low interest rates, the removal of the bankers' monopoly over credit, and peace and prosperity will restore trust in the politicians, the money, the future, and in ourselves.

More government cannot possibly offer the solution to the problems we face. Big government is the cause; freedom is the answer.

TAX REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. HEFTEL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, this evening there is an opportunity for at least five of our Members to speak to the people on C-SPAN in a way that lets the public know that there are those of us who do not think of our service in Congress as partisan Democrats or as Republicans, but rather as Members of Congress endeavoring to solve problems with practical solutions as concerned Americans. One of the issues that I would like to start the dialog with today is the concept of tax reform. It has been suggested that all our tax structure is unfair, that it discriminates between classes of people and that all we have to do to achieve a balanced budget is reform our tax system.

The truth of the matter is that almost everyone has figured out how to participate in the so-called exclusions, exemptions, and loopholes that exist in the Tax Code. It is not just the so-called wealthy.

As an example, all the fringe benefits which accrue to some 50 or 60 percent of our people are judged to be loopholes by those who talk about tax reform. Therefore, the moment that we institute a tax reform program, those who now have fringe benefits will find that they are treated as cash income and therefore will be taxed.

I bring this out because we must all face the fact that the deficit will not be eliminated by tax reform. If ever we are going to resolve the problem of Federal deficits, we will only do it when we cut expenses and increase revenues.

□ 1710

And increased revenues means increased taxes.

One of the things we wanted to accomplish tonight as a first step in demonstrating to you, the people, that there are those of us who are working together as Members of the Congress for the benefit of the Nation, not as partisan Democrats or Republicans.

Now, I would like to yield the floor to my colleague from Cincinnati, Mr. BILL GRADISON, who is a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GRADISON. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I commend him for putting together this important series of special orders on what I consider the most pressing problems facing our country.

I am especially grateful for the bipartisan manner in which these important discussions have been set up. We have only to look at recent history to gleen the importance and absolute necessity of bipartisanship.

This year Congress passed and the President signed into law the Deficit Reduction Act. In my judgment this legislation did not go far enough but it did defy the conventional wisdom which only a few months before held that Congress and the White House were incapable of a major assault on the deficit in an election year. Fortunately the conventional wisdom was wrong.

In testimony last week before the Joint Economic Committee, Congressional Budget Office Director Penner said that the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 "has nearly stabilized the deficit for the next several years at 5 percent of gross national product." Without the Deficit Reduction Act the deficit would have continued on its relentless path of taking increasingly larger chunks out of the national product.

The Deficit Reduction Act is a significant first step in what will prove a long, difficult road to a balanced budget. But while it is significant, it is still only a first step. We must not gloat over our accomplishment. Deficits that are 5 percent of gross national product are much too high.

Without significant reductions in spending or increases in revenues, as the gentleman from Hawaii has indicated, next year's total deficit will continue to be extremely high, probably greater than $190 billion, including off budget and on budget items. The possibility of such huge deficits has created an uproar nationwide, as well it should. Fifteen straight years of deficit spending have been disastrous for our economy, and the prospect of continued high deficits can only bode ill for future economic conditions.

When the Government runs a deficit it is forced to borrow money by selling securities. Depending on who buys those securities, deficit spending results in higher inflation, higher interest rates, or some combination of both.

If Government securities are sold to private investors they compete directly with the securities sold by private businesses that are trying to raise capital for investment. This competition in the capital markets drives up interest rates.

If the securities are sold to the Federal Reserve the debt is monetized; in effect the Fed prints money to pay for the deficit. Financing the deficit in this way ameliorates an increase in short-term interest rates but tends to cause higher long-term rates and lead to higher inflation.

In the past few years the Fed has tried to control inflation first by slowing and then stabilizing the growth of the money supply and has generally avoided monetizing the debt. As a result, inflation has dropped.

At the same time, however, interest rates have risen because the Government must borrow huge amounts from the private capital market at a time of robust economic recovery which is to say at a time when the private sector is also bidding for funds in the same capital market.

There is a school of thought that argues for no link between deficits and interest rates. I belong to a different school. Though I appreciate the analytical difficulties of proving empirically association between deficits, or debt levels, and interest rates, there is little doubt from basic theoretical considerations that such a link exists.

But even if we were to assume away this link there is reason enough to fret over deficits. One need only look at the enormous implications associated with servicing a Federal debt of the size that looms on the economic horizon.

To draw again from Dr. Penner's recent testimony, "not since World War II have current and projected structural deficits been as large as they are now relative to GNP, and never before has the outlook been for steady increases in the Federal debt relative to GNP during a period in which GNP growth is projected to exceed the long run, full employment growth rate."

Mr. Speaker, that is a rather ominous thought. I don't go looking for dismal thoughts from the Dismal Science, but my study of this topic leads me again and again to confirm the gravity of the situation. I would like nothing better than for someone to show me the error in the logic of the Congressional Budget Office.

Some of the solutions that have been proposed simply do not add up to a full solution. For example, tax reform, which was mentioned earlier by the gentleman from Hawaii, is too often confused with revenue increases. This "t'ain't" necessarily so. Tax reform could well be revenue neutral, but if history is any guide, tax reform will have to be "bought" with tax cuts, thereby making the deficit even larger.

The line-item veto, as I have noted before, cannot be considered as a likely weapon in the arsenal of budget cutting tools.

In my judgment the line item veto would lead to more, not less spending and would in the process wreak havoc on the principal of separation of power which has worked well for over 200 years.

Nor can the balanced budget amendment, which I support, be more than a push in the right direction.

Finally, those who look to economic growth as the answer to the deficit problem are hard put to convince this Member that their numbers match their rhetoric.

When all is said and done we are left with a stark reality: The deficit will not go away even in the face of strong, persistant economic growth; a balanced budget amendment would help but would not by itself do the job; the line item veto would probably have the perverse result of increasing the deficit.

We are left with what I consider to be the principal lesson of the Grace Commission study: the way to reduce spending is to cut and eliminate programs and change existing policies. There is no reason to let up on ferreting out waste, fraud, and abuse, but truly significant spending cuts can only result from deliberate decisions to cut programs, programs which exist today because at one time, if not now, they were deemed good policy by the Congress and the White House.

Yet this path, too, is insufficient. The political reality is that we will not make significant progress on the deficit without increased revenues. It is a classic quid pro quo. If those who decry reducing the deficit only by spending cuts and those who decry reducing the deficit only by tax increases fail to come together the problem will grow as they take the political low road by declaring victory to their constituents. They win; but the country loses.

Mr. Speaker, again I wish to thank the gentleman from Hawaii for his efforts. Both sides of the aisle must continue to work together and carry forth the spirit that enabled us to make that first step through the Deficit Reduction Act earlier this year.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON].

The Members joining with me this evening are: BILL FRENZEL, a Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee from Minnesota, and in the Chair serving as Speaker pro tempore, CHARLES STENHOLM from the great State of Texas. Our rules of the House do not make it possible for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] to participate with us while he is in the Chair, but we will do some rotating so that he can come on the floor and speak with us also.

But I would like now to yield to my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I thank him also for making an arrangement so that we could discuss the difficulties that we find our country and ourselves in in these times.

Speakers whom I have heard on this floor talking to empty seats and full Houses both have decried the deficit. National polls seem to indicate that most Americans think the deficit is the No. 1 problem and yet day after day after day we see the Congress refusing to react to the deficit problem.

To me there is no magic in it. I do not believe that we will deal with it in other terms than reducing spending.

Certainly we have plenty of spending to reduce. One need not cut back anything. Indeed the last 7 years, as I have computed them, show average increases in our Federal spending at the rate of between 10 and 11 percent. Obviously that exceeds the cost-of-living increases over the years. If we were merely to limit spending increases to the total cost of living we could shave $60 billion off the budget today. But, of course, we are unwilling to do that because all of us have a favorite element of the budget, whether it be national security, domestic discretionary spending, or entitlement programs. Whatever it is, none of us is willing to let his or her little share of the pie be touched. "Our section must be increased." As a result everybody's section is increased.

The way the Congress tends to discriminate is to give everyone his or her project and to give everyone his or her increase in spending because that is the only way "I can get my project or my increase in spending." The result has been, in my judgment obscene and outrageous increases which have taken us into the position noted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON] where we have deficits as the largest proportion ever of the GNP, where we have interest at the largest proportion ever, and a growing proportion of the Federal budget, and where we have deficits growing over the next 5 years at a time of almost unprecedented national prosperity. At least we have estimated for our own convenience that the next 5 years will be unprecedented economic prosperity. All of the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject have lectured at length on the kinds of ways that we can reduct the deficit. To me cutting back spending is the first and only choice.

There are lots of other things that we have invented, balanced-budget amendment. Now I am a sponsor of that amendment. On the other hand it seems very presumptuous to think that we can get two-thirds of a vote in Congress for something we cannot get half; that is to begin to cut back.

Now I would prefer to restore the power of impoundment or the line-item veto. On the other hand those never influenced a great deal of discipline in the past but were simply a very small-gauge tool in the overall scheme of things.

Like the gentleman from Ohio I believe the Grace Commission gave us a good blueprint. Unfortunately the suggestions of the Grace Commission were somewhat overstated and they are difficult policy decisions that will take Congress a while to work its way through. But I think it can be said that it is a good diagram for us and we did not do it justice in giving it consideration, particularly with respect to the largest item in it, that is reform of the Federal pension system which, according to the Grace Commission, would have developed about a quarter of all of the savings in that particular report.

With respect to taxes, if I were the king or the emperor, taxes would not be increased as part of any deficit-reduction program. But this is a world in which we have to make a majority to make some program work. In 1982, we found that we had to have a tax increase program to get anybody to talk about decreasing spending.

In 1984 the so-called downpayment on the deficit requested by the President consisted of about half tax increases.

I am not going to sit here and make an offer of how much spending it would take to cause me to accept some kind of tax increase, but I think anybody who can count heads or noses or even votes will understand that the House is going to demand some kind of tax concession to consider any kind of spending cuts in the next biennium, and therefore, I think these all have to be investigated.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with the gentleman [Mr. FRENZEL] an observation concerning this concept of tax increase. I think that it would be well for us to focus on the fact that a tax increase is only meaningful if you have a prosperous country which has enough of an economic base with which to provide the jobs necessary to make the country work. At this point in time when we have just turned the corner, with a very fragile recovery, it is not practical to think in terms of a tax increase which could curtail that economic recovery. I would appreciate the gentleman [Mr. FRENZEL] responding.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman makes an excellent point and one to which I subscribe. I do not believe in any kind of a substantial tax increase. I would prefer we did not have any, ever. But if we are going to think about packages in which taxes and spending are both involved, I think we cannot think about any kind of tax increase that is large enough so that the recovery would be threatened.

We are just completing the second year of what is either the first best or the second best recovery in the postwar period. We want that recovery to keep going. I think that is one of the very important considerations that is going to have to govern our actions next year.

If large segments of the Congress or society request extra taxes, I think we have to be particularly vigilant to see that they are not granted if they are of significant size so that the recovery will be threatened. Remember, as I know the gentleman does, that the budget figures, the deficit figures for the future, even the ones that are ascending, are based on very generous assumptions, economic assumptions of growth.

If any of those should be rolled back by a thwarting of the recovery, any kind of minirecession or even a plateau occurs, we are going to find those deficit figures ballooning even further and our spending needs will be exacerbated.

So I think the gentleman makes an excellent point with respect to taxes. But I think what we would both agree, I know the gentleman from Hawaii feels this way, is that we have to discuss these things in the most realistic manner possible. We cannot use extreme economic theories to justify growth for which there is no historical precedents that will suddenly bail us out of our troubles.

We cannot expect from tax increases to get more money if it is the kind of increase the gentleman suggests it is and it defeats economic incentive and causes a recession.

So we have to deal in the best kind of realism that we know and work the problem, as we began to do this year, with the downpayment on the deficit.

I feel that that was not the best we could do but it sure was a lot better than anything done before now.

So I hope that will be some inspiration for what must come in the future. I think the gentleman in trying to stimulate some discussion on this subject has done the House and the Republic a very good deed and I thank him for it.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that on my Democratic side of the aisle my good friend LES AUCOIN, of Oregon, has joined us. At this point, Mr. AUCOIN, we have been discussing the concept of tax reform as a myth in the manner in which it is being presented to the American people. The idea that tax reform will increase revenue and balance the budget is falacious. As a matter of fact, the tax reform proposals all claim to be revenue neutral.

□ 1730

We cannot immediately institute a tax increase because the economy has not yet recovered in fact, it has just barely turned the corner. Passing a tax increase at this time would jeopardize our fragile economic recovery. Therefore, we are going to have to accept a significant level of deficits for the balance of this decade. Therefore we must tell the American people honestly and forthrightly that the size and cost of Government must be reduced, that it will be painful, and that Democrats and Republicans must join together in telling the American people the truth.

Now, I would like to have the gentleman from Oregon join with us and I yield to Mr. AUCOIN.

Mr. AUCOIN. I would, first of all, say to my friend and colleague from Hawaii how pleased I am to join in his special order this evening. I join my other colleagues who have expressed their appreciation for the leadership he has shown in trying to take a moment to, in a bipartisan way, look at a very chronic problem that faces the economy of this country both today and in the future.

We may have our differences. I know the gentleman from Minnesota, who preceded me, and I have differed on a number of different questions, on spending issues, on revenue issues. Certainly as dear as my friend from Hawaii is to me, we do not always see eye to eye on these matters or other matters. One of the problems in a representative body like this with 435 strong wills representing 435 distinct and different geographical regions of the country is that there are very real differences.

But there really does come a point in the time of a Republic when the danger to the health of that Republic is such that we have got to find the common ground, we have got to find areas in which we bury our differences, we have got to find areas upon which we can agree and we have got to face a common threat.

I wish to say to the gentleman that the words written some time ago, by David Broder, a well-known Washington Post columnist, are very apt today for the purposes of this discussion and for the purposes of the discussions that will follow for the balance of this session of Congress and into the next. What Broder said was that if there was a foreign enemy who posed the kind of threat to this Nation that these deficits pose, and which stretch as far into the future as the eye can see, then there would be no doubt that Democrats and Republicans would stand shoulder to shoulder and face that threat.

The trouble is this threat is from within. It is a threat of lack of will. It is a threat that comes as a consequence of failing to discipline our impulses, both on the revenue side and on the spending side. Democrats and Republicans, both in the legislative and executive branch cannot escape blame for this problem. And the American people, know that, they really do know that.

If, during the balance of this election season, we see a President pointing the finger of blame to the Congress for a deficit that this year will reach over $170 billion, and in turn the Congress pointing the finger of blame back at the White House, the American people will be, I think, not very well served and certainly not be very pleased because finger pointing is not what they are looking for.

What they are looking for is solutions. They do not want people to tell them who to blame for this problem. They want to see that there is some willingness on both sides of the aisle in this Chamber and on both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue that on the questions of revenue, entitlements, discretionary domestic spending, which includes domestic and military spending that there is a willingness to give on all sides.

Unless we have that kind of statecraft, I predict that what will happen in the future is what has happened over the balance of this Congress. I am talking about a legislative gridlock where those who say we are going to balance the budget, but do not touch revenues, and those on the other side who say, these deficits are terrible, but do not do anything about entitlements, will continue to have enough political muscle to stop the other one from getting their way.

The problem with that is that it guarantees paralysis. It guarantees a continuation of a high deficit policy that will mean hundreds of billions of dollars of additional red ink each and every year into the future for—as David Stockman has said—as far as the eye can see.

I hope very much that sensible people can understand that there does need to be this level of statecraft practiced.

I have been advocating that Democrats and Republicans alike break this impasse by a bipartisan national commission, which can produce a single package representing shared sacrifices that touch each of those bases I have just named. Last year I suggested that we do this early in the session of Congress, before the election season started in order to go beyond a simple downpayment $150 billion over the next 3 years. If we had done that, I think the country would have been better served.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. I wanted to share with the gentleman an observation. I generated a resolution calling for a national bipartisan commission to address the problems of the deficit. I find that the gentleman introduced such a resolution in the Congress in 1983.

I wonder if the gentleman would share his thoughts with us about what you think the possibility is of addressing the deficit problem through the appointment of a bipartisan commission starting in 1985. Whether you think that the Presidency and the Congress would accept the mandates coming from such a commission as we did in solving the problems of the Social Security system.

Mr. AuCOIN. Well, of course, if the gentleman will yield further, it was the Social Security Commission that gives us some hope that this mechanism could work in this instance.

We all know that Presidential commissions in the past have produced reports that sit neatly on shelves and gather dust and in the past have not produced any action or results at all.

But a unique thing happened in the case of the Social Security Presidential bipartisan commission. We found that by the appointment of a blue chip commission with people from both political parties, inside and outside of the Government, that both sides of the aisle could respect, and that the decisionmakers at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue could respect, by an appointment of a commission of that kind when it then produced a single package that represented an answer to the solvency of the Social Security trust fund, there was apparently the requisite political cover, first of all, for those doubting Thomases who found certain things that they could disagree with, enough political cover for them to nevertheless go along with that package because there were more pluses than minuses in that package.

There was also a recognition that if one did not vote for the product of that particular commission, blue chip and high level as it was, then the onus was going to be on the doubting Thomases who would vote against it to come up with their own package and that they had better deliver.

Everyone, I think, recognized that that was our only chance to solve a major crisis in Social Security. The package passed. And if the gentleman will recall the Social Security solution was achieved within months. This defied predictions at the outset of the Congress that this was an issue that would in fact tie Congress up in knots for months and months and months and months.

So I would think that now that we are faced with even a greater crisis, a literal pistol aimed at the temple of this Nation's economy, with the potential of ruining perhaps as early as next spring, what exists in a recovery that is now underway, with all of the damage that that could do in terms of disruption of capital formation which we simply have got to have if we are going to make the critical investments in technology and manufacturing plant expansion, and all of the rest, to be competitive in an increasingly international marketplace, with all of those risks, I would think that a bipartisan commission producing a comparable package could produce a response on this economic crisis, and I would certainly hope that that would be the case.

I do not think it means we are for passing the buck. I think it means we have got people on both sides of the aisle who have made a series of promises to their own constituents. There are people over there on the Republican side who have said that they are going to balance the budget but they are not going to touch military spending, and they promise their constituents that. And there are people over on this side of the aisle, the Democratic side of the aisle, who said we are going to balance the budget but we are not going to touch entitlements, in any fashion whatsoever.

The problem with that is that neither of those promises can be kept. And unless we have some kind of a package in which there is shared sacrifice, in which the rate of increase in military spending is restrained, the revenue base is restored, discretionary domestic spending continues to contribute its share of the burden, and all of the other bases are tagged, we will continue to cancel each other out. However, a single package that tags all of those bases would I think, break the paralysis for this reason: Republicans and Democrats who have said to their constituents, "I will balance the budget but I will not touch military spending," can literally go back to their constituents and say, "I did not want to touch military spending I voted for this package. It had cuts in military spending. I promised you I was not going to make those cuts, but I did it because it was a part of the package which also finally came to terms with the problem of entitlements, an area of the budget which has exploded in cost by 450 percent over the last 10 years." By the same token, Members who have said entitlements are sacrosanct and have made those promises very sincerely could go back to their constituents and say, "Notwithstanding the promises I made about entitlements, we did make responsible adjustments because we had to, and at the same time, as part of the package, we were also in that bargain, able to get those who were refusing to touch a nickel of this incredible military buildup, to restrain the rate of increase in military spending."

If we can create that kind of dynamic, I think, it will be possible for Democrats and Republicans and people of all philosophies to get behind something that is essential, and that is a deficit-reduction package, a package that will bring receipts and revenues more nearly into balance. Unless we do that, all the dreams of every member of the Republican Party and their agenda will be for naught because we will have no economy to sustain any of those dreams; and all of the dreams of those on the Democratic side of the aisle will be for naught, too, because there will be no economic activity that sustains those dreams either. No one's agenda will be achieved. We must have an economy that allows the creation of private capital, and that capital will not be created if it is true that by 1989, as the Congressional Budget Office says, the Federal Government will be borrowing so much that it will be sponging up nearly 78 percent of the net savings pool of this country.

Can you imagine that? Seventy-eight percent. That means there is less than 25 percent for everyone else in the country, homeowners, potential automobile purchasers and, small business people. That means high interest rates and a devastating economy.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Just think what it means to say that we will go from spending over 20 percent of our revenues for interest expense by the Federal Government in 1984 to spending over 75 percent of our revenues for interest expense in 1990. The public participating with us will quickly realize what that means to jeopardize our future.

Now, it is only when this Congress and the people realize what is going to happen to us that we will be compelled in a common effort to cut military spending, to join domestic spending, in fact, all facets of Government spending. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AuCOIN. I appreciate my friend yielding to me.

The gentleman has made I think a significant and very serious point, and I would hope that those who read the record that the gentleman is intending to spread across the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tonight would pay particular attention to it.

There is no doubt that we have an economic recovery underway in the country. There is also no doubt, incidentally, that there have been pockets that have been left out—and Oregon, my State, happens to be one of them. But there is a national economic recovery. I cannot help but note, and I think the gentleman understands this, that one of the characteristics of that recovery is that idled plant capacity, made idle and left idle during the last recession, is now gradually being put back into activity. That is basically the essence of the economic recovery we have today. Temporarily, that is good, but it does not go to the larger point about preparing this country and our collective States and districts for their economic future. What goes to that point is the creation of capital and the expansion of capacity and new technology so that we can meet the economic future—a future that is going to be very stiff with international and domestic competition.

So, unfortunately, in a way—though I am so pleased that the pain and the agony of the last recession is not being felt in as many households in my district as it certainly was a few years ago—there is a little bit of a false sense of security about our current recovery. I would hope that those of us who have been sent by our constituents to come here and to work on policy and to try to look out over the horizon would understand that that is the nature, a large part of the nature, of the current recovery; and if we simply point to current figures and say, "Well, this many people are now back to work and everything is rosy," we really delude the people.

We take their eye off the ball. We diminish our collective ability to collectively, on a bipartisan basis, develop growth strategies that will be designed to create capital and expand capacity so that we are not just in a period of time when we are refilling idle capacity made idle by the worst recession since the Depression. We are really preparing this country for its economic future. That is the unmet need.

That is the unmet need that the failure to make a major bite in the deficit has left for the next Congress to deal with. I regret that the across-the-board freeze on spending as a budget resolution failed. I argued for it on the floor. I know there were Republicans and Democrats who disagreed with me. If we could have passed that, we could have reduced this deficit over the next 3 years by $234 billion.

I would submit to the gentleman and to my colleagues that a $234 billion deficit reduction, as a downpayment over 3 years would be infinitely better than a $150 billion downpayment on the 3-year deficit, and would have sent a much stronger signal to the American people and to the credit markets and to one and all that we are serious, institutionally, both in the executive and in the legislative branch, about the problems of this deficit and we are committed not to just singing the praises of the current recovery. But that we are really committed to growth strategies in the future that prepare this country for a very vigorous economic test.

I want to compliment the gentleman who I think has just exercised enormous leadership all through the years he has served in this House and on the Ways and Means Committee, for taking the time tonight to allow Members of both parties of good will to discuss this problem and maybe from the leadership the gentleman has shown, greater progress can come with a higher degree of statecraft being exercised in the remaining weeks of this Congress, and certainly in the next Congress.

It is especially timely that we raise this issue today because election year posturing and the rush to adjourn should not be used as an excuse to duck the most urgent problem facing our Nation and our Nation's future—record-high $200 billion deficits.

In fact, in the short time remaining this Congress, we should evaluate our record, assess what we've accomplished and focus on what needs to be done in the months ahead to bring the deficit under control.

No amount of outrage or finger pointing about the growing deficit can substitute for action. And action calls for a bipartisan response in which both sides make sacrifices for the good of the whole. We made some progress this year in passing the $63 billion Deficit Reduction Act. This was a modest bipartisan effort but it was only a drop in the bucket. Much more needs to be done.

And that is what I have tried to focus on today—the need for a major bipartisan approach to the deficit crisis. What we need is a bipartisan attack on red ink, not partisan attacks on one another.

These massive deficits have serious consequences and we know what they are on both sides of the aisle. According to the latest Congressional Budget Office forecasts, the deficit will continue to rise for the foreseeable future. For 1984, it is estimated to be $172 billion and by 1989 it is estimated to balloon to a staggering $263 billion.

By the end of this year, the national debt will soar to nearly $1.6 trillion. By the end of the decade, it will double and amount to an estimated $15,000 for every American family of four. On that debt, interest payments alone will rise to $220 billion in 1989—more than the amount spent on Social Security benefits in 1983.

There are very real problems with that. It tells us that despite its momentum, the recovery is living on borrowed time. We are courting an inflationary blowup, holding interest rates high, and devouring the pool of savings available for investment.

Last month, housing activity plunged 13 percent to its lowest point since December 1982. My State of Oregon still lags behind the national recovery. Many lumber mills are running below capacity and unemployment hovers above the national average. The long-term potential for export-trade in the Northwest is being held hostage to the high value of the dollar.

So what are our options? Well, as I said before, liberals can stand in cement on entitlements and domestic spending saying that all the cuts must come from defense. And, conservatives can stand in cement and say that all the cuts must come in social programs. Under that scenario, the only thing that will move will be the deficit and it will simply rise higher and higher.

Certainly, this is not a rosy scenario but it is the one we will face unless we break the current political impasse that prevents more than token reductions in the deficit.

Congress could pass a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. One problem with amending the Constitution is that it could take years to get ratification. We can't afford to wait that long.

During the debate on the budget, the administration and Republicans offered a $150 billion deficit-reduction plan. House Democrats offered a $180 billion plan. Both plans, however, did little more than scratch the problem. Both did nothing to address the problem of paralysis.

That's why I joined the effort to freeze Federal spending more or less across the board. The freeze plan provided for no real growth in any area of the budget. Defense and entitlements were indexed to inflation and domestic programs were allowed to grow at 3.5 percent, slightly less than inflation.

The freeze proposal was the largest deficit-reduction plan on the table and the only plan that used the revenues it raised to reduce the deficit. Again, I want to emphasize that it would have slashed the deficit by $234 billion. If our objective as the President has said, is to make a substantial downpayment on the deficit to give the credit markets of this country some confidence that Government is serious about this problem, then this budget plan was the strongest message we could have sent.

Unfortunately, the plan failed. I feel it is important to know why it failed because it clearly defines the problem our country and Congress find themselves in. It failed because both sides of the political spectrum weren't willing to compromise and get behind a package that required some sacrifice from their political agenda.

Conservative opponents of the freeze plan said it did not allow for enough growth in military spending. Liberal opponents of the plan said it would have cut too deeply into domestic programs.

To those who suggest that such a freeze is heartless and would come at the expense of the poor or at the expense of national security, I would ask them, "What is more heartless, making sacrifices on both sides or letting the deficit grow?" I believe, and I think the majority of the American people would agree, that the most heartless thing is to saddle them and future generations with a debt that this country cannot sustain, unemployment which will make what we've just come through look like a Sunday school picnic and a new wave a business failures which will make the last recession look mild by comparison.

Clearly, the time has come to lay down our partisan ideological differences and stand shoulder to shoulder. Closing the budget gap will require giving up some sacred cows on both sides for the promise of a better future.

Recently, a bipartisan group of more than 600 business persons, former Government officials, lawyers and economists launched a grassroots effort urging all Members of Congress to make a common commitment to cut the deficit.

A budget freeze of the kind I've outlined provides a common ground for common sacrifice and a common commitment. It says I am willing to give ground on the three elements that we have to address; social spending and entitlements, military spending and taxes. It says I am willing to take a bold and significant step toward cutting the deficit even if it means giving up some narrow parochial concerns.

This same coalition supported the establishment of a national bipartisan commission to help achieve deficit reductions mentioned earlier.

Like the freeze proposal, the purpose behind setting up a commission is to formulate a deficit-reduction program that attacks the root of the problem and calls for shared sacrifice.

I first came to Congress 10 years ago. Since then, in every Congress, under every administration, I've voted for less spending than every President asked for, including President Reagan. In the last 2 years, I've opposed 17 of 30 spending bills for a total of $118 billion less than the administration wanted and $126 billion less than Congress authorized.

We all have our individual votes we can point to and we all have our individual checklists. The problem, however, continues to be how to fashion an effective deficit-reduction package that can command the votes necessary to pass. I maintain that a freeze plan could give us the best chance of doing this by imposing sacrifice equally. It only requires political will to put into effect.

The bottom line is this: Unless we control the deficit, it doesn't matter whether your world revolves around capital formation or whether your world revolves around programs to help the needy because $200 billion deficits spell doom for anyone's agenda. Worst of all, it locks up our economic growth potential and the promise of better things to come.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. I want to compliment the gentleman for his insightful presentation. You have made a significant contribution to our effort to talk to the people we represent as bipartisan Members of Congress. Hopefully, we have demonstrated a capacity to analyze problems in a constructive manner without indulging in partisan rhetoric.

One of us who joined in our presentation this evening served in the chair, CHARLES STENHOLM from Texas, and so I am going to leave the well and occupy the chair so that Mr. STENHOLM can join with you and express his views on the concerns that we have shared tonight.

I also want to let the people know that we will conduct special orders of this type in the future. Presenting problems and potential solutions in a bipartisan manner.

Now, I thank the gentleman for participating with us, as I occupy the chair, and Mr. STENHOLM will join us on the floor. Before I do, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would be glad to carry the watch here. When the gentleman was discussing the subject of taxes, the gentleman indicated that one of the real dangers was that we might stifle the recovery by the imposition of too great taxes.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Yes, I am very concerned about that.

Mr. FRENZEL. And a desire to curb the deficit without curbing our spending appetites. The gentleman also made what I thought was a very interesting statement about tax reform where you said that there are many that think they can use tax reform to buy a balanced budget, which I guess, in which you indicated that the only way you get tax reform is to have a revenue-neutral approach in which you take away from tax preferences from another and spread them through the tax schedule so you get a new balance and a new alignment. That does not produce any money to buy down the deficit. That is an interesting thought that I think has not assailed the mentalities of a lot of our Members. That is that if you use tax reform to attack the deficit, it only is a tax increase, even though you may lay it on someone else's constituents rather than your own. Is that the point that the gentleman was trying to establish?

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Absolutely. I also want to point out to the American public the fact that politically, tax reform becomes dialog a way of avoiding dialog about the real problem; namely, the deficit. I find that there are those among the political system who talk about tax reform instead of reduction of deficits, because they have no answers that are not painful for reducing the deficit. So they talk about reform as though it will accomplish it for us.

If we look back at the tax cuts of 1981 and the promises that went with them regarding a balanced budget, it is obvious that tax cuts do not a balanced budget make.

I think that the gentleman has zeroed in on an important point that we must share with the people: Namely, not to be misled by the myth of tax reform as though it will solve the problems of deficits because it will not.

Mr. FRENZEL. That is right. We cannot blame the taxpayers for the deficit; it is not their fault.

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. We create the deficit by spending more money than we have, by making promises to the public we cannot afford to keep.

Mr. FRENZEL. Thank you for clarifying that point. I will guard the ship while the gentleman assumes the chair.

TAX REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, the reason I took this time was simply to extend the dialog begun by the distinguished gentleman from Hawaii. I have perhaps overparticipated already at this point, and I would like to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] with whom I have worked over the years on budget matters and found him to be one of the very few Members of the House who have been willing to swallow what is often unpleasant in an attempt to lower the deficit.

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I appreciate those comments, and I very much appreciate his effort and also Mr. HEFTEL's effort in beginning this dialog today of what we all hope will be a series of serious efforts to bring about debate, and hopefully to find 212 other Members to participate with us in the spirit of which we have been talking about today.

If we get 212 more agreeing to the general principles that have already been discussed today, we will have made one giant stride toward delivering on that elusive goal that we all talk a lot about, but we have not yet been able to deliver, and that is a balanced budget.

Much of what has been said today needs to be said over and over. To reach a balanced budget we are going to have to continue the economic recovery and see that it moves out and spreads out into the entire United States. We are going to have to cut spending. We are going to have some additional revenue.

□ 1800

That is my judgment also. But I think we need to keep it in the order that I have just mentioned, and I want to focus real quickly now on three points.

First of all, Will Rogers once observed that, "It ain't people's ignorance that bothers me so much. It's them knowing so much that ain't so is the problem." And I think how well those words can be interpreted today when we talk about what has caused the deficit.

In so many people's minds, the deficit has been caused by increased defense spending. Nothing could be further from the truth when you analyze our budget of today and compare it with most any period in modern history and I will use 1970 for example this evening.

Defense spending is exactly at the same level in 1984 as it was in 1970 if you use constant dollars, which means in economic language that you take out inflation. We are there.

So the deficit of $170 billion, give or take that we are talking about in 1984, has not been caused by increased defense spending, and that is a fact.

I would suggest that in this political year that constituents of all of us challenge any of us that make that claim.

So then where is the deficit coming from? And, of course, here it gets into the real problem.

About $120 to $130 billion of this deficit is coming directly from transfer payments, payments to individuals better known as entitlements today. The taking from the working of today and paying to those who have worked in the past and who have now earned their retirement. Therein is the big cause of the deficit today because therein we have seen the greatest proliferation of spending in the last 14, 15, 20 years.

Of course, the other big area is interest rates and we have already heard expressed tonight and over and over the alarming growth of deficit and what that is doing to future interest payments that are going to have to be met first by this body in any future budgets.

About $30 to $35 billion of the current deficit is already built in because of increased interest costs to pay for our previous deficit spending, of which the last 3 years has seen a great proliferation.

So that is the first point I want to make. Let us try as we have done tonight to begin focusing on the real causes and just as I am often reminded of some of my rhetoric when I first ran for this office, in 1977 being elected in 1978, at that time we were spending, we the United States of America, our budget, we were spending at the rate of about 21 percent of our gross national product.

I observed at that time that we ought to have a balanced budget. We ought to reduce spending to 18 to 19 percent of our gross national product. Match revenues with expenditures and have a balanced budget.

I also acknowledged since I was calling for an increase in defense spending that we may have to go a little above 18 or 19 and maybe go to 20 percent.

Well, again today in 1984 we have achieved that goal on the revenue side, because revenues this year are about 19, 19½ percent of our gross national product. The problem has come on the other side of the ledger.

We are spending at the rate of 24½ percent of our gross national product, a level much too high to sustain for any indefinite period into the future.

So here again, the culprit is spending, no question about that, and if we are going to do something about it we are going to need to address that area.

Now here we run into the problem that all of we politicians have as we are all, not just us, the people that we represent, all of you, bless you, everybody wants to balance the budget in the other guy's program. Everybody is in favor of cutting in the other guy's program, in the other guy's State, in the other guy's committee.

Well, let me be the first in the spirit of the conservation tonight, let me be the first to talk about the committee that I serve on, the Agriculture Committee, and let us acknowledge here and now publicly that we can make savings, tremendous savings from the agricultural budget by doing a better job of managing, putting the "M" back in OMB, as I like to put it.

When we passed the farm bill of 1981, many of us and I did not support the bill at that time, and I guess I have turned out to be prophetic, because one of the reasons we did not support it, we felt it was going to do far too little for farmers and cost the American taxpayer far too many dollars and we have seen this happen.

Interestingly, in 4 years of the Carter Presidency we expended some $24 billion on farmer-related programs. During 4 years of the current administration, we are going to expend some $62 billion.

Therein is part of our deficit problem. Now if we had expended that much money and had caused the kind of economic recovery that is needed within the largest industry of this United States, the agriculture industry; if we had expended those funds and extended benefit in direct contrast with those expenditures, there may have been some justification.

But when you look at last year's income results and find that the American farmer collectively had net farm income of $16 billion after we had expended $23 billion, something ought to tell you that something is not working.

So the challenge to those of us on the House Committee on Agriculture, and I know we welcome that challenge, we look forward to the 1985 farm bill and the belief that we can, in fact, do something both in a productive and a cooperative spirit with the entire body of doing something about our budget problems while, at the same time doing something about the income problems of our largest industry and recognizing just as in every other industry when you have a productive, profitable industry, taxes are paid, people are put back to work, unemployment goes down and the deficit comes down.

It is a challenge. I will not take all of my time tonight to go further into those details, but I will say we are going to be talking a lot more and I suspect that in the colloquy and the debate and the discussion of just such an effort tonight that we are going to spend a lot of time again on agriculture in the same spirit that they are bringing it up tonight.

One last point I would like to make quickly before I yield back.

I am getting a lot of cards and letters today from folks back home concerned about their COLA. And I can certainly sincerely appreciate that those who are living on a very, very small income concerned about their cost-of-living adjustment. I can appreciate that.

But many, many who are writing are not totally dependent upon that COLA. And my point to all of you tonight and I guess the question to my constituency at home when I speak to senior citizens and others who are very concerned about cost-of-living adjustments, when they deal with Social Security and retirement programs, the question is, Where did we ever get the idea in this country that COLA, cost-of-living adjustment, whether it be in the retirement program or whether it be in our everyday salaries, where did that ever become an inherent right of being an American citizen? Where did we ever come to expect as Americans that COLA is a vested right inherited by being born and privileged to be free and to wake up this morning and to shave and to make our hair and to step out in the United States of America.

But today many have gotten that idea and I suspect much of it has come from the debate in this very body. But what we do not stop to think too often about is when we talk about cost-of-living adjustments to Social Security we are talking about money that must be collected from today's working men and women and that usually translates into children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren in order to pay that out of our Social Security trust fund.

And I wish more of the people that make this such a political issue would be a little more honest, because when they do that I think they will find the same reaction that I get when I present it just that way; is the realization that we must be concerned, yes, about the welfare of today's current retired community; no question about that.

But we in this body have got to consider not only today's recipients, but also the future recipients. And when you think about it in just those terms, you must come up with a little more complicated answer than some of the simple postcards that innundate this body periodically and the many political charges that are made about who is going to do what to whom as far as the Social Security trust fund is concerned.

The trust fund is just that. It has always been a pay-as-you-go principle and it is one that we in this body are going to have to address just as in 1977 this body passed the Social Security Improvement and Protection Act that was going to last until 2025. It lasted until 1983.

We also now are saying we have saved it until 2025 again by what we have done in 1983 is further from the truth and the sooner we start talking about the facts as they are and recognizing that each of the 230 million American citizens have an equal responsibility to today's generation and future generations, and recognizing we are never going to balance the budget of the United States until we can talk intelligently about entitlement programs without getting emotional and without scaring the senior citizens, that goal of which is one of my foremost to become one, without scaring them to death by the rhetoric that comes out of this body, however unintentionally it might be.

I thank the gentleman.

□ 1810

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman.

Is the gentleman aware that once that Social Security COLA goes into place, the taxable base for Social Security payments increases so that those who vote for the Social Security COLA will be voting for an extra $2 billion in taxes on individual taxpayers?

Mr. STENHOLM. I am well aware of that. It has always been interesting to me since our President proposed it and at the same time opposes increasing taxes. We cannot do both.

Mr. FRENZEL. Yes. There are a lot of heroes around here who are deathless enemies of taxes who keep voting for those sorts of things, perhaps unaware that they are at the same time laying additional new taxes on middle-income Americans who are perhaps the most productive element of our entire society.

I thank the gentleman for his thoughtful remarks and hope that we can get into this a little more in the future. I think we have established for tonight, at least as a beginning basis, that none of us think taxes are a great way to attack the deficit, and that until we understand that we must reduce our spending, our efforts to reduce the deficit are going to all meet with failure. However, simply, the discussion that has gone forward here tonight, and the participants have renewed the vigor of at least this one Member and the enthusiasm of this one Member to take another swing at it and see if we can achieve a consensus that will reduce our spending, reduce our deficits, and put our country solidly on the path to continue the extraordinary recovery we have enjoyed.

Mr. Speaker, I yield again to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. HEFTEL].

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you, BILL FRENZEL, and the Chair, CHARLIE STENHOLM, the gentleman from Oregon, LES AUCOIN no longer with us, the gentleman from Ohio, BILL GRADISON for participating in speaking with the American people as we have, to let them know that there are those of us in the Congress who feel that we should be solving our problems, discussing our problems not as partisan Democrats and Republicans but as Americans serving in the Congress for a common good and a common cause.

Tonight we hope will just be the beginning of this form of dialog. I think on behalf of all of us I would like to invite the American public which has participated with us to phone our offices in our local districts or write to us, to communicate and let us know what they think and how they feel about what we are trying to achieve in a body which must function with at least 218 votes before it can perform well.

I want to thank the gentleman from Minnesota so very much for his participation and thank all of those who have joined with us in C-SPAN television.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

HOW TO BALANCE THE BUDGET—PART II

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I think the preceding dialog was very helpful and sort of set the tone for this particular special order. I spoke last Friday, September 14, and it was reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page H9580, on the top of how to really balance the budget. I guess because that particular special order got involved in some superb dialog with the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] who was leading the effort on the constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget, and with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] who is doing some excellent work on monetary policy, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS] who serves on the Committee on Appropriations, and brought to bear some of their personal experiences in dealing with spending problems in the House and with the difficulties we have in the House in trying to bring our budget into balance, this turned out to be a two-part special order on how to really balance the budget, so I guess tonight's special order is really "How To Balance the Budget—Part II."

I want to pick up by first reminding the Members of the House and our viewers of the key points we talked about last Friday as a framework for thinking about balancing the budget.

We were suggesting that we are at the edge of an age of growth, a period of economic growth in jobs that is extremely important. We were suggesting also that there is a revolution in economic thought and that that revolution is composed of three parts: First, of an explosion in productivity that will increase the goods and services available to the entire human race across the planet; second, in the shift from mathematical to human economics; and third, in the shift from national to global economics.

I think these three layers are very, very important, so I am going to repeat them first as an overview. First, we are entering a tremendous explosion in productivity. Second, we are seeing economics begin to shift from a focus on mathematical models toward a focus on how you motivate and manage human beings. And third, we are beginning to recognize that we are going to have to have an ability to deal with a global economy, not just a series of national economies.

Let me reframe these just for a minute and remind both our Members and our viewers of why these are so important and how they change the world.

First, the explosion in productivity. I mentioned last Friday that the history of human productivity can in a sense be described as three "S" curves. The "S" curve stands for the rise in productivity. It is commonly used in high-technology companies. For example, the Wright brothers 81 years ago, in the first powered flight, flew and landed in a distance short enough that they could have been taking off and landing on the wing span of a Boeing 747. It took a very long time, which is the flat, bottom part of the "S," to figure out how to make airplanes really work. Suddenly, with tremendous speed, we see productivity increase, which is why it rises up the side of the "S" as airplanes got bigger, faster, carried more people, and then as the technology matures it tends to flatten off at the very top.

This is why, in looking at a whole range of technologies from computers to aircraft to medicines, scientists discovered this theory of what they call the "S" curve of productivity growth. Seen at the level of what one might call macro-history, what happens to the entire human race over time, a number of authors, as I mentioned last week, Kenneth Bolding in "The Meaning of the 20th Century," Daniel Bell in "The Post Industrial Society," Peter Drucker in "The Age of Discontinuities," Alvin Toffler in "The Third Wave," to some extent John Naisbitt in "Megatrends," all came to the general conclusion that human history can be described in terms of three very large S-curves or tremendous changes in productivity. What Toffler called the first wave was the rise of agriculture, the second wave was the industrial age, and the third wave, which we are just entering, is an information age.

This is an important framework of thought because if, in fact, we are entering a revolution in productivity. The one example I have here is that from 1962 to 1984 the amount of computing power that one could buy for $1 increased by a factor of 4 million; that is, for every dollar you spend in 1984 one can buy 4 million times as much computing power as one could buy in 1962.

That is a 99 percent per year real growth rate. What the suggests is that we are beginning to move up a new S-curve of productivity, to go through an explosion in our ability to develop new goods and new services. In particular, in information sciences, in biology and in space, we are seeing a revolution in our ability to produce goods and services.

This does not mean the end of very important industries, any more than the industrial age meant the end of farming. We are still going to have steel industries. We are going to have automobile industries. We are going to produce a lot of goods and services, but as everyone knows who has looked at modern auto plants, we are going to produce more and more things using the power of the computer to enable us to produce goods better and more rapidly.

The second great change is the shift from mathematical to human economics. We see this every day. Probably the most successful recent examples have been the writings of Peter Drucker and a book by Peters and Waterman called "In Search of Excellence," the argument that if you lead people well, if you do the right things to motivate people, they will change their behavior in ways that lead them to be more productive.

The reason that some football or baseball teams have a consistent pattern over the years of being successful, while other football and baseball teams have a consistent pattern of being failures is not just the quality of the talent they recruit, but is the quality of the leadership, of the structure, of the culture of the team.

So we are beginning to recognize once again that mathematical models of the economy may just be wrong, that the geniuses of Thomas Edison, of Henry Ford, of the Wright Brothers, of Lee Iacocca, these kind of intelligent, dynamic, driving personalities, may not be measurable purely in terms of money. That is why some movies that cost a great deal fail; some movies that do not cost a great deal are very successful.

There are characteristics that are human, that may be more important in deciding how the world works than characteristics of sheer economics or sheer numbers. That is why if you look, for example, at Japan, South Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Singapore, those are very successful economies. If you look at the United States compared to Western Europe, for the last 50 years it has been remarkably successful. From this standpoint, much of the crisis of Western Europe has been a crisis of culture, not a crisis of money.

In fact, Peter Drucker recently wrote a brilliant article, which I cited last September 14 in the first part of this essay on how to balance the budget, in which he said:

> If you really want entrepreneurs, if you really want people out creating new businesses, if you really want high technology companies to create new jobs, you have to encourage all entrepreneurs, because it is the culture, it is the attitude, it is the ideas, it is the tax structure that encourages investment, that encourages risk taking, that encourages doing the right things that collectively matter.

So the second point may be as powerful as any. There are models of behavior. Douglas McGregor in "The Human Side of Enterprise" described it brilliantly 20 years ago. He said:

> We would never build a waterpipe for water to go uphill because we know that water doesn't go uphill, yet we frequently build bureaucracies and management systems that work against human nature.

Why would we accept the reality that water will not go uphill and then ask human beings to act antihumanly? The reality is they will cheat. They will find ways to get around the system.

If you tell a farmer that you are going to dramatically tax his corn, he will grow less corn and grow more wheat. If you tell him you are going to dramatically tax everything, he will quit growing everything and grow just barely enough for his family. We know that is true, yet we look at countries which overtax their farmers, discouraging incentive, punish their entrepreneurs, and we wonder why they are economically sick.

If you saw a man who drank 5 gallons of whiskey a day, you would not be surprised that he had real problems, yet we see countries that take the economic and cultural equivalent of 5 gallons of whiskey a day and we seem surprised that they have problems.

If you reward the right behavior, you tend to get the right results. Basically, that is the core of the revolution in the shift from mathematical to human economics, the argument that human leadership, human habits, cultures, may be more important than just numbers.

Third and finally, we are undergoing a tremendous revolution because we are now part of the world economy. There is a very disturbing article in today's Washington Post, September 20, by Robert Dunn, Jr., who is a professor of economics at George Washington University, entitled "Barriers to Trade." The point Mr. Dunn makes is that world trade is very, very important to all of us. Exporting is important to our farmers. Importing is important to those of us who eat bananas or drink coffee. There is a tremendous constant shift back and forth of resources, both manufactured and agricultural in goods and services, and that the world is getting smaller because of electronics because of the revolution in space.

The very reality that we were able to knit together 140 countries to watch the Olympics live and in color by satellite from Los Angeles should teach all of us that we now live in a very small electronic neighborhood and it is vital in that neighborhood that we continue to be concerned about the entire global economy, not just the American. Let me explain why. They are all linked together. It is a little bit like a mountain climber who is having trouble with a rope which has been holding him up because it is attached to another mountain climber, so to get rid of the rope, you just cut it. Now, if that rope was the thing that was holding you on to the mountain, you may fall off the mountain. That is the problem we face. In fact, it is precisely the problem that led to the Great Depression in the 1930's. What made the Great Depression so severe was that each country protected itself in a way which made it worse and more difficult for every other country.

The best example is what would happen to Mexico, Brazil, and Argentina, if we were to suddenly make it impossible for them to sell to us, and here is what Professor Dunn says:

> If the United States makes it impossible for these countries to steadily increase their exports of goods such as steel, garments and shoes, it will also make it impossible for these countries to repay their debts or even make scheduled interest payments. A number of major U.S. banks have lent well over 100 percent of their net worth to developing countries and now face serious repayment problems.

In other words, if we stop Brazil from being successful, from selling anything to the United States, the Brazilians will not be able to earn enough money to pay back the loans they owe the United States so we will lose the money they already owe us.

Similarly, I would suggest that if the Western Europeans become more and more protectionist, if the United States becomes more and more protectionist, the Japanese economy starts to suffer and all of a sudden the entire Western alliance, which has preserved freedom now for 39 years, begins to fall apart, so we have to be concerned about the entire world.

Furthermore, it is the world which is holding up the American economy. Higher interest rates, greater investment possibilities, the 1981 tax cuts which increased the productivity of the American economy, all of those things have drawn money into the United States. One of the reasons the dollar is strong right now is because the entire world is buying into America. The world thinks America is the safest, most productive, smartest investment for the future; so the world wants to come and invest in America. That has given us the capital to finance our current debt. It has given us the capital to build more factories. It has made the dollar stronger allowing us to buy more goods and services overseas. That is a function of the world economy, not the national economy.

So to summarize again, any thinking about the budget and about balancing the budget and about the Federal Government has to start with the three understandings, first, that we are entering a revolution in productivity; second, that we are now moving from mathematical to human economics; and third, that we have to design America's policies within the framework of a global economy and an electronic neighborhood, not within the framework just of the nation-state.

The challenge then in this setting is whether we are going to change with reality or fight the reality of change. What we have seen, and I want to repeat that because I think this is in many ways the central choice in American politics, much deeper and more fundamental than Mondale's raising taxes and Reagan not raising taxes. This is the core of the underlying long-term choice for the American Nation. As reality changes, we can change with it or we can fight that reality.

Now, we see examples in Western Europe of countries, regions, labor unions, companies, governments, that have fought reality. What happens over time when they fight reality? The companies get older. Their jobs become less and less survivable. Their industries decay. Their wealth declines. Their capacity to be free diminishes.

It is nothing new, nothing surprising. What happens, on the other hand, when you work with reality, when you accept that you are going to have to change, you are going to have to grow, you are going to have to develop more effective, more powerful, more desirable behaviors?

We see that in the Pacific where countries have grown dramatically. You can even see it in some industries where you have a company that changes versus a company that decays.

I happened last night to be given the opportunity to speak with the Harris Corp. in Florida. The Harris Corp. was originally a printing corporation. It originally started as a company that was worried with paper and with ink.

□ 1830

About 20 years ago the Harris Corp. came to the conclusion that while it was making money at printing, it was making more money with high technology electronics. And so year after year they shifted more and more of their resources into the process of investing in research and development, inventing new systems, building new electronic gear.

Just 1 year ago they finished that transformation by selling off the printing industry which was the original parent of the whole company, taking the cash from the printing company that they had just sold and buying and merging with Lanier Business Machines, which is a company that is compatible with them in a high technology area, but that is in fact a good marketing company.

The story of Harris over the last 20 years is in a sense the story of the future, the development of America.

Now, notice that they did not have less jobs. They have more jobs than they had 20 years ago. They have better paying jobs than they had 20 years ago, and they have a more sophisticated work force than they had 20 years ago. They are making more money than they made 20 years ago.

The same thing can be true of the future. It is fascinating in that sense that Professor Dunn makes this point about those countries that followed the right policy.

There is the broader issue of the basic development strategy pursued by developing countries and the U.S. role in the Third World. For a number of decades the United States has been encouraging developing countries to follow an export led market approach to economics, in opposition to those in Moscow, Havana, and elsewhere who have advocated nonmarket, inward looking strategies. The results for the past two decades make it very clear that the United States was correct and that our opponents were dead wrong. The developing countries that have done well are overwhelmingly those that have used the market approach and that have pursued exports. The statistical evidence for the past 20 years has been widely understood among development planners in China and India, and there is the strong attempt in both countries and elsewhere to shift policies in the right direction.

Let me drive this home for a second. Consistently everywhere on the planet that governments and countries invest in the future, invest in educating their young, work at retraining their adults, build new jobs, go out and encourage their corporations to get the kind of management, the kind of development that looks toward a global economy, that focuses on encouraging and motivating human resources and that accepts the productivity revolution we are looking through, everywhere that that happens there is success. And in virtually every place that avoids those three realities there has been failure.

So one of the points I would make tonight is that as we plan the second term of the Reagan administration, which is what I think we are going to have, as we look at the next 4 years, as we make our choices, we have to decide not to fight against the reality of change but, instead, to work at changing with reality.

The question then becomes when we go out and we ask for advice and we seek advice, the example, the model I have used is the pediatrician and the gerontologist. Do we want people who help us grow, as the pediatrician looks at a child as someone growing, or do we want experts who look at us as static, as stable, already formed, as, say, an 84-year-old person?

I would suggest that because of the characteristics of this productivity revolution and because of the possibility inherent both in the global economy and in human management, that we are in a position today where we need the pediatricians of growth, we need people who want to encourage and facilitate and develop a more rapidly growing America, not people who think there is some kind of artificial, static limit, lid, if you will, above which growth cannot rise.

As I said earlier, if you take computers by themselves you are talking about 99 percent per year real growth for 20 years, 22 years actually, from 1962 to 1984. That is 99 percent a year real growth in technology per dollar.

There is not a single econometric model in America, or a single economist in America who can explain mathematically how that is possible, so in a sense if we were to follow Paul Volcker's reasoning, since he argues you can only have 3.5 or 4 percent growth a year, it is obvious that computers do not exist.

So anyone who is watching who has a digital watch or who had a car that talks to you and tells you when you have left the door open, or the lights are on, or you are running out of gas, any of you who have the relatively inexpensive home computers, or inexpensive pocket calculators, those obviously do not exist because in the theoretical models of the gerontologists of the past who are in charge of our economy, we could not possibly have had 99 percent real growth a year and in fact had their policies applied to computers we would be today about where computers got to in 1965.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I would be glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACK], who is on the Budget Committee and who is a real student in this area.

Mr. MACK. I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I just would like to tie together a couple of points that have been made so far.

You talked earlier about the human aspects of economics, and one of the items that I would like to kind of add to that is our dealing with static models in so many of the economic projections that we make and then also tie into the last comment that you made about the gerontologists of the past.

Today when we begin to ask for information about how to make the decisions that will affect the future of our country based on economic growth, we seem to be getting the same answers that have been given for the last 35 or 40 years.

As an example, to tie those three points together, I think it is reasonable to look back to the 1977 debate on what would happen if the capital gains rate in this country were to be reduced. The first thing is that those people who indicated that the tax revenues to the Federal Government from capital gains would be reduced by 25 percent, if in fact we reduced the revenue, did not take into consideration the human aspects of economic policy. That is, that if one reduces the rate at which one is taxed that that would give incentive to the individual to earn more, to risk more, to go out and try to earn more as an individual, therefore raising the amount of money that the individual had, and at the same time ending up increasing the amount of revenue to the Federal Government.

The point was in 1977, I think it was Secretary Blumenthal that made the comment that if you reduced the tax rate from some 49 percent down to 26 percent, I think those numbers are pretty close, that we would lose $2.2 billion annually as a result of that reduced capital gains rate. The end result was in 1978, $1.4 billion or $1.3 billion more in revenue came in as a result of reduced rate.

My point there is that again I think people have got to begin to understand that there is a human aspect to the equation of economic growth that needs to be taken into consideration, No. 1.

No. 2, that has an impact on the static models.

No. 3, that we have got to start to find people who understand the change that is taking place in the economy, how it affects those models so that we can begin to put together the proper equations to stimulate higher levels of long-term economic growth.

So I appreciate the gentleman yielding and I appreciate the special order that you have taken out tonight. Hopefully this will continue to spur on the discussion about how in fact we change policies to create growth.

Mr. GINGRICH. I appreciate very much the gentleman from Florida participating, because I think we are at the edge here of a fundamental change in how we think about the world. And not only I think, as I think the gentleman would agree, are we on the edge of being able to grow very rapidly, not only do dynamic models allow you to look at much more rational and effective ways of growing, but the next point I want to make is that there is a moral imperative for growth.

I tried to make the point a week ago that any liberal who wants to help the poor has to favor growth. If you want Bangladesh, or Chad, or Zimbabwe to live better you have to favor growth. If you want poor people in the ghettos to do better you have to favor growth. If you want us to be rich enough to help Americans who are born with handicaps such as mental retardation or physical disabilities you have to favor growth to have America wealthy enough to do that.

The great dilemma that I have always been shocked by is that liberals who believe in helping people, and they love jobs, they hate the growth and the job creators who make it possible. So you have people who come into this House who are very willing to tax the job creating entrepreneur out of business, they are very willing to put regulations on small business that kills it before it ever gets started, they are willing to eliminate the very people who create the future, and then they wonder, gosh, why do we have this swamp of human inactivity in which people do not do anything.

If you make it so expensive and so difficult and not just expensive financially, you can make it expensive culturally, psychologically through redtape, it just gets to be too much of a nuisance, then you can build up a welfare system that is large enough and has enough resources in it that you have to be stupid to leave it.

□ 1840

And if you take today many of our welfare policies and many of our tax policies, we make it disadvantageous to get off welfare and into a job. If you then take many of our tax policies we make it disadvantageous to leave a large corporation and go out on your own and take the risks to start your own business. We make it more difficult to be Thomas Edison, or Henry Ford, or the Wright Brothers, at the very time that we need them.

I would assert that what we need desperately on this planet is a model of growth and how to grow and how to get growth that says to 15-, 16-, and 17-year-olds in Bangladesh or in Lebanon that "if you want your family to live better, there is an alternative to communism and there is an alternative to terrorism."

Now I do not just speak on this tragic evening when we have had a bomb go off in Lebanon. I spoke a week ago and I used that same analogy.

I said, "If you are young, if you are poor, and you watch television and you see 'Dallas' on TV," and this happens in many countries today, it is the most widely shown television program in the world; or you see Los Angeles and the Olympics and you say to yourself "I would like my family to live like Americans" and you are told "Well, you can't get there because the International Monetary Fund is now imposing austerity on your country so none of you are going to make it. You cannot get there because the U.S. foreign aid program for years has been government-to-government programs to prop up the Minister downtown as a big government agency and they don't care about businesses. You can't get there because there is no model of thought."

Then somebody walks down the road and says, "How would you like to be a Communist? We will help you get there" or "How would you like to be a terrorist? We will bomb them and blackmail them into helping you. Why should they live rich in America while you live so poorly here in your country?"

The most desperately needed thing in the world is a positive, clear, coherent framework that says to that young person "No, no, don't go in those directions, join us in an opportunity society movement that would help your country grow." And furthermore the U.S. Government, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank will join together in policies that encourage growth. "Go out and work and create wealth in your own nation. Don't destroy wealth in order to terrorize others. Go out and organize for wealth and productivity, don't go out and organize for the Communist Party."

Now if we had a positive opportunity society vision available to the planet, we would be able to reach out, as evangelists, as missionaries across the planet, encouraging every young person without regard to their race, creed, color, religion, or background to begin to be productive. But what are we offered by our good friends who are liberal Democrats?

Faced with a moral imperative for growth, Walter Mondale and the liberal Democrats propose a budget plan that would kill growth, which would just simply flatly destroy growth.

Why do I say that? Because if you raise, as Walter Mondale has proposed, taxes on working Americans by what has been estimated to be $1,800 per family, if you build a bigger welfare state, as Walter Mondale has proposed, if you make all sorts of promises to liberal welfare state allies as Walter Mondale has, if you behave the way liberal Democrats behave in the House of Representatives passing bigger central government bureaucracy bills, more regulations, more redtape, you guarantee that growth cannot possibly take place.

Now I do not say this as a theoretical argument. I do not stand here and suggest theoretically that Walter Mondale's plan would kill growth. I simply suggest we look at the last time Walter Mondale was in power, the last time liberal Democrats controlled the White House. It was in 1977 to 1981, under Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale.

Now what did we get? We got taxes going up on the working Americans, we had massive inflation, we had the collapse of the auto industry, the collapse of the steel industry, the collapse of jobs, the decay of America. We were in such pain by the summer of 1980 that between dramatically rising inflation, when gold was over $800 an ounce and going up, Italian hotels would not accept American dollars on the ground they could not trust the value of the dollar; the reality was the liberal welfare state policies did not work. We have historic proof. We lived through it. If you go to the doctor and the doctor makes you sicker and 4 years later you forget and you go back to the doctor who made you sicker, it is not the doctor's fault that you got sick, it is your fault. We know what liberal welfare state policies will do. They will destroy the chance for real growth.

By contrast what we are moving toward and the reason a number of us were opposed this year to talking about tax increases in 1985 is because we want an opportunity society plan for a balanced budget.

Remember, I said we have to have a clear, simple model for those young people. We have to be able to reach out to Bangledesh, to Chad, to Zimbabwe, everywhere across the planet, to Paraguay, to every country that wants to improve its standard of living. What would an opportunity society plan look like?

Well, it would be based on four very simple principles. First, free enterprise; second, high technology; third, traditional values; fourth, self-government.

It is our argument based upon the real parallelism between the writings of the Founding Fathers in the Federalist Papers and elsewhere and the writings of people like Douglas McGregor and Peter Drucker, that a free nation that governs itself, that allows the marketplace to dominate its economic market activity, that teaches its children traditional values such as honesty and hard work, and that invests in the future in high technology, that builds new, modern steel plants, new, modern automobile plants, that reaches out and creates a new industrial Midwest by encouraging through the right tax policies the kind of factories that can compete with anybody in the world and that encourages, with the bill such as Congressman CLINGER and Congresswoman JOHNSON have developed for tax credits for retraining of workers, that encourages the kind of growth in knowledge on the part of adult workers, that allows all of us to participate in a high-technology future. These four principles, and let me repeat them because I think they are so profound: First, free enterprise; second, high technology; third, traditional values; and fourth, self-government. They form the basis of thought for an opportunity society which I think is not only competitive with communism and terrorism, it is clearly dramatically superior.

Now then, what would a plan to balance the budget in an opportunity society following these principles be, recognizing the revolution in productivity, recognizing the importance of the shift to human economics instead of mathematical economics and recognizing that we are in a global economy, what would that plan look like?

It would be seven steps. Let me list them and then go over them one by one. First, an agenda for growth; second, a 2-year budget and appropriations bills; third, a policy of frugality in government; fourth, new ideas for government and society; fifth, a simplified, Tax Code; sixth, reform of interest on the debt; seventh, monetary policy reforms to fight inflation and to keep it under 3 percent.

These seven steps fit together. They include how do we grow as an economy so the world can grow, so that the poor in our cities can find jobs, so we can rebuild and redevelop our industrial base. It includes a way of grabbing control of the Congress with a 2-year budget and a 2-year appropriation, forcing the Congress to bring spending to a halt and to stop the kind of pork-barrel fight that we saw today, when once again today, faced with a choice between giving every Member's district a little bit more money that we do not have, or stopping this kind of spending, the Congress once again voted to give Members' districts more than frankly we have. We are giving away our grandchildren's future.

Third, it is possible to be frugal. There have been three great political leaders in the English-speaking world who have been frugal, Walpole in the 18th century. Gladstone in the 19th century, and Coolidge in the 20th century. All three made a success of the simple principle that if money is to be wasted, you should be allowed to waste your own money; you should not have the government take it away from you in taxes so that some bureaucrat can waste it for you. In short, if we are going to buy a $435 hammer, we should be able to buy it for ourselves, we should not have the Defense Department do it for us. That principle created three, very, very successful careers as I said Walpole, Gladstone, and Coolidge. It is not just a gimmick. It is a serious idea.

Fourth, we have to focus on new ideas. We live in an age of enormous change everywhere but Washington, DC. If you were to simply compare for example the process by which you can now call into any kind of money market fund, if you have any kind of money market fund you can go to any touchtone phone, dial an 800 number for free, get the computer, punch in your credit card number or account number and the computer within a matter of less than 1 minute will tell you that as of 5 o'clock today how much money you have in your account, how much interest was paid on it in the last 7 days, and how much interest was paid on it in the last 30 days.

□ 1850

You try the same thing with the U.S. Government involving say, your Social Security account. Those places you cannot call anyway, you have to write. When you write it may or may not be answered. They may lose it. If they do answer you they will tell you that they are several years behind in processing the accounts. Now, is this because civil servants are stupid or lazy? No, it is because the structure of the Federal Government is an 1880's Civil Service Act, 1920's management style, and 1950's office equipment. There is no company in America that could operate with all of the handicaps which we have legally built into the Federal Government and do anything except go bankrupt.

So, if we expect to have efficient and smiling and effective and productive Federal workers, we have to overhaul and rethink the entire Federal system.

Fifth, we need to simplify the Tax Code. Everyone who looks, for example, at the 1984 Tax Act with its report language comes to almost 1,900 pages, has come to the conclusion, tax lawyer after tax lawyer who makes their living out of complexity have come to me and asked that we find a way to pass something like the Kemp-Kasten flatter and simpler tax bill.

Sixth, interest payments are now the third largest item in the budget, larger than the Army and Marine Corps combined. Yet, no one looks seriously at how we could reform interest payments.

Seventh, we have to look at monetary policy. One of the major failures of the first term of the Reagan administration and the entire revolution that JACK KEMP and others led in looking at fiscal policy and taxes was that we frankly did not pay enough attention in 1981 and 1982 to the terribly important question of the value of money. And I want to come back to that.

Let me start first with an agenda for growth, remembering as I said earlier that we absolutely have to grow in America, that for us to not grow is to cripple the country.

Let me expand on that. Every time a nation grows rapidly everybody gains. There are inevitably at any one point in history some industries, some sectors that are declining and other sectors that are growing. But if the whole economy is growing, then the sectors that are becoming relatively less important do not feel the pain that they feel in a recession or a depression.

Interestingly, for example, the Erie Canal reached its peak of carrying freight in the 1880's long after railroads were running parallel. The New York Central lines were literally next to the Erie Canal. Yet, because America was growing, the canal was growing. That is very, very important in a free society because when an industry declines in absolute terms it brings pressure to bear on its Senator, on its Congressman, on its President to protect it. That is perfectly legitimate. No one should be expected to suffer in silence. In a free society they have the right to speak out and say, "Hey, look at me. I am in pain."

If we follow in 1985 and 1986 policies that bring us less than maximum growth then there can be a coalition of protectionism, a coalition of pain that steps in and says, "Whoa, I don't want my company to be suffering and I am in too much pain to let you do anything except protect me."

If that happens, we are faced with an absolute disaster.

So in order for America to grow fast enough, in order for us to participate in a global economy, we are going to have to think about how do we get American companies, American jobs, American productivity, moving up at a fast enough rate that even the companies that are decaying feel fairly good about it, that they are in fact part of a growing economy in which they feel certain they can get a better job, they can invest in a better industry, they can move their resources to a better future. Because if we suffer a severe recession in 1985 or 1986 the pressures for protectionism in this country will be massive.

We see today, this week, whether it is in farming or it is in steel, but even in the middle of the greatest boom we have had in years, there are tremendous pressures to protect industry. It is impossible to imagine how tremendous the pressure would get if we had a severe recession. And, again, as Professor Dunn said:

> The success stories among developing countries have been possible, however, only because the United States and its allies have been willing to purchase growing volumes of their exports. If this country now becomes protectionist, the successful strategy of the rapidly growing countries will become impossible for nations such as India and China leaving them no choice but to move toward an inward looking, centrally planned approach to economic policy. The United States has won a major intellectual victory in the developing countries, but we may throw that success away and literally snatch defeat from the jaws of victory.

What then is the first, the very first step for 1985? It is that the President should suggest an agenda for growth. The President should come to the Congress and propose an omnibus growth bill. If you will, compared to the Gramm-Latta budget bill, which is 3,000 pages, we need the Gramm-Latta of growth. We need a bill which says here are the changes in law, in regulation, in tax policy, which will allow American companies to grow.

Let me give you just a few examples. Clearly, No. 1 should be enterprise zones. We should encourage new factories, new jobs, in the central city, in poor rural areas, in places where there are people who want to work and have no jobs.

Second, we should change the current incredibly dumb law on investing in space. Currently if you put—and I have verified this last night at the Harris Corp. where their attorney said, yes, this is true, so it is hard to believe, but listen carefully—equipment in space, in satellites, in a new factory in our manned space station, you cannot take a tax credit because the Internal Revenue Service has ruled that it is out of the country.

Now, everything about America's future means we should be reaching out into space which is a place—thanks to the space shuttle—where we would have the maximum possible advantage over the Japanese and the Russians in competing. We can do things in space nobody else can do. Yet, our tax law discourages it.

I said this last night at a high technology dinner in Melbourne, FL, for the Harris Corp. I was a little worried because it frankly sounds so dumb I cannot believe even our Government is doing it, even our bureaucracy is doing it. But the Internal Revenue Service has ruled that the tax credit law says you can only take a tax credit for things in the United States. And by definition if it is in orbit it is not in the United States.

I said I think that is true, although as a historian I am not a tax lawyer, and I do not invest in high technology. The counsel for the company said that is absolutely true. They have an experiment going up in the space shuttle and they have to take the accounting process of not taking a tax credit on that experiment.

Well, what does that mean? That means we currently discourage companies from taking the gamble in the future. To give you an idea how big that gamble potentially is, the recent Discovery flight, the space shuttle Discovery, carried the first nonastronaut, a technician from McDonnell Douglas and Johnson & Johnson, who is manufacturing a hormone in space. It turns out that for reasons that involve a zerogravity environment you can create 700 times as much of this hormone in space as you can on Earth. Seven hundred times.

President Reagan in a recent speech said that means you could create more in space in 1 month than you could create on Earth in 60 years. When you think of it that way it gives you a sense of perspective.

The estimate I saw was that that one breakthrough may be worth $1 billion a year to the United States in medicine. That is, by the middle of the 1990's, that one breakthrough may be worth $1 billion a year.

Now, where are most of those jobs going to be? They are going to be in Buffalo, NY. They are going to be in Canton, OH. They are going to be in Atlanta, GA. They are going to be in south Florida. They are not going to be out there in space. There are going to be a handful of jobs in space and thousands of jobs on Earth. Just as with the airline industry there are relatively few pilots, but there are a lot of reservationists, there are a lot of clerks, there are a lot of baggage handlers, there are a lot of mechanics, there are a lot of manufacturers.

Similarly, we have a chance here to move into space aggressively, to create jobs in America, to create a billion dollar industry and we have a tax policy that slows it down.

Another example, a brilliant paper was published this year by a task force on high technology led by Congressman ZSCHAU of California and Congressman RITTER of Pennsylvania. They listed 14 specific changes that would encourage growth. One of them is to change the 1890's pre-Henry Ford, pre-Wright brothers, antitrust policy of the United States which was designed for large central railroads.

That antitrust policy has grown over the years much like kudzu in Georgia to become an absolute handicap to American high technology companies trying to compete with the Japanese.

Where our companies cannot work together, Japanese companies can. Well, all of us who believe in team work know that if I can work together and you cannot, I am going to beat you.

So, one of the simple changes in law would be an antitrust exemption to allow high technology companies to go ahead and work together. We are not in any danger at any time in the near future of a monopoly in America taking over the way the New York Central Railroad did in the 1880's. That whole technology is gone. We are in an era where we want to encourage American companies to work together, not discourage it.

So, as I said, the No. 1 step in 1985 has got to be an agenda for growth because if we were to achieve 5.5 percent growth a year for the next 4 years, that is about as much growth as we achieved in the 1960's. It is 60 percent as much growth as Japan's best 4 years. Half as much growth as Singapore, Hong Kong, or Taiwan, or South Korea.

□ 1900

Think about that. We achieve as much growth as we achieved in the 1960's, 60 percent of the growth of the Japanese or half the growth of Singapore, South Korea, Hong Kong, or Taiwan. In the 4 years, the sheer size of our economy would mop up most of the Federal deficit as people got richer, had better jobs, built more factories and, therefore, could pay more taxes because they are now richer.

Therefore, that is the first step for the health of the world, for the health of our inner cities, for the health of our industrial Midwest, for the health of the Nation and for balancing the budget.

I would be delighted to yield to my good friend from Florida.

Mr. MACK. I just wanted to build on a comment that you made about Congressman ZSCHAU and Congressman RITTER. At a presentation they made on their ideas about how to stimulate growth, one of the messages that they delivered—and, frankly, I found the figures rather shocking—was again the effect of the changes in the capital gains rate.

In 1969, when the capital gains rate was increased, the amount of dollars that were available in the venture capital markets of this country just dropped and dropped rather significantly; and for a period of time from 1969 through 1977, when the rate was changed once again, the amount of dollars that were available to the venture capital markets of this country averaged somewhere between $75 million and $100 million annually. After the rate was decreased in 1977, for the 18 months following that there was $1 billion available into venture capital markets of this country, and in 1983 it was estimated that $4.2 billion was available to venture capital in this country.

People ask the question today: How in the world did we ever create 6 or 7 million new jobs in the last 18 months?

The answer is very clear. There were dollars available to venture capital, encouraging risk, encouraging starting up new businesses, small businesses, where jobs are being created. And that is an example of the type of item that I would hope to see in this agenda for growth, in this omnibus growth bill, that we will hopefully have an opportunity to take a look at in 1985.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the gentleman.

Let me say that the second point is a 2-year budget and a 2-year appropriations bill, and the reasons are simple:

First, we need one large overall vote in which the popularity of the President, the popularity of the national desire to control spending is brought to bear.

Second, in a large vote like that on the floor of the House, we can defeat the subcommittees and the special interests in a way which allows the Congress at large to write a budget for the Nation instead of simply adding up all of the various tiny budgets put together by special interest groups and subcommittees.

Third, it allows you to gain economies of scale. If you can go to a tank manufacturer and say, "We are going to buy so many tanks per month for the next 2 years," you get a cheaper price per tank than if they are waiting for the next continuing resolution to be adopted by the Congress. You allow the Pentagon, you allow the Health Care Financing Administration to plan rationally for 2 solid years.

Finally, you also gain an advantage in the money markets and interest rates because they know that basically we set the pattern of spending for 2 solid years.

If this Congress coming in in January cannot gain the courage to decisively control the budget and appropriations for 2 years before June 1985, then, as we get closer to the next election, it will be impossible to control spending.

So the second principle is a 2-year budget and 2-year appropriation.

Third, as I said earlier, we have to redevelop frugality as a style of government. We have to recognize that every dollar we spend is a dollar that comes out of the taxpayer's pocket, a dollar that some family cannot spend for themselves and their children. That means, I think, that we should give a President in the 2-year budget a 2-year line-item veto and some limited impoundment authority so that for one time under this President immediately after a very popular election, he can pick and choose and he can tighten up. It means that we should have a report by the Congress to adopt a series of specific proposals chosen out of the recent commission which looked at all of the spending, because the Grace Commission did pretty good work. And while much of what they suggested cannot be done, there is probably $5, $10, $15 billion in savings which could be gotten if we were to look at it in a very serious way.

Finally, to be quite candid, I think there would have to be some areas of nitpicking. There are some things we do as a country that, if you really sat down and really looked at it, you would say, "That's silly, that doesn't need to be done."

So I think frugality has to come back in.

Fourth, we have to develop new ideas, new ways of delivering goods and services.

In a book that Marianne and I wrote recently called "Window of Opportunity," there is a chapter called "Reforming the Great Bureaucracies." There is a section called "The Best Possible Health Care for Everyone," just to give you one area of the kinds of changes we are talking about. And I emphasize new ideas because one of the weaknesses of the liberal welfare state is that it wants to ask the question: More or less?

I do not think that is the correct question. The real question is future versus past; better versus worse.

For example, if we have an alcoholic, is giving him more bourbon more? Is that better? Or is that in fact worse. I would argue it is worse. Does it help them live in the future, or does it in fact trap them into their past? I would argue it traps them into their past. Indeed, much of the problem with the Walter Mondale liberal Democratic approach and with the liberal welfare approach has been that it is a process of asking us to spend more through the same tired bureaucracies on the same programs that do not work.

I would suggest instead that we look at changes in health care, for example.

The eight areas of necessary change are:

First, focusing on preventive medicine and good health;

Second, improving research at the vision and strategy level to transform specific areas;

Third, decentralizing decision making so we can move more rapidly to new technologies and procedures;

Fourth, sharing new medical knowledge more widely and systematically so that people can adopt new methods without professional involvement;

Fifth, relying more on the patients and their families, friends and neighbors, instead of health care professionals;

Sixth, returning power and responsibility to the patients in the local institutions;

Seventh, eliminating national responsibility for what ultimately must be individual decisions; and Eighth, changing the third-party payment system so that the individuals once again are directly involved in the market cost.

These are systems changes, and we take something like 10 or 12 pages in the book to describe them in some detail. But the point I want to drive at here is that almost every one of those is not a question of more money in the budget, it is a question of rethinking our current model of health care.

We similarly suggest rethinking education.

We also suggest that we have to shift from the welfare system we have today to some kind of workfare program for able-bodied adults under the age of retirement.

My point is this: If you look at the experiments being done by people like Bob Woodson, the brilliant young advocate of neighborhood control of public housing programs, if you look at the kind of work being done by the Military Reform Caucus led by people such as JOHN KASICH of Ohio and JIM COURTER of New Jersey, if you look at the ideas that people like Lodzhansky, in the area of building a nationwide televised high school math and science enrichment program, there are new ideas we should move toward today.

Fifth, we must move to a simplified tax system, something like the Kemp-Kasten bill. I think that is a vital area that almost everyone agrees has to be examined and which will bring in more revenue in the long run, first, because if you eliminate the shelters, people will start investing their money to build new factories instead of to hide from the Internal Revenue Service; and, second, if you reestablish a sense of fairness, people will come back out from the underground economy and start paying their fair share of taxes again.

Sixth, we have to have a real focus on how we deal with interest paid on the national debt.

The fact is that today interest on the national debt is the third largest item in the Federal budget, larger than the Army and the Marine Corps combined, yet we in the Congress pay less attention to how we handle interest on the debt than we do on how you build tank treads for the M-1 tank.

There are a number of steps which could be taken, and this was the genius, for example, of Alexander Hamilton in the 18th century in funding the debt as it was being handled at the time we became a country.

There are two principles to the debt. First, you want to minimize its cost and, second, you want to build in a hedge against inflation.

Just as under the liberal welfare state they liked bracket creep to push people secretly into higher brackets through inflation, that made it more desirable for the Government to inflate the currency because it raised revenue without raising taxes.

We I think in building an opportunity society want to look at experiments such as offering gold backed bonds or offering bonds that are guaranteed by the Consumer Price Index plus 2 or 3 percent, so that we build in hedges against inflation, so that after Ronald Reagan there would be so much of the Federal debt tied up in anti-inflation bonds that no future liberal President could afford to inflate the currency.

Finally, and seventh, we must have monetary policy reform which starts with a pledge by the President and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board that we will try to keep inflation under 3 percent. Now, there was some very eloquent talk earlier about the problems of cost-of-living increases. The fact is, if we can have an honest dollar we do not have to do anything in the House of Representatives about cost-of-living increases. If the dollar is honest, people do not need then to get extra money from Washington, because the money they are currently getting will buy what they need.

Similarly, if you have honest money and people know that for the next 4 years you are going to keep inflation under, say, 3 percent, interest rates will drop dramatically. That will both save you money on the debt, because you will be paying less in interest for the debt, and second, it will increase revenues, because if interest rates were to drop dramatically, if we had, let us say, 3 percent inflation and people believed it would stay at that level, then we normally would not have more than a 6- or 7-percent prime rate. That would mean, clearly, without any question, that we would then be in a position that we would have a tremendous savings on the interest on the debt, a savings amounting to tens of billions of dollars.

In wrapping up, let me make these points: Good news tends to get better. That is, there is a positive synergism that develops over time. If you have the right tax policy, the right red tape and regulations, the right management system, the right cultural attitude, your country gets richer and richer and richer. But as the Carter-Mondale years proved, if you have a liberal welfare state system that has big bureaucracy interfering, that has very high taxes, that has high inflation, that has an antibusiness, antientrepreneur bias, that has a culture that in fact weakens what is going on, each one multiples negatively against the other.

You can have a positive synergism into the future, or a negative synergism. You can have an avalanche of disaster, which can carry us down as we discovered from 1977 to 1981, or we can have a tremendous, rapidly increasing growth rate.

Finally, what is at stake? The choice we will make in the next 4 or 5 months, in the election in 2 months, in the decisions of President Reagan beyond that, in the decisions of this Congress as we react to it, are choices which affect every person on this planet, whether you are in Bangladesh, or in Lebanon, or in El Salvador, or you are in Los Angeles or in Atlanta or Miami or Buffalo. The fact is that if we adopt a strategy for growth and we implement that strategy and we adopt this seven-part opportunity society budget plan, we will ultimately achieve a balanced budget with a very different kind of government, very different services, a very different kind of productivity, in a world which is improved dramatically. A world in which every person, every young person on the planet can adopt an opportunity society model of growth, and terrorism and communism will wane as they clearly fail to achieve the kind of laws we want.

I honestly believe that is what is at stake; that is how vital the next few months are. That is why we must find a creative, dynamic approach to developing the budget and the Government from 1985 to 1989.

THE PANAMA CANAL—BUYING A DEBT TO BE PAID IN BLOOD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. HANSEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. HANSEN of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, 7 years ago, against the will of the vast majority of the American people, the Carter administration illegally forced into being the nefarious Panama Canal Treaties. It might ordinarily be pleasant for those of us who fought against these concessions to remind the leaders of the Congress at the time that, as we predicted, the transfer of the Panama Canal was a major leap toward making the Caribbean a Soviet lake. In an amazingly brief time, our forebodings became fact.

Many of those who acted here and in the other body have rightly been retired from public life by the people for their complicity in this epochal event. What we do not yet know is whether American lives will have to be spent to undo the rash and essentially illegal acts done in the name of befriending a petty Panamanian dictator who desperately needed a bailout from a scandalous debt with free-wheeling international banks.

Today is the fifth anniversary of the rejection by the House of implementing legislation. To its credit, this body at first responded to the will and the needs of the people of this country. But, the history of this shameful affair is clear. Nothing, not the rules of this House, not the rules of the Senate, not the indignation of the people of the country and, finally, not even of the Constitution itself, would be allowed to stand in the way of this monstrous perversion of the duty we have sworn to protect this Nation against all its enemies, both foreign and domestic.

Unfortunately our vote against implementing the treaties was soon overturned. In 6 days, sufficient pressure had been brought by the President through arm-twisting and by the doom and gloom lobby and fear mongers to finally, on the 26th of September, force the House to pass the implementation. The rights of the people under the Constitution had again been violated in order to guarantee that our ability to defend ourselves and to protect the West would be dealt yet another blow, a blow struck twice in rapid succession as President Carter almost simultaneously handed the key nation of Nicaragua over to the Communist Sandinista. We should keep this day in mind as we now struggle to stem the forces which ourselves helped put in play in Central America.

I have often wondered whether the subsequent terrorism of American Embassies around the world and the taking of our Embassy in Tehran, 2 months later, would have happened if we had shown the world that our priorities were to defend this Nation and the West against its implacable enemies. While we were being duped into giving away Nicaragua and the Panama Canal to placate the Communists, and to bail out corrupt dictators and reckless international bankers, the Marxist radicals have expanded their Cuban toe-hold in the Western Hemisphere to turn the Caribbean region, so vital to our economic and military security into a huge staging area for Soviet aggression.

If "the price of liberty is eternal vigilance," the counterfeit of moral bankruptcy is buying us a debt which is too often being paid with the blood of the innocent.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

OCTOBER 16 IS WORLD FOOD DAY

HON. CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, JR.

OF MARYLAND

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, Thursday, October 11, marks the begining of a very important week in the District of Columbia.

On that day, the Capital Area Community Food Bank begins a food drive to help the less fortunate citizens of our Nation's Capital.

The Community Food Bank, with the help of Safeway, Giant Foods, local 400 of the United Food & Commercial Workers Union, the D.C. National Guard, and Gray & Co., will be asking grocery shoppers to donate whatever they can to "open" carts in Safeway and Giant stores.

Since its founding 4 years ago, the Capital Area Community Food Bank has grown impressively. It now supports the efforts of 270 church pantries, soup kitchens, and food distribution services. The food bank helps feed nearly 100,000 people every month. And for 1 week in October, the food bank is asking all of us to help.

We have all grown accustomed to reports of hunger and famine in remote parts of the world, far from our shores. But, to our shame, there is hunger in America too. There is hunger in the Capital City. The efforts of the Capital Area Community Food Bank to help feed all hungry people in the District of Columbia deserve the support of the entire metropolitan community. I urge everyone to help the food bank not only during the week of October 11, but throughout the year.●

AVERTING NUCLEAR WAR

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, the growing concern among the public regarding the global proliferation of nuclear weapons and the threat of nuclear war are concerns which everyone in this body shares. The horrors of nuclear war are well understood and there clearly are no winners in such a conflict. The question, therefore, is how nuclear war can best be averted.

Unfortunately, there is not a consensus on the means to achieve a lasting peace. As election day draws near, the call for a nuclear freeze as the most effective means of addressing the nuclear threat has grown increasingly strong from certain quarters. In my view, however, an immediate freeze will do more to threaten our national security than to lessen the possibility of war.

First, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the freeze resolution ignores recent trends in the nuclear balance. Whereas the Soviet Union during the past decade has steadily and rapidly built up and modernized its nuclear arsenal, particularly in the destabilizing land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles, the United States has just begun to modernize its strategic forces. While the Reagan administration's modernization program has made progress in upgrading our Nation's strategic force capability, an immediate freeze would preclude our ability to further modernize our forces and would maintain existing military imbalances between the United States and the Soviet Union. In my view, by adopting a policy of military disadvantage, we would be seriously weakening the credibility of our deterrent capability.

Second, an immediate nuclear freeze ignores the history of Soviet compliance with arms control agreements. Although President Reagan supports the need for effective means of verification, the Soviet Union record clearly indicates its disdain for the verifiability requirement for arms control agreements. As documented in the President's January report to Congress on Soviet verification and compliance, "A Quarter Century of Soviet Compliance Practices Under Arms Control Commitments: 1958–1983," there is a clear historical pattern of Soviet noncompliance with arms control agreements. While I recognize that it is vital that we proceed with negotiations toward the objectives which we all seek, reductions in Soviet-United States nuclear arsenals, I believe it is equally crucial that any arms control agreement be verifiable. The serious questions cannot be ignored, however, which exist regarding whether the Soviets would honor the provision of the freeze with any greater degree of integrity than they have those of numerous existing treaties and agreements.

Mr. Speaker, the American people recognize that arms control and reduction are in our national interest and that it is vital that the United States pursue all reasonable and appropriate avenues to bring the Soviet Union back to the negotiating table. I would submit, however, that the majority of our citizens would not support an arms control agreement which would lock the United States into a position of military inferiority and which could not be verified with any great degree of confidence. I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, an article by Kenneth H. Adelman, Director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, which appeared in the September 7, 1984, edition of the Wall Street Journal. In this article, Mr. Adelman, through the interpretation of poll data, underscores the public's growing sophistication concerning the issues of arms control and United States-Soviet negotiations and recognition that we must not succumb to simplistic solutions to the complex problem of nuclear proliferation.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 7, 1984]

PANDERING TO PUBLIC ON ARMS RACE WON'T WASH

(By Kenneth H. Adelman)

'Tis the season for some political "leaders" to lead by scurrying ahead of where they believe the public is marching. But beware: On the vital issues of arms control and U.S.-Soviet negotiations the public is far more sophisticated than is generally thought.

In a nutshell, the American people hold several strong but somewhat contrasting views, as is appropriate given the complexities of the real world. They deeply want arms control but overwhelmingly believe the Soviets violate such agreements; they want the U.S. government to stand up to the Soviets but also to sit down with them in negotiations; and they support a strong defense but believe military spending is a heavy burden.

This is no simple-minded public that can be mollified, much less satisfied, by energetic advocacy of a nuclear freeze. Polls show strong public backing for the idea of a freeze—such as 72% (Gallup, May 1981) and 83% (NBC, May 1982). But the polls also disclose that such staunch support transforms into staunch opposition when a freeze is placed in a realistic context. For example, CBS/New York Times found in May 1982 that a nuclear freeze supported by 72% was opposed by 71% when it was assumed that Soviet cheating could not be detected (which I might add, would be the case). Similarly, a freeze was opposed by 60% when assumed that it would end up with the Soviet Union having "somewhat greater nuclear strength than the U.S.," and by 67% if the U.S. "would have to freeze its weapons first in order to get the Soviet Union to agree to freeze its nuclear weapons."

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

Looked at another way, an April 1984 poll for the Committee on the Present Danger (CPD) shows that 59% of the American people believe that the Soviets would not be willing to negotiate a freeze at equal levels of weapons, 71% say the Soviets can't be trusted to honor a freeze agreement and 62% believe that the Soviets were using the nuclear-freeze issue "to try to gain a permanent advantage over the U.S."

Polls also show strong public support for arms-control talks and agreements generally. It is not surprising that in 1979 Harris found 85% agreeing that "it is vital for the two countries to reach an agreement to limit nuclear arms." Recent polling by the Atlantic Institute (April 1984) reveals that the desire for arms-control negotiations with the Soviets has risen appreciably over the past two years or so.

That general support, however, is tempered when it butts up against real-world considerations such as verification and equality. Earlier this year, the CPD-sponsored poll found that 76% placed verification—confidence in or detecting Soviet cheating—as "very important" in any arms-control accord. About 70% believed that the Soviet Union is currently "violating existing nuclear arms control agreements." Only one in eight Americans thought the Soviets were adhering to such agreements. In short, the public overwhelmingly believes the Soviets cheat in this critical realm.

Nonetheless, the need to control nuclear weapons and to come to terms with the Soviet Union have remained constant parts of the post-war American psyche. Awareness of the horror of nuclear-weapons use did not spring up suddenly since 1981, as some administration critics would have it. Early in the 1950s the prospect that another world war would involve atomic weapons used against the U.S. was widely perceived and feared. In 1958 a Gallup poll found that the public expected 70% of the U.S. population would die in a nuclear war.

Such a reasonable fear has, however, not led the American people into the unreasonable advocacy of "no nukes." On the contrary, the public has widely grasped the deterrent role of nuclear weapons in helping keep the peace. In an April 1954 Gallup poll, more than half (54%) believed that the hydrogen bomb made another world war less likely. In a 1982 ABC/Washington Post poll, more than half (55%) stood against the U.S. declaring "no first use" of nuclear weapons.

While appreciating such key factors providing for post-war security and supporting U.S. strategic doctrine, the American public has strongly favored negotiation with the Soviets. This was true even during the early chilly days of the Cold War. In April 1948, in the wake of the Soviets imposing a communist government in previously democratic Czechoslovakia, a Gallup poll found that 63% of a national sample thought it would be a good idea for President Truman to "call an international meeting with Stalin and heads of other nations to work out more effective plans for peace." But here too, only about 40% of those who favored such a conference had confidence in its success; more than a third thought it would fail.

Clearly, the American people want their government to stand up to the Soviets even as it sits down with them for serious negotiations. In late 1982, 84% of those who attached importance to the need to match Soviet military power also favored negotiations (Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, November/December 1982). Most Americans now support the U.S. maintaining "a firm attitude backed by military strength" in attempting to achieve an arms-control agreement with the Soviets, rather than seeking a "breakthrough by taking the initiative in making some arms reductions" (Gallup, April 1984).

The Reagan administration's approach to arms control is right on key with these public views. The administration's policy combines the two tracks of maintaining military balance while pursuing dialogue, standing tall while being willing to sit down and do business.

A hallmark of that policy—the business we wish to do—is to reduce nuclear weapons. As the public correctly senses, nuclear arsenals are far too big on both sides. So instead of merely freezing nuclear weapons at their all-too-high current levels, and locking in Soviet advantages that threaten stability in the nuclear balance, the president seeks deep reductions in the nuclear forces of both sides. This must be done, of course, down to equal levels and with effective verification—again the public's real concerns.

Unfortunately, the Soviets last year walked out of the intermediate-range nuclear-arms talks and suspended the strategic-nuclear-arms talks. They did so, quite simply, because the West would not allow itself to be intimidated into giving up or accepting a lopsided intermediate-range arms agreement. The Reagan administration will continue to take every reasonable step to help show the Soviets that it is in both sides' interests to reduce to equal and more stable levels.

Poll data continue to show that the American people's instincts on arms control are sound and insightful. They should not be affronted by simple-minded political pandering. When faced with the facts and asked the right questions, they are pretty much on key. Don't sell them short.●

MARIO BIAGGI, LIFETIME MEMBER OF THE AOH

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, last evening, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, our Nation's oldest and largest Irish-American organization, conferred a distinct and unprecedented honor upon our colleague, MARIO BIAGGI. The AOH awarded its first-ever lifetime membership to Congressman BIAGGI for his tireless efforts as chairman of the 104 member bipartisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs.

I regret that I was unable to join him on this special occasion because of illness; but I am pleased to be able to bring this well deserved tribute to the attention of the entire House.

I know of no person who has done more to earn this prestigious honor than MARIO BIAGGI. On September 27, of this year, the ad hoc committee, which he founded and on which I am proud to serve, will observe its seventh anniversary. The relationship between the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the ad hoc committee has been extremely close over those years. In fact the AOH together with the Irish national caucus requested establishment of the committee.

In the 7 years under Congressman BIAGGI's leadership, the committee has focused long overdue attention of the national and international communities on the tragedy which continues in Northern Ireland. The committee has and will continue to press for a more positive role of our Government in working for a lasting peace in that troubled land.

MARIO BIAGGI was honored by the AOH for his longstanding commitment to the cause of peace, justice, freedom, and human rights in Northern Ireland. He has manifested this commitment throughout his 15-year career in the House, particularly through his strong leadership of the ad hoc committee.

MARIO has been to Ireland's six Northern counties at least six times. He has met with many different groups to bring about an end to discrimination, whether institutional or the result of involvement of U.S. interests doing business in the North.

MARIO's recent legislative initiative, House Concurrent Resolution 21, expresses the opposition of Congress to the continued use of plastic bullets in Northern Ireland. He called a special meeting of the ad hoc committee on September 6, to hear statements from Americans who were on a trip to Belfast last August. While there, they witnessed first hand the brutality of the paramilitary police force which rules the six northern counties with little regard to human life or basic rights. A large and mostly peaceful crowd was sprayed with deadly plastic bullets, killing one man and injuring many others including some Americans.

I was astounded once again to hear of the unwarranted and uncivilized actions of officials who enjoys the full support of the British Government. I commend MARIO for continuing to champion the cause of human rights in Northern Ireland, and refusing to flinch from the controversies surrounding that war torn region. His commitment to peace and a united Ireland has earned the lasting respect of the American Irish community.

At last night's ceremony, Joseph A. Roche, national president of the AOH made the formal presentation of his organization's special tribute to Congressman BIAGGI. The affair also marked the opening of the new AOH national headquarters.

I would like to insert the inscription on MARIO's lifetime membership which follows:

The National Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, Incorporated Recognizes MARIO BIAGGI, Member of Congress, and chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee for Irish Affairs, and because of his tireless efforts and unselfish dedication to the aspirations and endeavors of the Irish people for complete and absolute independence and peace with justice from any and all foreign powers bestows upon him lifetime honorary membership in the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, Inc., and we are proud to welcome MARIO as our brother.

Recognized this day September 19, in the District of Columbia, Washington D.C. in the year of our Lord 1984.

JOSEPH A ROCHE,
National President.
THOMAS D. MCNABB,
National Secretary.●

INTELLIGENCE IDENTITIES ACT: WORDS, NO TEETH

HON. DAN LUNGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, the calculated, politically motivated leaking of highly sensitive information has become Washington's version of the Rona Barrett gossip column. The furor over mining of Nicaragua's harbors poses a serious question with dangerous implications: Is our democratic form of government unable to keep any secrets, no matter how sensitive to our national interest? Certainly one could question whether Congress has the capability to practice oversight of intelligence activities once those activities are viewed as an integral part of a partisan foreign policy debate.

On August 1, 1984, Congressman HENRY HYDE introduced House Joint Resolution 633, for the purpose of eliminating House and Senate Intelligence Committees to create a streamlined Joint Committee on Intelligence. The joint committee is designed to diminish the possibilities of partisan posturing and significantly reduce the number of individuals having access to sensitive information. Hopefully this will minimize the risk of damaging disclosures.

Mr. Speaker, in an effort to inform my colleagues of the seriousness of this issue, I am inserting at this point in the RECORD a recent article by Congressman HYDE entitled "Intelligence Identities Act: Words, No Teeth." I commend him for his diligent efforts to focus attention on this important area effecting our national security.

INTELLIGENCE IDENTITIES ACT: WORDS, NO TEETH

(By Representative Henry J. Hyde)

As a member of Congress, I frequently witness legislative efforts that are long on symbolism but short on substance. Sometimes these efforts are so useless that they remind me of a baseball pitcher with the stylish windup of Hall of Famer Sandy Koufax but who forgot to pick up the ball!

A case in point is the Intelligence Identities Protection Act that Congress passed a couple of years ago. What triggered this nobly intended—but ineffective—initiative was a relentless stream of disclosures. Certain individuals, including turncoat U.S. intelligence officer Philip Agee, were busily and systematically disclosing the names of those clandestinely employed by the various U.S. intelligence agencies.

The CIA station chief in Athens was killed after his cover was blown by the magazine CounterSpy. Subsequently, in a near tragedy, the homes of the U.S. Embassy's first secretary in Jamaica and an AID employe were fired upon shortly after the American editor of Covert Action Information Bulletin claimed in a press conference that those U.S. officials and 13 other Americans, as well as Jamaicans, were associated with the CIA.

In this instance, not only were the names of these individuals revealed, but also their home addresses, telephone and auto license numbers. Fortunately, the American officials and families involved in this attack survived unscathed. It was a close call, however, as two of the bullets penetrated the bedroom window of one of the children who was providentially away at the time. Against this compelling backdrop, Congress finally attempted to remedy a situation that was seriously undermining human intelligence collection efforts around the world.

Lamentably, the legislation that eventually emerged was so watered down that it has not really accomplished its objective of deterring the exposure of undercover intelligence personnel.

After considerable debate, Congress determined that for a non-government individual to be convicted under this legislation, the government would have to prove that such a person had engaged in "a pattern of activities intended to identify and expose covert agents and with reason to believe that such activities would impair or impede the intelligence activities of the United States."

Clearly not covered by this legislative provision would be those journalists who, during the course of a story, casually mention the name of a covert intelligence operative. Particularly instructive in this regard is the conference report to the Identities Protection Act which offers the following interpretation:

"A journalist writing stories about the CIA would not be engaged in the requisite 'pattern of activities,' even if the stories he wrote included the names of one or more covert agents, unless the government proved that there was an intent to identify and expose agents. To meet the standard of the bill, a discloser must be engaged in a purposeful enterprise of revealing identities—he must, in short, be in the business of 'naming names.'"

Armed with this congressional analysis and legislative history, many journalists have no qualms about dropping the name of an undercover agent in order to make a story a little "sexier" or seemingly more credible. For example, the Washington Post ran an article by correspondent John Lantigua in a early July 1984 edition that illustrates my point.

The thrust of the story concerned an American citizen waiting to be tried in Nicaragua for espionage. Among other things, Lantigua reported that this individual declared that he sold intelligence information to a U.S. diplomat whom Lantigua named and claimed an unnamed former U.S. State Department official had revealed as having been employed by the CIA.

In my opinion, such a titillating disclosure violates the spirit, if not the letter, of the Identities Protection Act.

(Incidentally, it is interesting and ironical to note that Lantigua took pains to protect the anonymity of his ex-State Department source while having no compunction whatsoever about revealing the alleged CIA ties of a U.S. Embassy employe who may have been falsely identified as can be the case in leaks of this nature.)

These actions point up that, from an intelligence standpoint, the random or isolated disclosure by an individual journalist can be just as deleterious as the wholesale revelations that used to be featured in the Covert Action Information Bulletin.

In fairness to the Washington Post, it must be mentioned that it is not alone in allowing the publication of reports with damaging revelations regarding those under cover. As Jay Peterzell indicates in the May/June 1984 edition of First Principles: National Security and Civil Liberties, such prestigious and reputable news organs as the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal have also published—since the passage of the identities protection legislation—similar stories in the apparent belief that they would not be "exposed to the prosecution under the Identities Act as now interpreted, even though many of these disclosures appear to have embarrassed the U.S. government or to have interfered with ongoing intelligence activities."

Elsewhere in the same article, Peterzell insightfully observes that "perhaps the most significant effect of the conference report on the legislation is to resolve the doubts of reporters and others about the intended scope of the identities act. Lawyers for the Washington Post and the Christian Science Monitor said the report had convinced them the Act is not meant to apply to reporters who identify an agent in the context of a news story."

In sum, the Intelligence Identities Protection Act has turned out to be largely symbolic legislation.

I will concede that it does appear to have caused the Covert Action Information Bulletin to stop publishing its "Naming Names" column, but even this notorious journal has dared to reveal occasionally the identity of individuals within the context of a story.

Again, Peterzell is informative as he points out that the Bulletin's editior, Louis Wolf, has stated that "on sereral occasions we have published articles that discuss CIA activities and identified people when it was important to the story. We got legal advice and went ahead."

Short of remedial legislation, my only and fervent hope, therefore, is that responsibile, professional journalists will emulate the recent example of the Christian Science Monitor which decided, according to Peterzell, not to reveal a name "for moral rather than legal reasons."

This is indeed a transcendant reason and such restraint could literally mean the difference between life and death for some dedicated employe of this nation's intelligence community.●

THE BRITISH EXPERIENCE WITH ENTERPRISE ZONES

HON. STAN LUNDINE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, as Congress considers proposals for creation of enterprise zones, it is helpful to review the experience of other countries which have initiated similar programs. I commend to other Members the excellent article which follows reviewing the final monitoring report on the 1981–83 British Enterprise Zone Program. It provides a valuable insight into the practical application of the theory of enterprise zones.

The British experience with enterprise zones clearly shows that the proponents of enterprise zones are misled in their enthusiasm for zones as a panacea to a declining industrial base. British enterprise zones alone were clearly not enough to ensure revitalization of the distressed areas. Additional measures such as direct public expenditures and enhanced political attention were the critical elements to the more successful zones. For example, one of the most successful British zones centered on a steel plant experiencing severe trade-related problems. This steel plant benefited from a well planned package of assistance designed to assist it in becoming more competitive and self-sustaining. Zone benefits were only a part of the entire package of assistance, which included other components similar to our EDA title IX and trade adjustment programs.

What emerges from a review of British enterprise zones is an understanding that the revitalization of a declining industrial base cannot be accomplished through a narrow, tax oriented program. As I have advocated over many years, a more comprehensive industrial strategy which makes effective use of a variety of economic development tools is needed if we are to create jobs and stimulate small business development.

The article follows:

[From Nation's Cities Weekly, Sept. 10, 1984]

BRITISH ENTERPRISE ZONES: A LOOK AT 2 YEARS EXPERIENCE

(By William Barnes)

The final monitoring report has been released on the British Enterprise Zone program. That program has been closely watched here as EZ proposals have been debated in the U.S. Congress and in many states.

The report, by Roger Tym Associate of London, covers a full two-years of experience—1981 through 1983—in the 15 first-round zones. (A second set of sites were designated prior to the British elections.)

Public expenditures in the Zones, including foregone taxes as well as site assembly, preparation and development, total pounds 132.9 million (or about $192 million at current exchange rates). The Zones attracted 725 firms employing 8065 persons.

In addition, there has been a 26 percent reduction in the land area in the EZs that it not immediately available for development. Much of this was accomplished with public money. New development increased from 128,000 square meters in 1981–82 to 236,000 square meters in 1982–83. The private sector share of this development was 69 percent in 1982–83. Only four Zones accounted for 59 percent of floor-space developed.

The Report contains several important notes for those interested in EZ proposals in the U.S. First, "the most important lesson from the . . . EZs is the importance of support measures to ensure that development takes place." The Report cites two main aspects of these measures: public expenditures and professional and managerial resources to implement development programs.

Second, the Report concludes that "the beneficial effects of EZs have been achieved principally by the tax reliefs" not by the relaxation of local regulations. While elimination of some planning uncertainties was useful, "liberation from bureaucracy" was "less significant" than increased efforts at "active collaboration between the public and private sectors."

Third, the net effect of EZs is dramatically less than the gross effect numbers given above. The Report estimates that 75 percent of firms moving into the Zones would be operating anyway in the same county and 85 percent would be in the same region even without the presence of the Zone. So at best EZ expenditures were needed for 25 percent of the jobs created; the rest were going to be in the area anyway. Allowing for the Report's estimate of a small increase in output due to EZ incentives, my casual computations put the EZ public costs at $71,428 per net job to the area. By comparison, the Local Public Works countercyclical jobs program of 1976 and 1977 in the U.S. produced jobs at $38,000 apiece.

Finally, the simple fact of designation as a Zone seems to have had substantial effect on the area designated. "The essence" of the whole situation, says the Report, "is that EZs get priority." In many of the Zones, public investment was planned anyway but EZ designation speeded the process. And the visibility and public commitment to the Zones helped remove bottlenecks and obtain additional public investment.●

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE JOSEPHINE SAXER IRWIN

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the memory—and to the life of compassion, concern, and commitment—of Josephine Saxer Irwin; 2 years ago, on Women's Equality Day, I had the honor of participating in a vigil in support of the equal rights amendment. Josephine Irwin was the featured speaker that evening. She had lost none of the energy or enthusiasm that marked her entire life. She had strong convictions, and she never wavered in her support of them. We are all a bit diminished by her loss, and we are all challenged by her life to fight for justice, and never give up.

I hope my colleagues, in reading a bit about her life, will appreciate the kind of woman Josephine Irwin was.

JOSEPHINE SAXER IRWIN, 94, FOUGHT FOR WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Josephine Saxer Irwin led 7,000 women down Euclid Ave. in 1914 in a dramatic demonstration for the right to vote.

The roan horse the 24-year-old Josephine Saxer was riding reared as the band burst into "Onward Christian Soldiers" and almost backed into the flag coming up behind.

On Aug. 26, 1976, she led another parade of Cleveland women down Euclid Ave., this time in support of the Equal Rights Amendment.

She called herself the godmother of young feminists and lamented a dormancy in the women's movement after suffrage was granted.

Two years ago Mrs. Irwin participated in a walkathon through parts of Lakewood to raise money for the political action committee of the National Organization for Women (NOW).

As a concession to the cold blustery October day, she stayed in a car. She talked to a reporter about issues she considered of vital importance.

"Marching has never done much good. The answer is political activity," she said.

Mrs. Irwin said that money is unimportant. The vote of the pauper is just as important as the vote of the millionaire. What is important is that women should run for office, she said.

Women are needed in politics because they negotiate while men tend to use their fists. Women can provide a civilizing influence on society, but the power of political office is needed, she said.

In 1976 Mrs. Irwin said, "It was the colossal stupidity and brutality of World War I caused by male politicians that overwhelmed me and really got me involved with the women's movement.

"And then, when I had a son, my ardor increased," she said.

Mrs. Irwin married in 1919 toward the end of World War I. Her husband, J. Preston Irwin, was in the war.

He was a founding member of the engineering firm of Arthur G. McKee & Co. He died in 1957.

Mrs. Irwin was an anti-war activist in 1939 and was a member of the committee of 100 that went to Washington for a peace conference.

She also was part of a group that went to the capitol seeking peace during the Vietnam War.

After World War II, she was chairman of the Cleveland Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons and Ohio chairman of the Womens' Action Committee for Lasting Peace.

Mrs. Irwin was born in Lakewood. After graduating from Western Reserve University School of Education in 1910, she taught in the Lakewood public schools until her marriage.

She recalled that she had turned down marriage proposals until she was 29.

"I had to have a man who also went to college, so I waited. Intellectual compatibility was terribly important," she said.

"But then, my husband and I didn't always agree. When I was state chairman of Independent Citizens for Roosevelt's final election, my husband wore a Willkie button."

Mrs. Irwin's daughter, Elizabeth Harner, recalled yesterday that the difference "made for some lively dinner table conversations."

Mrs. Harner said, "Every dinner there was a political discussion from the time I was 10. This was a different household."

Two weeks after her husband's death, the Republican Party asked Mrs. Irwin to be their first woman council member. At first, she wasn't receptive to the idea, but her family encouraged her and she switched political parties and was the first woman member of Fairview Park council.

Mrs. Irwin left council after two terms saying, "I'm too old to start a political career."

She really wanted to take a world trip and could not in good conscience leave the council post for so long.

Mrs. Irwin was a charter member of the Cleveland Council on World Affairs and for many years prepared an annual program.

She founded the Lakewood Library Foreign Affairs Discussion group in 1943 and led it much of the time for more than 30 years.

She was former president of the Fairview Park Historical Society.

Mrs. Irwin received the Governor's Award in 1983 and the same year was inducted into the Ohio Women's Hall of Fame.

In her later years, Mrs. Irwin had dropped her other organizations to concentrate on women's rights groups. The National Women's Political Caucus was at the top of her list.

She was a founding member of WomenSpace, a coalition here of women's organizations and social welfare groups.

NOW has a Jo Irwin Award, conferred annually on the woman who has done the most toward achieving political justice for women during the previous year.

In 1982 Mrs. Irwin told a reporter, "My whole life has been devoted to women's causes and I have so much curiosity about the future. It hurts that I won't be around to see more achieved." ●

INDIAN JUVENILE ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION ACT

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, on September 6, 1984, my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from South Dakota, TOM DASCHLE, and this Member introduced H.R. 6196, the Indian Juvenile Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act.

While we recognize that there are too few legislative days left in this session to move the bill through the House, our intent is to present to our colleagues a proposal that we hope can be refined and enacted during the next Congress. We are also seeking the views of Indian people nationwide so that when Congress convenes in January interested Members of Congress can introduce a revised bill reflecting comments that have been received.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I wish to have reprinted in the RECORD the text of H.R. 6196.

SANDINISTAS UNDERMINE THE POWER OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

HON. E. THOMAS COLEMAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the House Republican Research Committee's Task Force on Foreign Policy which I chair, has released a study detailing the steady deterioration of relations between the Sandinista government and the Roman Catholic Church in Nicaragua.

According to this study, the Sandinistas have embarked on a campaign to seriously undermine the power of the Catholic Church, the only major well-organized opposition to the leftist regime, and the religion of 85 percent of the Nicaraguan population.

The Sandinista junta is now waging an open war with the Catholic Church in Nicaragua. They have created a so-called popular church which is nothing more than a political weapon being used by the leftist government to crush religious opposition to the Sandinistas. Traditional priests are being arrested, deported, harassed, and imprisoned by the junta, all in an attempt to intimidate Nicaraguan Catholics and make them bow to the Marxist-Leninist principles which the Sandinistas espouse.

It's time that international public opinion took note of these alarming developments and renounced the anti-democratic and antireligious actions of the Nicaraguan junta.

I would like to include a copy of this report in the RECORD. I believe it will be very helpful to my colleagues in dealing with this highly emotional issue.

The report follows:

[From the House Republican Research Committee's Task Force on Foreign Policy, Sept. 13, 1984]

CONFRONTATION: THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND THE SANDINISTA GOVERNMENT

Relations between the Sandinista Government and the Roman Catholic church in Nicaragua have been steadily deteriorating over the past year and appear to be heading toward a serious confrontation. In Nicaragua, where over 85 percent of the population is Catholic, the church has always played a highly influential role, a role that has become all the more important and political as the church remains the only major well-organized opposition to the Sandinista Government. There are numerous similarities between the Sandinistas and the church which increase the probability of confrontation: both claim the moral highground and claim to be representing a "Christian" point of view; both have extensive and well-established grass-root organizations; and both are fighting for a way of life which cannot incorporate the other. Although the Archbishop of Manaqua, Monsignor Miguel Obando Y Bravo claims that the church is only presenting a religious, and not a political, message, the two are not easily differentiated in Nicaragua at the present time.

The Sandinistas have attempted to seriously undermine the power of the Catholic church by discrediting its leaders and by establishing an alternative Catholic church, the "Popular church" (or "People's" church). This church supports a radical view of "liberation theology" with a Marxist interpretation of poverty and the poor. In this view, there is no conflict between Christian philosophy and Marxism-Leninism but rather the two merge to form a "revolutionary Christianity." This breakaway from the traditional church has been highly criticized by the traditional Catholic hierarchy, led by Archbishop Obando, and by Pope John Paul II and other Cardinals at the Vatican.

THE "POPULAR" CHURCH

"We have found in Nicaragua that the Sandinista Front opposes the Catholic Church and, in fact, all religion of every church whatsoever, but mainly the Catholic Church since it is the traditional church and a major force among the Nicaraguan people. We should explain that one of the elements the Sandinistas have created and used against the Catholic Church is the 'People's Church.' "

MIGUEL BOLANOS HUNTER,
Former Sandinista and Member of the Nicaraguan State Security Department.

The pro-Sandinista "popular" church in Nicaragua, established as a way of drawing support away from the traditional church, has played an active role in the political affairs of the Sandinista regime. Four priests from this "popular" church currently have positions of power within the Sandinista Government: Mary Knoll priest Miguel D'Escoto, the Minister of Foreign Affairs; Jesuit Fernando Cardenal, the Minister of Education; Trappist monk Ernesto Cardenal, the Minister of Culture; and the Nicaraguan Ambassador to the Organization of American States, Edgar Parrales.

Only a small number of priests and nuns are actually members of the "Popular" church. Some members who head this "church", according to Bolanos, "believe in liberation theology and other members . . . manipulate these believers and . . . are, in turn, manipulated by the Sandinistas . . ." This small number of members in turn manipulates a larger number of true Christians who mistakenly believe that the revolution alone is enough to help the poor. Through its grass-roots committees and "religious study centers," the "popular" church indoctrinates Nicaraguans, particularly the youth, to Marxism-Leninism and recruits them into Sandinista organizations. The term "Popular church" appears to be a misnomer since only a very small number of Nicaraguan Catholics actually support or are involved in the activities of this splinter group.

The "Popular" church has been accused by Sandinista dissidents such as Miguel Bolanos of substituting Marxism for Christianity and a belief in Jesus Christ and God. Edgard Macias, a former member of the National Reconstruction Government in Nicaragua, stated that the "popular" church is "really made up of a small group of supposed priests that in reality are not Christians, but rather true Marxist-Leninists that have assumed all the categories of Marxist analysis . . . " According to Bolanos, Ernesto Cardenal in December 1978 gave a mass in which he stated, "Men, God does not exist, nor does Jesus Christ exist, nor did they ever exist; those are only terms the traditional bourgeois Church has taught the people of the world to keep them enslaved. In this sence, the true God is the Revolution, and in this case, each of you is Jesus Christ."

CHURCH-STATE RELATIONS

As early as October 1980, the Sandinistas attempted to limit the power and influence of the Catholic Church: televised masses and live broadcasts of services over the Church's radio station were banned; publication of letters by the Catholic Church's Episcopal Conference were censored; people attending church events were harassed; and during Pope John Paul II's visit to Nicaragua, he was booed and heckled by Sandinista supporters for refusing to grant his support to Popular church priests.

Relations between the Nicaraguan Catholic church and the Sandinista regime, already less than cordial, worsened on Easter Sunday 1984 when all nine of the Nicaraguan Bishops released a Pastoral Letter critical of the Sandinista regime and calling for national reconciliation among all Nicaraguans including the contras.

On April 22, 1984, Easter Sunday, the Nicaraguan Bishops released a Pastoral Letter which criticized the secularization of Nicaraguan society, stating, "A materialistic and atheistic education system is undermining the consciences of our children," and criticizing the "Popular" church, stating, "One, albeit small, sector of our Church has abandoned ecclesiastical unity and surrendered to the tenets of a materialistic ideology. This sector sows confusion inside and outside Nicaragua through a campaign extolling its own ideas and defaming the legitimate pastors and the faithful who follow them. Censorship of the media makes it impossible to clarify the positions and offer other points of view."

The only way to peace, according to this Pastoral Letter, is national reconciliation among all sectors of Nicaraguan society (including the contras), a process rejected by the Sandinistas. According to the Bishops, "All Nicaraguans inside and outside the country must participate in this dialogue, regardless of ideology, class, or partisan belief. Furthermore, we think that Nicaraguans who have taken up arms against the Government must also participate in this dialogue. If not, there will be no possibility of a settlement, and our people, especially the poorest among them, will continue to suffer and die."

SANDINISTA RESPONSE

The Sandinista junta greatly criticized this Pastoral Letter and, at first, banned its publication. Publication later was allowed although the Sandinistas claimed that the Pastoral Letter "contained violations of our country's laws and adopted a position openly opposing the revolution." These bishops, according to Daniel Ortega, have adopted an "anti-Christian" stance, and are "false prophets" who take their orders from the CIA and the U.S. Embassy. The pro-Sandinista media derided the bishops and the official paper, Barricada, showed a cartoon depicting the portly figure of a bishop wielding a hammer and boards, converting a cross into a swastika. Barricada also published old photographs of the various bishops with Somoza in an attempt to further undermine the influence of Catholic church hierarchy. However, the Catholic church in Nicaragua was as critical of Somoza as it now is critical of the Sandinistas, in fact much of criticism is the same, and thus it is hand for the Sandinista Government to claim that the Catholic hierarchy is "somocista."

Agriculture Minister Jaime Wheelock stated that "the time has now come to take stronger measures against enemies of the revolution who are trying to turn back the people's conquests." And the Interior Minister Tomas Borge, the person responsible for state security and thus the arrest and expulsions of priests, referred to the call for peace talks as a "criminal suggestion. The pastoral letter seeks confrontration and violates the law of the land . . . (the letter is) more radical in its anti-Nicaraguan tone . . . than even the statements by [Jeane] Kirkpatrick."

In addition, the coordinator of the junta, Daniel Ortega, stated that ". . . the pastoral letter clearly expresses the political stand of the Nicaraguan Conference. It is a political stand of helping and supporting the U.S. Administration's warmongering plans against the Nicaraguan people. This is a stand much like others taken in the past when the Nicaraguan bishops openly supported the Somozist dictatorship. Following the dictator Somoza Garcia's death, he was buried by these same bishops with honors befitting a prince . . . This is the same policy of the period of U.S. intervention when this country's bishops blessed the weapons of the U.S. Marines who landed here to carry out occupation plans. . ."

On June 20, 1984, the Sandinista Government intensified its campaign aimed at discrediting the Catholic hierarchy by airing a videotape, or national televison, showing Priest Luis Armado Pena meeting with counter-revolutionaries and carrying a suitcase containing grenades and other explosives. Pena was arrested for counter-revolutionary activities and involvement with the contras. Pena claims that he was framed and that he did not know what was in the suitcase as someone just handed it to him. Indeed, the skilled editing and manipulation of videotapes of priests and Catholic church supporters by the Sandinista security police has become a disturbing new development in the Sandinista junta's battle with the church. Archbishop Obando has expressed his support for Pena and on July 9, 1984, he held a march in support of Pena. That same day the Nicaraguan Govenment reacted by expelling ten foreign priests because of "political activities." Not all of the foreign priests expelled had participated in the march. According to the Sandinistas, the foreign priests had violated "the laws of the country and were carrying out labors against the government and taking part in plans to provoke a confrontation between the church and the state." The Catholic hierarchy in Nicaragua and the Vatican denied these charges and criticized the expulsions.

VATICAN RESPONSE

Precipitated by the tension between the Nicaraguan Government and the Nicaraguan Catholic church, and the involvement of pro-Sandinista church priests in politics, the Vatican has recently reviewed liberation theology and issued a document explaining the Vatican's position with regard to this theology. The document, "Instruction Over Some Aspects of the Theology of Liberation," states that Marxist interpretation of the scriptures "is a perversion of the Christian message" as it endorses violence and class struggle. According to this document, "class struggle as a road toward a classless society is a myth which slows reform and aggravates poverty and injustice."

In addition to this pronouncement on liberation theology, the Vatican has been extremely critical of the political role played by the "popular" church priests in Nicaragua. Fernando Cardenal's appointment as Minister of Education on July 13, 1984, reignited the controversay between the Vatican and the traditional Catholic church in Nicaragua, on the one side, and the "popular" church priests, on the other side, over the role of priests in governments. Canon law 285, issued in November 1983, states that clerics are "prohibited from accepting those public offices which carry civilian authority." The Vatican has warned the four priests in the Nicaraguan Government that they are violating canon law and should resign from their political positions by the end of August. All have ignored these warnings; Fernando Cardenal has stated that none of the four priest intend to leave their government posts and he has defended his position in the Sandinista Government by stating that there was an agreement with the Nicaraguan Conference regarding prelates who hold government positions. In addition, Cardenal states that the canon law provides for an exemption if the bishops grant their permissions.

The most recent Vatican warning to the four Sandinista priests came on Saturday, August 25, 1984, in a front page article in the official Vatican newspaper written by the secretary of the Pontifical Commission for the Authentic Interpretation of the Code of Canon Law, Rev. Julian Herranz, who wrote, "It is forbidden that prelates assume public office that involves participation in the exercise of civil power . . . You are priests and religious: you are not social officials, political leaders or functionaries of a temporal power . . ."

CONCLUSION

The problem facing the Catholic church in Nicaragua is not that of a divided church or of an attack on its doctrine, although these are both by-products of the primary problem, but rather a Government which has actively sought to restrict the freedom of religion and the influence of the church in Nicaragua. The "Popular" church is only a tool which the Sandinistas have created and used in their campaign against the Catholic church. This campaign, to date, has not succeeded due to the respect Nicaraguans hold for Monsignor Obando and the church hierarchy, and due to the increased involvement of the Vatican in support of its church. The final outcome of this conflict, however, will depend in part on the amount of international attention and pressure focused upon the Sandinistas.●

IN THE WAKE OF SAN YSIDRO

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, the tragic massacre of 21 men, women, and children at a McDonalds in California united the community of San Ysidro and touched all of us with the force of its senselessness and brutality. Our collective shock and outrage at this violence, however, should not be allowed to end with our grief over those lives lost; we must direct it toward ensuring that such atrocities do not recur, either on a local or global level.

In the following two articles by Norman Cousins and Eric Younger from the Ossining, NY, Citizen Register, two key questions are asked, both stemming from the sense of helplessness in the wake of the San Ysidro tragedy. Why, when we become insensed at the taking of 21 innocent lives, do we continue to develop the capability and increase the chances of destroying 21 million lives in the same amount of time? Is not our condemnation of one man's madness as easily applied to the madness of those planning nuclear mass destruction? And why do we remain bound and gagged when it comes to controlling the sale of firearms? How is it that comprehensive gun control falls victim each year to inaction when we have suffered so many killings at the hands of individuals wielding a gun?

I commend the articles to the attention of my colleagues:

NATIONS HAVE WARPED MINDS, TOO

(By Norman Cousins)

The human mind has been rocked by the spectacle of 21 persons gunned down in a restaurant by a single madman. The casualness of the slaughter was hardly less shocking than the tragedy itself. Those who were killed were unknown to James Oliver Huberty. Their identities were incidental.

Now take this evil and multiply it by infinity. Take the vulnerability and impersonality and violence of the episode at San Diego, and project it to 4 billion human beings. When we do we have a portrait of our world. We are all in the San Diego restaurant. The entire human race today is hostage to the accumulation of devastating explosives. The explosives may not be slung over the shoulder of a psychotic gunman, but they can be detonated by those at the head of governments who believe that what they are doing is right, even though the result may destroy their own people.

The madness hanging over us has not gone unrecognized. We see it but do not deal with it. We shake our heads but the problem does not penetrate our vitals. It does not set us in motion or change our lives. The world is being Hubertized but we have yet to make our stand. The plain truth is that we ourselves are caught up in a hideous spiral of irrationality. We allow ourselves to remain open and exposed to an unprecedented combination of annihilative force and mindlessness. But we have yet to act on the connection between the instant availability of cataclysmic explosives and the wreckage and suffering that it could bring to our world.

The face of James Huberty may belong to a single man but the warped mind behind that face has been a recurrent prelude to the collective tragedies of the human species. We do not need an Adolf Hitler or an Idi Amin or a Moammar Khadafy to remind us that it is possible for men who are vengeful and unbalanced to rise to power and do vast harm, not only within their own countries but far beyond their own borders as well.

But it is not only the Khadafys who have to be accounted for. Even decent and otherwise responsible leaders function inside a context that pushes them toward confrontation. Nations by their history are not conciliatory creatures. They are inflamed easily. There are no prescribed codes or legal constraints. The measures that one nation takes to advance its security can create insecurity in others. The competition for security creates an environment for castigation and fulmination and an impetus for showdown.

It is too easy today to point to ideological differences as the principal cause of conflict, but underneath all the churnings of ideology is the traditional drive of nations not just to guard their own turf but also to accumulate power far beyond their needs.

If we lived in a world in which the essential nature of the crisis was represented by ideological struggle, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China would not now be feuding over territorial claims. Nor would the United States be courting the most populous Communist nation in the world in an effort to seek a balance of power. Nor would the Communist nations of Indochina be shooting at one another. The lessons of history still hold. Separate nationalisms add up to a basic condition of anarchy, destructive not only of peace but also of freedom.

The way out of San Ysidro for the world's people is not through ever-greater stockpiles of explosives and delivery systems but through the development of effective instruments of world order. The U.S. commitment to such an objective may well represent the beginning of genuine security.

President Eisenhower was right when he said we have to look beyond supremacy in military firepower. Eisenhower, who understood not just the importance of military strength but also its limitations, urged the American people to recognize that the central purpose of military preparedness was to press forward with a great idea that would make it possible to one day reduce or dispense with the use of force. What troubled Eisenhower was that force was becoming an end in itself, and that we might retreat from genuine opportunities to bring force under control.

The supreme moral question today is whether nations have the right to wage war against the human race in the act of warring against each other. Does the Soviet Union have the right to use nuclear explosives against the United States, or the United States against the Soviet Union, if the devastating effects of those weapons will produce an enormous death toll far outside the warring countries? Is a policeman justified in firing into a crowd in an attempt to get at a murderer?

The episode at San Ysidro has produced many questions, not the least of which have to do with the safety of the human species.

GUN CONTROL: WHEN WILL WE LEARN OUR LESSON?

(By Eric E. Younger)

"David!" I called downstairs at 12:08 a.m.; digital clocks fix events so precisely in our minds.

I had meant to put an arm around him (sometimes permitted by a 14-year-old) and tell him to be careful—not an unusual thing to say to a boy leaving on a trip. But the terrible vision that was keeping me awake—a McDonald's in San Diego—contained nothing that I could warn him about; no rules to follow and no way I could protect my little boy. So I lay back down and began writing this piece in my mind.

David hasn't been a tragic victim of anything. I don't want him to be.

I deal with crime and violent death for a living. I have sentenced a man to the gas chamber and many others to prison, but I am not immune. I am scared stiff.

After the defeat of Proposition 15 (a flawed but bravely attempted gun-control measure in California) two years ago, lots of people—among them friends whom I admire—rejoiced in the defeat of the limousine liberals, the soft, faintly un-American goody-two shoes who would have limited that apparently most important of American freedoms, the right to bear arms.

This is for those friends with more sincerity than they will believe, by a judge—appointed by Gov. Ronald Reagan—whose hair is no longer or frizzier than when he won shooting awards on two police departments. I hope it will be hard to write it off as the product of a well-meaning but ill-informed left-winger.

What I ask anti-gun-control people, in the wake of San Ysidro, is that they re-analyze the nature and the amount of firepower that our society should permit its members. If, for example, they are members of the National Rifle Association, I ask that they give some thought to the noble aims of that organization.

When I was a kid, the NRA had a positive image—safety courses, hunting and the like. Even those with little interest in hunting could certainly see why well-trained and responsible gun-users were preferable to the alternative. Even the word "rifle," connotating a powerful weapon favored by hunters, suggests nothing like the arsenal commonly available in mail-order ads or gun shops today.

When did gun enthusiasts' emphasis change from hunting safety to defending the "right" to order Uzis through the mail, to have garages that are private arsenals crammed with automatic weapons and to permit anyone to acquire an unlimited number of firearms anonymously and with fewer constraints than we would dream of permitting the operator of a motor vehicle?

Like it or not, things have changed since the era when a policy of no restrictions on the right to bear arms might have made some sense. Consider:

Ours is an anonymous urban society. At the turn of the century the local hardware-store owner was the source of guns. He was accountable to the community and would never have sold a "troubled" man like James Oliver Huberty a roomful of automatic weapons. Gun registration wasn't necessary in an era when everyone in a community knew each other.

Technology has had an enormous effect on the type of weaponry available to private citizens. The Second Amendment, often cited as protecting the right to bear arms, was written with a militia composed of individuals with muskets, or even rifles, in mind. I can use my Visa card tonight to order weapons with which I and half a dozen friends probably could have won the battle of Yorktown, even if the French fleet weren't offshore.

Crazy people are everywhere. Modern notions of civil liberties and fiscal considerations have combined to produce a population of very disturbed people in every city in America. The notion of "local treatment alternatives" for mentally incapacitated citizens is a cruel hoax. It is clear that the vast majority of dangerously impaired people are out there on the streets.

Substance abuse makes weapons more dangerous. Proponents of gun ownership tend to evaluate the issue in their self-image. This is unrealistic. The man who writes his congressman to oppose a gun-control bill doesn't take PCP, and, therefore is not likely to envision his neighbor's 12-year-old daughter as having rattlesnakes in her hair. He probably won't try to shoot her, but someone whose "rights" he has inadvertantly protected may.

Home protection is a myth. For every one story of a homeowner protecting his place with a gun there are 10 tragic-accident stories. I just finished the trial of a man who killed a "survivalist" in a robbery. All those guns that were going to keep the "Commies" from getting us all were just part of the stolen loot. The victim, who had weapons that an Israeli platoon would have been proud to own, was probably killed with his own kitchen knife.

How often do we have to be shown that we have to cut the armament level on our streets? How many sad drifters or unbalanced and unemployed guys from Ohio have to tell us that our domestic arms race is taking a positive toll while Russia remains a hypothetical enemy? How certain do we have to be that the unbalanced man who kills three people with a knife in the Third World or five with a rifle in Europe can wipe out city blocks because of American "freedom."

It really shouldn't be that difficult to come up with a social policy that translates into laws that would protect the rights of hunters and target shooters while ridding us of weapons designed exclusively for the killing of human beings.

I'll warn David to look before he crosses the street, to be careful around strangers and not to swim alone. But should I have to worry about his being shot if he wants a milkshake?●

ANALYZING THE LOCAL IMPACT OF U.S. POLICIES, BUDGET CUTS

HON. HENRY J. NOWAK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of debate has been conducted in this Chamber and continues today across the country on the impact domestic program spending cuts enacted in recent years have had on this Nation and its citizens.

Recently, the Buffalo News, the daily newspaper in my home town of Buffalo, NY, made a valuable contribution to this debate by publishing an article analyzing the impact some of these Federal budget cuts and some of the policies of the present administration have had on our local Erie County government and its citizens.

Heavily dependent on the auto and steel industries, Erie County was devastated by the recent recession and adminstration trade policies that tolerated a surge of unfairly priced imports. As a result, the county continues to shoulder a heavy, increased burden, reflected by lost industrial jobs, increased welfare recipients, and increased social service costs borne by local taxpayers.

I commend to my colleagues this article detailing these conditions which appeared in the September 16 edition of the Buffalo News, written by Douglas Turner, a correspondent in the newspaper's Washington Bureau.

The article follows:

[From the Buffalo News, Sept. 16, 1984]

REAGAN HAD HAND IN COUNTY CRISIS

(By Douglas Turner)

WASHINGTON.—The budget crisis in Erie County has in large part been created in the nation's capital, an analysis of funding measures indicates.

Since 1980, the White House has promoted and won from Congress a number of basic changes in the way welfare, health and unemployment programs are operated and paid for. The impact of these changes on Erie County has been highly negative.

For example, two big federal unemployment programs that helped local steel and auto workers in 1980 have disappeared. One of them paid unemployed persons $290 a week for up to a year.

Through more subtle changes, the Reagan administration has forced some persons off the Medicaid, disability and federal welfare rolls and into programs financed exclusively by the county and state.

As a result, the welfare system known as Home Relief, which is financed equally by the state and county, is the fastest growing income support program in the Buffalo area.

The sum of these changes is that Erie County, already staggering under a current deficit, is facing an even larger one next year—driven by an increase of between $30 million and $40 million in the local welfare budget.

Rep. Henry J. Nowak, D-Buffalo, said Saturday the crushing domino effect on local taxpayers has been aggravated by the trade policies of the Reagan administration. The refusal of the White House, he said, to protect the auto and steel industries against government-subsidized imports has thrown tens of thousands of people out of work in Erie and Niagara counties.

Rep. Nowak said the duration of the recession in the Buffalo area and the withdrawal of federal income support programs has drained the savings of thousands, throwing them on the public welfare rolls.

That this is a growing trend is reflected in a comment from Monsignor John J. Conniff, director of Catholic Charities. He said requests for emergency assistance from his agency have increased 55 percent this year over last.

"Evidently the economic recovery hasn't reached here yet," said Monsignor Conniff.

Here is a review of actions of the Reagan administration and Congress, as they affect Erie County:

The disappearance of U.S. Trade Readjustment Allowances, TRAs, paying $290 a week, were part of a deal made between business and labor in the 1970s. Labor went along with massive tariff reductions in exchange for this income support program.

In 1981, Congress gave the president power to cut this program drastically. And in October of that year he did, slicing 23,000 eligible steel and autoworkers from its rolls on the Niagara Frontier.

By means of budget cuts and decisions on individual trade cases by the Labor Department, this program has effectively evaporated, although it is technically still on the books.

Extended benefit unemployment insurance. This program of 13 weeks' federally paid jobless pay is another program that is on the books but effectively gone. At the request of the White House, Congress in 1981 made this type of benefit tougher to qualify for.

The way the law was changed made it harder for the states with the longest and deepest recessions to qualify for the 13 weeks of benefits. It is estimated that in 1982, when unemployment was at its highest in Erie and Niagara Counties, up to 32,000 workers could have qualified for this aid had the law been more liberally drawn.

Extended benefits, and federal supplemental compensation pay the same as regular unemployment. In 1981 state jobless pay was, at the maximum, $125. But this year it was raised to $170, and later $180 a week.

Federal supplemental compensation. In 1982, Congress created a special program of unemployment insurance for those whose regular 26 weeks of benefits had expired. The maximum eligibility for a state is 14 weeks.

However, New Yorkers may only receive eight weeks of this supplemental aid because the same standard that makes Extended Benefits virtually impossible to get shortens the eligibility period for this aid also.

Disability benefits under the Social Secruity Administration have been seriously disrupted in Reagan administration attempts to rid the rolls of fraudulent claimants. Gov. Cuomo's office here estimated that statewide 6,000 former federal disability recipients have been thrown onto the state's home relief rolls.

There is no way to determine the specific impact on the country, the governor's office said, but Erie County has roughly 6 percent of the Home Relief cases in the state.

Students and certain categories of pregnant women, once eligible for federal Aid to Families of Dependent Children, a program called Aid to Dependent Children in the state, are no longer eligible because of Reagan administration changes.

The state provides Home Relief to these former recipients, and the cost to Erie County is estimated at about $2.75 million a year.

About 98,000 households statewide, and an estimated 5,800 households in Erie County, have lost all or part of their program benefits because of restrictions that started in 1981.

It is not known what part of this group is receiving state-county Home Relief, but that is the "last resort" public welfare program.

Restrictions in the federal government's aid to low-income housing programs have had a drastic effect on the state. New York received $3.1 billion in all forms of low-income housing aid in 1981, under the last Carter administration budget. The current federal budget provides $991 million—less than a third of what New York State used to get.

The cut in housing aid is among the pressures that led Gov. Cuomo to increase the shelter allowance under Home Relief from $159 a month (statewide average) to $193 a month. This not only provides more money to those already on the Home Relief rolls but makes it easier for people to qualify for welfare.

The shelter allowance is one definition of need used to determine eligibility for Home Relief.

The Reagan administration persuaded Congress to let it make drastic cuts in a wide range of smaller programs that provided food and health assistance to the young, pregnant women, the aged and blind.

It is impossible to cite exactly what effect all these reductions in federally assisted services has had on the welfare rolls or costs at the Erie County Medical Center.

Yet the growth in the welfare and Aid to Dependent Children rolls in Erie County has been massive in the past three years.

Individuals in the program increased from 50,000 in August 1981 to 60,000 in August of this year—an increase of 20 percent. The cost of this program is shared 50 percent by the federal government, 25 percent by New York, and 25 percent by Erie County.

Those receiving Home Relief numbered 8,000 in August 1981. Since then, the rolls have swelled 150 percent to 20,000. This program is financed 50-50 by the state and county.

The effect of the soaring Home Relief rolls on the county's budget has been dramatic. Its budget office estimates the county will need another $11 million next year to pay its share of Home Relief. The county's share of the cost of the Aid to Dependent Children program will increase about $6.7 million in 1985.

Since 1979, Rep. Nowak said, "we lost 171,000 jobs in the industry nationally. In Erie County the number of persons employed in steelmaking has been reduced from 14,302 in 1980 to 4,409 in 1984."

In the same period, he said, auto industry employment nationally dropped from 735,000 to 557,000—a loss of 178,000 jobs, or a decline of 24 percent.

Rep. Nowak said the impact was far more pronounced on the Niagara Frontier. Union sources, he said, have told him that employment in the industry in Erie and Niagara counties fell from 42,500 in 1979 to 26,000 last year—a loss of 16,500 jobs, or a reduction of 39 percent.●

ETHIOPIAN FAMINE

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share two articles describing the hunger and grim conditions of famine now facing the Ethiopian people which were published in the Washington Post and the New York Times on September 18, 1984:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 18, 1984]

ETHIOPIA FACES FAMINE WITH "TENS OF THOUSANDS" IN DANGER

(By David B. Ottaway)

ADDIS ABABA, ETHIOPIA.—Ten years after Africa's worst famine took an estimated 200,000 lives, Ethiopia again is facing a similar crisis with outside relief officials predicting the probable death of "tens of thousands" of people this winter.

Like a recurring nightmare, western donors again have been sluggish in recognizing the crisis, while the Ethiopian government has failed to take advantage of opportunities to draw attention to it, some officials of donors nations say, for fear of prompting unfavorable comparisons to the last great famine.

Reports reaching the capital, however, recall those of 10 years ago. Thousands of starving Ethiopians are pouring into the towns in north central Welo Province, the epicenter of the 1973-74 disaster, and crowding along the main highways there to beg for food from passing cars and trucks, according to private relief agency officials.

Alarming accounts of drought and crop failure are coming from at least seven of Ethiopia's 15 provinces, including some districts in central Shewa and south central Sidamo, normally major food-producing areas.

"You're looking at an emergency that's going to go on through 1985," according to one relief official. "All of the south has been affected by the drought, too."

In Korem, a relief center in northern Welo, the British Save The Children organization is now feeding 5,000 people and registering 150 starving children a day, according to David Alexander, its chief official here. Altogether 30,000 famine-stricken persons are said to have concentrated in Korem with a death toll of 15 to 20 a day.

Kobo, 60 miles to the south, is said by another private relief official to be "an absolute disaster," with about 20,000 people seeking food there.

"We're talking about an extraordinary situation where people are dying all over the place," a relief official says.

Numerous reports from foreign relief officials say the government has been trying to hold off the rush of starving peasants into the bigger towns and cities, particularly the capital, Addis Ababa, to the point of stopping them on the road and sending them back by truck.

"They are simply flooding the towns," said one official. "They [the government] are gathering the people who assemble and sending them north again."

"I expect to see tens of thousands dead," remarked one official from a major donor country. "It seems God doesn't like Ethiopia."

Virtually all outsiders here seem to agree that because of the extent of the drought as well as an expected shortfall of 2 million tons in this winter's harvest—30 percent less than last year's mediocre one—the general situation is far worse than a decade ago.

"The situation is worse than in 1974 and worse than in the last three years," remarked one European diplomat. "It's coming earlier and in more areas than in 1973-74 and the harvest forecast is worse."

The potential for a replay of the 1973-74 disaster, which provided the backdrop for the military uprising that toppled former emperor Haile Selasie, does not stop with the forecasts of a high death toll.

Some western donors are again charging the Ethiopian government with indifference toward the looming crisis and even a "coverup." The purpose of the coverup, they say, has been to avoid embarrassing comparisons to the "hidden famine"—as it was called a decade ago—during celebrations earlier this month marking the 10th anniversary of the military-led revolution that ended the monarchy here.

Ethiopia's military leader, Mengistu Haile Mariam, made no specific mention of the crisis during the celebrations, and the government declined repeated requests from half a dozen western correspondents here for the occasion to travel either north or south to report on the situation.

This reporter and Judith Miller of The New York Times were asked to stay on for two days to allow time for the government's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission to arrange a trip.

We were later told it would not be possible, and a briefing on the situation was not offered.

A film on the drought's effects, made for British Independent Television News and entitled "Seeds of Despair," was banned when the U.N. Economic Commission for Africa tried to hold a private showing early this month.

"If 6 million people were really on the brink of starvation, one would imagine the head of the country making an appeal," remarked another irritated official from a western donor country.

Some western donors have been particularly irked by the fact that the Mengistu government spent $150 to $200 million on the anniversary celebration. An estimated 40 percent of the total came from local funds and the rest in East Bloc donations. At the same time, Ethiopia's foreign reserves have dropped to about $50 million, and the government reportedly is in a quandary about how to finance the emergency purchase of grain costing $25 million.

Unlike a decade ago, however, Ethiopia today maintains a Relief and Rehabilitation Commission to deal with what has become an almost annual shortage of grain and food in parts of the country. Furthermore, it had sounded the alarm last March in accusing the donors of indifference toward its appeal for 450,000 tons of emergency relief grains, a charge at least partly substantiated by some private agencies and U.N. officials here.

Part of the problem this time is the breakdown in confidence between Soviet-allied Ethiopia, which has just set up a communist party, and western donors that do not like the Mengistu government's politics and that have become somewhat indifferent after repeated annual appeals for what they regard as exaggerated amounts of aid.

"The Ethiopians have cried wolf too often in the past," said one private relief official. "Donor fatigue has become a real problem."

In addition, donors this year face requests from 24 African countries for relief assistance for about 150 million drought-affected persons.

That politics is playing a significant role in donor response can be seen in the case of western-oriented Kenya. Within weeks of a quiet appeal last June for 1.2 million tons of corn, most of the request was met.

The one western donor that already has begun responding in unexpectedly generous fashion—given the current hostility between the two countries—is the United States. The United States was a long-time supporter of Selasie's government.

From $9.6 million in humanitarian assistance in 1983, Washington has increased its aid to about $18 million this year and will probably earmark $20 million for Ethiopia in the coming fiscal year.

Why more aid has not been rushed to this country—one of the world's poorest with a per capita annual income of only $140—is still not clear. But both the donors and the Ethiopian government seem to share in the blame, observers and analysts say, for allowing the situation to deteriorate without a full-scale mobilization of their respective resources to head off the long-predicted crisis.

As early as March, Ethiopia Relief and Rehabilitation Commission issued a detailed report warning donors that Ethiopia faced "a potential disaster of considerable magnitude" because of rain and crop failures and would need assistance to feed about 5.2 million drought-affected people in addition to 2.2 million displaced persons.

While the commission estimated Ethiopia's food needs at 912,000 tons, it asked only for 450,000 tons. This represented an acknowledgement of donor skepticism that it would be "highly improbable" for such an amount to be distributed because of "limited resources" and congestion in Ethiopia's main port of Assab.

In July, Kenneth King, the chief U.N. representative here, sharply criticized this joint donor-relief commission decision to reduce the amount in an interview for the "Seeds of Despair" film aired in August in Britain.

"It seems to me that just by an administrative bureaucratic stroke, 50 percent of the people who were affected—that's 2.6 million—were written off," King said in the ITN documentary.

Defending the cuts, one European relief official said the higher figure was "unrealistic" at the time because it came before the results of the spring harvest were known and was issued without taking into account what might be available from local production.

While the commission's March report was clearly not taken seriously among donors, the panel's chief, Dowit Wolde Giorgis, repeated Ethiopia's appeal for help in a dramatic speech before the U.N. Security Council on May 11 after it was known that the spring harvest—normally 12 to 15 percent of the total year's crop—had failed due to the drought.

His appeal prompted no additional donor response.

In a meeting here with donors early last month, Dowit issued another report noting "the current critical status of the situation" and increasing the commission's early estimate of Ethiopians requiring immediate relief from 5.2 million to 6 million.

He also noted the sluggish donor response, reporting that since Ethiopia's March appeal only 89,000 tons of grain and 8,000 tons of supplementary food were on the way.

According to Desmond Taylor, the U.N. World Food Program representative here, only two ships arrived at Assab port during July and August, bringing at total of 30,000 tons of grain. This has left nearly 200,000 tons of other food supplies for drought relief to be discharged—90 percent at Assab—between September and Oct. 31. After that, the government already has told donors that Assab will be flooded with fertilizer, cement and machinery shipments.

In addition to "donor fatigue" and dislike of Ethiopia's Soviet-oriented socialist policies, a credibility gap between the Ethiopian Relief Commission and the donor community over the commission's estimates, figures and performance has contributed to the slow aid response.

Increasingly, the major donor countries like the United States, Sweden and the 10-nation European Community have sought to circumvent the commisssion and deal directly with the private voluntary organizations for distribution of relief supplies.

Accused both abroad and at home of corruption last year, the commission was found after investigation to suffer primarily from poor management, inefficiency and bad public relations.

The commission also has its defenders, however. Taylor, for example, said it had delivered more food to more needy people this year than last, averaging 20,000 tons a month between April and July.

Another private relief official described the commission's early warning system, for all its faults, as "uncannily accurate" and probably the best in any African country.

The irony of the current crisis is that it is not clear whether Ethiopia can "absorb" much more grain because of congestion and poor administration in Assab port and inland transportation problems.

The port's facilities can offload an average of 2,000 tons a day but the rate for clearing the grain from portside trucks is only 1,000 tons daily—or about 30,000 tons a month. Only a small additional amount comes through Massewa in war-torn northern Eritrea Province.

Thus, it is questionable how the grain presently scheduled to arrive here—200,000 tons over the next four months—can be handled. Officials and observers say it will not be possible unless the government declares a national emergency, gives top priority to getting food supplies out of Assab, and possibly mobilizes the resources of its huge Army—with its spotty record of help in earlier relief operations—for transport.

Famine Engulfs Ethiopia Again; Death Toll Rises

(By Judith Miller)

Addis Ababa, Sept. 17.—Ethiopia, which has endured year after year of drought, is in the throes of the worst drought-related famine in more than a decade, according to private relief workers and Western diplomats.

Tens of thousands of Ethiopians are probably dying of starvation and related diseases and six million are in dire need of food, relief workers and Ethiopian officials have concluded.

The Government and private relief organizations said they could not estimate or project the death toll reliably. But they acknowledged it could eventually reach 200,000, the number that died in the 1974 famine.

INTERNATIONAL AID SOUGHT

Emperor Haile Selassie sought to hide that famine and in doing so contributed to his ouster. By contrast, the Marxist Government of Lieut. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, which lavishly celebrated the 10th anniversary of its revolution last week, has appealed for international aid and set up an agency whose purpose is to combat famine throughout the country.

But despite the Government's accomplishments, representatives of most private relief agencies and diplomats said in interviews in the past two weeks that Ethiopia had failed to place sufficiently high priority on feeding its hungry people.

In addition, several international economists argued that Ethiopia's commitment to the expansion of state farms and other socialist policies was hindering the development of the country's agriculture.

OTHER FACTORS NOTED

Relief experts also noted other, often conflicting factors. Some said the developed countries had failed to provide enough food aid fast enough; others cited the huge logistical problems Ethiopia faces in transporting food aid to remote areas.

Several blamed the politics of international food aid. They argued that the outspokenly Marxist Government made Ethiopia a far less attractive recipient of aid from the West than other drought-stricken African nations.

The relief experts interviewed agreed that whatever its cause the famine-related death toll would probably be even higher next year than this year because the harvest this fall was likely to be 20 to 30 percent worse than last year's.

In March, May and August, Ethiopia's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission warned that a death toll of "truly catastrophic proportions" was likely unless grain and help in transporting it to remote regions were forthcoming.

DRAMATIC WORSENING OF CRISIS

The Government warned last March, as it has for several years, that five million people were at risk because Ethiopia could produce only 6.2 million tons of grain a year, one million less than its needs.

But the food crisis has dramatically worsened over the summer, experts here agreed. In a report to relief groups in August, the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission stated that the population at risk had risen to six million people because the belg, or light rains, has not come this spring and because infestations of worms and other pests had decimated crops in the southern provinces of Sidamo.

Sidamo is Ethiopia's traditional bread basket and source of grain for the unusually hard-hit northern provinces of Wollo, Tigre and Eritrea.

Relief workers said that in recent weeks they had seen hundreds of people begging for food along the main road near the town of Dessye, along other northern roads and even along roads south of Addis Ababa. According to witnesses, some people had died along the roads and animal carcasses abounded.

On the road between Dessye and Debrezena, peasants were loaded into trucks two weeks ago, and forcibly taken back to their villages by Govenment officials, at least two relief workers said.

DEATH TOLL RISES

Throughout the summer, reports of hundreds of deaths a month in some provinces and towns filtered into the Ethiopian capital.

David Alexander, field director of Save the Children Fund, said his group was feeding about 5,000 children a day at its center in Korem, a town in the northern province of Wollo, and that 150 children a day were being registered for food.

"We were down to only 2,000 children last June" Mr Alexander said "But the situation has worsened dramatically in the past three weeks."

According to a report in August from Oxfam, another private relief group, about 300 people died in April in Korem. Another relief organization reported that by August the death toll attributable to famine had risen in Korem to between 15 and 20 deaths a day.

Relief workers said that in Sidamo, in the south 149,000 cattle died between April and September and that further south even camels were dying of thirst.

FOOD SHELTERS OPENED

In Wolita, in heavily populated Sidamo, 17 to 23 feeding shelters had been opened. The rains have been mixed in this region but aid workers said half a million people would be affected by famine there.

Virtually all of these estimates were provided by private groups and diplomats because for the last four weeks the Government has declined to discuss the drought. Relief workers and diplomats said Government officials had been busy preparing for the celebrations last week that marked the 10th anniversary of the revolution that brought Colonel Mengistu to power.

They estimated that the Government had spent $150 million to $200 million on the celebration, spending that many cited as evidence that the Government did not place sufficient priority on solving the famine crisis.

Despite repeated appeals, the Government refused to permit journalists to visit drought-affected areas during or after the celebrations. Travel permits even for relief workers were denied, ostensibly for security reasons, diplomats said.

Colonel Mengistu, in a six-hour speech last week praising the founder of Ethiopia's first Communist Party, made no mention of the looming crisis. Instead, he issued a general appeal for international aid for the 150 million Africans in 24 countries affected by recurring droughts.

ARMY NOT MOBILIZED

Relief workers and diplomats complained that although Ethiopia faced extensive logistical problems in transporting grain to isolated areas where people were known to be starving, neither the army nor its trucks had been mobilized since the revolution to help distribute food aid.

The wars for independence that have engulfed Eritrea and Tigre provinces, which cost Ethiopia an estimated half a million dollars a day, have also severely hampered relief efforts. Aid workers said roads needed to transport grain had been closed from time to time during the spring and summer by rebel actions.●

FRANK LUMPKIN, CHAIRPERSON, WISCONSIN STEELWORKERS SAVE OUR JOBS COMMITTEE, SOUTH CHICAGO

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, recently, Frank Lumpkin, who chairs the Wisconsin Steelworkers Save Our Jobs Committee, handed me a statement.

It says in a simple, straightforward style the problems faced by workers who suddenly have lost their jobs.

Whether you agree with his conclusion or not, it is difficult not to recognize this is a serious problem that is not being adequately addressed now in our Nation.

I commend him for his leadership, and I urge my colleagues to read his statement:

FRANK LUMPKIN, CHAIRPERSON, WISCONSIN STEELWORKERS SAVE OUR JOBS COMMITTEE

I am Frank Lumpkin, chairperson of the Wisconsin Steelworkers Save Our Jobs Committee.

For 50 years, I have worked in this country. I have seen some good and some bad times in this country but I have never seen things as bad as they are today.

When Wisconsin Steel was closed down by International Harvester, 2,800 hourly workers were put out of that mill and 700 salaried workers. We lost more than our job and our income.

We suddenly realized that we had lost all protection for our family. We had no medical insurance. If our kids were hurt playing, we could not get any medical care. Can you imagine telling your kids not to play outside for fear of an accident and you couldn't go to the hospital.

Many of us tried to get a green card for medicaid but found out being poor was not enough. We had worked all of our lives and they told some of us we had too much to get Medicaid.

The newspapers are full of reports that unemployment is bad for your health. Out of 2,800 hourly workers, over 400 have died in the 4 years since our plant closed without warning. If we had had medical care, if we didn't have to worry about medical care for our families, some of those 400 would have been alive today.

Our Federal Government has lots of money for nuclear bombs, or to borrow money for space wars. That's unhealthy too. We demand a federal health plan to cover everyone, the unemployed and the employed. Use the money for health, not war.●

HOW CHRISTIANS VIEW ISRAEL AND AMERICAN JEWS

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, my constituent, Surrogate Court Justice Marie Lambert, made the following remarks on April 29, 1984, at the annual meeting of the International Association of Jewish Lawyers & Jurists. With the rise of anti-Semitism in the United States and the beginning of the Jewish New Year on September 26, I thought it particularly timely to share Judge Lambert's remarks with my colleagues:

PERSPECTIVE: HOW CHRISTIANS VIEW ISRAEL AND AMERICAN JEWS

(By Hon. Marie Lambert)

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ambassador, members of the Judiciary, fellow members of the legal fraternity, and friends all. I am deeply honored to have been invited to come here to speak to you. Judge Hornblass opened this meeting by stating that although he is a jurist, he is a Jew. He was born a Jew and will continue to be a Jew. I happen to have been born a Christian. I am not of the Jewish faith. I am Catholic. But I really consider myself, by my views, my feelings, my friendships and my loyalty, to be a partial Jew. I can never be a full Jew, but I could be a partial Jew. As a matter of fact in Jewish law many of the precepts which we follow in the personal injury field were taken directly out of Jewish law: Ideas of compensation for those who are injured thru no fault of their own.

Today, less than forty years after the Holocaust and the systematic murder of six million Jews, we as Christians, even more than Jews, see a rampant rise in anti-Christian anti-semitism. Having heard the cry (and I was alive during World War II) "never again," it's frightening to see the insidious growth of the anti-Jewish propaganda. Lest we forget what it really meant, let us look back just for a moment and think what six million Jewish lives really are. You know, we use the word six million and today six million doesn't really portray what it is. It is nearly the total population of New York City. It is twice the population of Israel. Destroyed by the Holocaust. How soon the world, the media, and even many of who were alive at the time have forgotten. In our wildest imagination did we ever think that we would live to see the day when a candidate for the prestigious office of President of the United States would refer to a whole people as "Hymies". Can you imagine the uproar in the press, if it were another group that were attacked. Finally, after the denials by that candidate that the statement was made when confronted with irrefutable evidence that the statement had been made, we have a belated statement that the statement was made. The admission was coupled with excuses and explanations followed more specifically by threats against the reporter who revealed the evidence and the statements. The very next day after the New York primary, swastikas appeared on the doors in Co-op City. The candidate had repeatedly stated that he is tired of hearing about the Holocaust.

I hear all of the snide attacks and believe me, they are something: "Our support of Israel is accomplished by the Jewish control of the media." "The Banks controlled by the Jews are causing the oil prices to skyrocket." "The Jews are causing us to make enemies of the Arab oil countries." "Israel is responsible for the rising costs of gas and heating oil." "Israel is the aggressor." These are the stubble and situations which we hear day after day in "legal discussions." Being "fair." Who started the 6 day war? Was it Israel? Or was it the Arabs? Has any other country been asked to give back territory it acquired through bloodshed?

Who murdered the Israeli atheletes? That was a frightening day in my life because my husband, my son, and I, happened to be visiting in Lebanon on the day it happened. That morning, we were hustled on a plane and told to leave. We left our luggage behind because we were told that our lives were in danger. Who initiated the acts of terrorism? For the Jews and Israel is it okay to turn the other cheek? No one else does!

I stand up loud and clear when I hear comments against Catholics, against Italians, and because I was raised a Christian, I stand up loud and clear when I hear anti-semitic remarks. Shortly before I ascended the bench, although I had been elected, I happened to visit in Acapulco and Houston. I attended several dinner parties and I heard statements that made me shudder. When one is speaking with the elite in the oil community, one hears things. There was a subtle attempt to influence me as a judge. I can speak out. The dinner conversation focused on the PLO and how it would best serve the interest of the United States to punish Israel and abolish it as a homeland for the Jews. There was absolutely no understanding of the true fact, that Israel stands as a bulwark of democracy in the Middle East. It is in the interest of the United States to keep Israel strong.

What is anti-semitism? How does it manifest itself in the many insidious ways? Think of what it means to the Jews today to have an Israel. Had there been an Israel, a holocaust would have been impossible. The Jews would have had a homeland. We could never have a Holocaust of the Italians. We had a homeland, even though I left Italy when I was nine months old, if tomorrow they were to expel me from the United States, Italy would take me back.

"We should vote non-Jewish because the Jews vote for their own." That's the second attack. How did Mario Cuomo become the governor of this state? I'll give you some statistics. In Manhattan there are 20,000 Italian households; there are 120,000 Jewish households. How was I elected Surrogate of New York County if the Jews voted Jewish. Think about those comments in their just perspective. Statements are made and nobody listens to them, to analyze them; they just accept them.

"The Jews are the aggressors so we must condemn them." Where have they been the aggressors?

"The Jews are different." They dress differently, their backgrounds are different, their sabbath is different. I remember when I was a little girl in school, I looked different. I didn't look like an American, white anglo-saxon Protestant. I looked like an Italian girl. My clothes looked Italian, I dressed like an Italian. I went to a different kind of church. My knees were always dirty on Sunday mornings. So I looked different. We went to the park to have picnics. We were different. Does that mean that we should have been exterminated?

The most interesting statement is "The American Jews take their orders from Israel." Nothing could be further from the truth. Have any of you ever sat down and talked: if you have ten Jews you have ten opinions.

"They are not patriotic." Isn't it frightening when you stop to think about these statements? They don't say them to you, but they do say them to Christians.

Zionism is equated with racism. I'll tell you a little story out of school. At the time that statement was made by Mexico, I was President of the New York Trial Lawyers and we had planned a trip to Mexico. I didn't ask the Board of Directors. I didn't consult with anybody, I cancelled the trip. And when I cancelled the trip, everybody said how could you do that? I said it was very simple, we just weren't going. We do not have to patronize a country that equates Zionism with racism.

I could go on today with my examples, but I think I've given you enough. There are those among us today who think that the only problem with the final solution was that it was not finally imposed. This year at a time when we have presidential elections, we have heard about leadership, we have seen the pandering to the Jewish vote.

Where are we headed? Let us ponder for a minute or two on that question. If all of us as lawyers, Judges, leaders of the community, and members of the community ignore the growing anti-semitism in our midst, who will speak out against it? It reminds me of a story. There was once a Protestant minister who lived in Germany during World War II. When the Nazis came to the Jews he did not complain because he was not Jewish. When the Nazis came for the homosexuals he did not complain because he was not a homosexual. When the Nazis came for the Catholics, he did not complain because he was not Catholic. Finally, when the Nazis came for the Protestant minister, there was no one left to complain. It's a good lesson to remember.

A reporter of whom we should all be ashamed because he was born Jewish, but started early in life to deny his Jewishness by changing his name, left a portion of his estate to the PLO. It was not how much money was involved. It was a principle that would be established. Never did I think when I became a Surrogate that I might have an opportunity to strike out against terrorism. I raised the issue of whether such a bequest was permissible under New York law and whether it would be violative of public policy.

The editorial comment was predictable but terribly disappointing. I was accused of violating the constitution. A prominent newspaper that prides itself on the spirit of free inquiry grudgingly admitted that the legal questions were intriguing but opined that we were better off not knowing the answers. Would the reaction have been the same if the bequest had been to the Ku Klux Klan or the Nazi Party (which still exists in the United States)? Does a judge have a duty to inquire as to whether an organization is legally constituted and whether it is terrorist in nature?

The testimony was most interesting and maybe you might like to know that the PLO consists of every individual who has an Arab background. They have a governing body consisting of about 14 or 15 people. No terrorist activity is undertaken by the PLO without the permission of the governing body. Think about it! Every act of terrorism is an act which has been approved by the governing body of the PLO.

Should my decree have been silenced because it became a source of editorial attacks on the judiciary? Most interesting that despite the fact that there was nothing happening in the PLO case at the time, there was an election for the other Surrogate. The New York Times chose that day when they were endorsing a candidate for Surrogate to start their editorial with an attack upon me for my stand on the PLO case. Then there was a line, and then there was support by the New York Times for a candidate for Surrogate. Was this an insidious attack by a newspaper to warn any other Judge in my position of what they could expect, were they to take such a stand?

And believe me, when I did what I did. Professor Aronson was sitting in my office and I was discussing with my law secretary that I intended to raise the inquiry as to whether they were entitled to the bequest and as to whether I should give the bequest to a terrorist organization. Professor Aronson warned me that my inquires and my raising this question would endanger my very life because of the terrorist attacks that had occurred. He said, you know Judge, maybe you don't owe it to your self because you have the right to take whatever risks you want to take. But don't you owe it to your son not to take the risks? I said. I think I should discuss this with my son. I picked up the telephone an I called Gregory in Washington and I presented the problem to him. My son answered, and I'm so proud of it: "Mother, could you live with yourself if you allowed terrorism to counter your beliefs if you gave them the money?" I said I could not, and Greg said you have answered the question.

It was during that PLO case that I was reminded of the principles of a great leader who, in many ways, I have emulated: Golda Meir. She said if you are satisfied that you have touched the normal dimension, criticism should not matter. That is what leadership is all about.

Incidentally, the money did not go to the PLO; it went to the International Red Cross. It will not be used for terrorism. I feel that I took an important issue, interjected into it the moral question and made a decision. The money should not go to an organization dedicated to the elimination of a national group. Should we as judges fan the fuel and help it along? You see it as the swastikas, the desecration of the synagogues and the temples, the attacks on Jewish children, the torment, the snide remarks. Judges, lawyers, leasers of the community and articulate people help to mold all those who come in contact with us. We help to formulate the law. It is our sacred duty to the individual to wipe out every segment of anti-semitism no matter where it appears or in what form it takes. What stated with a very small group of Nazis in the 30's ended up with families being wiped out. And it will never happpen again.

I represented many of the hundreds of holocaust victims and I prevented their deportation. Their stories still bring tears to my eyes. We must commit ourselves to the principle that anti-semitism cannot flourish and it will never happen again. We must be constantly aware that together, as Christians and Jews, we can begin a long, long road of educating the public against anti-semitism today and anti-Christianity tomorrow. Thank you.●

MART NIKLUS' 50TH BIRTHDAY

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, September 22, Estonian ornithologist and human rights activist Mart Niklus will celebrate his 50th birthday. I use the word "celebrate" in the purely commemorative sense, for other than the love of his relatives in Estonia, and the concern of well-wishers throughout the world, Mr. Niklus has precious little to celebrate. He is currently languishing in the notorious Soviet prison for political prisoners at Chistopol, a facility that holds a number of other human rights advocates, such as Anatoly Shcharansky, Viktor Nekipelov, and Vazif Meilanov, to name just a few.

Mart Niklus first ran afoul of Soviet authorities in 1958 for having sent to the West 15 photographs depicting conditions in Estonia under Soviet rule. As a result of this relatively minor act of protest, he spent nearly 8 years in Soviet labor camps and exile. I might add here that Soviet newspapers and television regularly regale their audiences with photos and films of the negative side of American life, but reciprocity has never been a prominent feature of the Soviet attitude toward mass communications.

Following his release in 1966, Mart Niklus was denied the opportunity to work in his profession or to publish his scientific articles. He managed to secure a position teaching at the Foreign Language Institute in Tartu, Estonia, but this too was cut short by KGB pressure. From 1975 to 1979, Niklus was repeatedly harassed by the authorities as a result of his efforts on behalf of civil liberties and national rights in Estonia. He signed several statements of protest against Soviet policy in his homeland, and was one of 45 Baltic human rights advocates who signed the famous letter of August 23, 1979, protesting the Molotov-Ribbentrop treaty of 1939 that laid the foundation for the Soviet takeover of the independent Baltic States.

Arrested again in 1980, Niklus was sentenced in January 1981 to 10 years labor camp and 5 years internal exile for alleged "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." In 1983, word reached the West that he and Lithuanian political prisoner Viktoras Petkus had joined the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group, most of whose members are themselves either in labor camp, prison, or internal exile as a result of trumped-up political charges. It is probably no coincidence that we subsequently learned of Mart Niklus' transfer from labor camp to the more severe regime of Chistopol Prison.

In March 1984, Elfrida Niklus visited her son at Chistopol and has reported that he is in poor health as a result of hunger strikes, physical abuse, and the generally pitiful conditions at the prison.

Mr. Speaker, in June 1982, Congress passed House Concurrent Resolution 218 calling upon the Soviet Government to allow Mart Niklus to emigrate to Sweden to join a relative in that country. Coincidentally, I would note that the Conference on Disarmament in Europe, an offshoot of the 1975 Helsinki Accords, has recently resumed its deliberations in Stockholm.

As Chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I have repeatedly emphasized the balance that must be maintained throughout the Helsinki process: in the area of military security, economic and technical cooperation, and human rights. I call upon the Soviet Government to consider carefully this balance, to release Mart Niklus, and, if he cannot live as a free man in his own homeland, to emigrate to more hospitable shores.●

TERROR STRIKES IN LEBANON

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply shocked to learn of the tragic bombing of the American Embassy annex in East Beirut today.

My heart goes out to the families of the Lebanese Embassy employees who were killed. I trust that Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew and other American officers who were injured will recover.

As we reflect on this cowardly act, I strongly believe that all of us in the Congress should recommit ourselves to the fight against terrorism.

Although information about the incident is just being made available, I understand that a pickup truck, loaded with large quantities of explosives, crashed through a barrier around the Embassy annex and exploded near the front of the building. Lebanese security guards around the annex fired at the vehicle. They may have killed the driver. The truck allegedly had forged Dutch diplomatic license plates. This ruse may have assisted the driver in getting his vehicle inside the annex compound. Extensive damage was done to the front of the annex building.

When the explosion occurred, Ambassador Bartholomew and British Ambassador David Miers were meeting in the building. Ambassador Miers was also reportedly slightly injured by falling debris.

The Islamic Jihad, a political organization which has taken credit for past attacks on U.S. facilities in Lebanon, advised that this attack was in revenge for the U.S. vote in the U.N. Security Council concerning Israeli forces in Southern Beirut.

This blatant terrorist attack, the third attack on a U.S. facility in Lebanon in 1½ years, only serves to remind all of us that the struggle against terrorism is still going on. Blind and vicious attacks of this nature serve only to worsen a complex and delicate problem. A situation is never resolved through terrorism. Our Government must do all that it can to improve our intelligence collecting resources and enhance Embassy security overseas. Our diplomats and military personnel serving our Nation overseas must have the best protection available.

We in this Congress now have before us the President's package on international terrorism. The four proposed pieces of legislation are designed to support a more systematic and strengthened effort to effectively combat terrorism.

As we mourn the loss of innocent Lebanese and pray that our Embassy personnel will recover from their injuries, let us unite and do all that we can to pass this legislation and stop international terrorism now.●

STEEL-HIGH ROLLERS—WE'RE PROUD OF THEM

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, recently, in a display of international goodwill, the Confederation High School Cardinals from Ontario, Canada, came to my district to play football against the Steelton-Highspire High School Rollers. But it was more than just a football game between two teams. It was a memorable occasion to see such warm hospitality shown to the Canadian team by our students and our people, who literally took them into their homes and hearts during the brief visit.

I was proud to have shared in this outpouring of welcome by participating in a glorious parade and making brief remarks in which I stated that, "When you leave Steel-High after your brief stay, you will have seen the very best America has to offer!"

I would like to share with my colleagues a striking letter written by Mr. Barry Baumgardner to the Paxton Herald which best exemplifies the friendly relationship between two countries at their finest:

STEEL-HIGH ROLLERS—WE'RE PROUD OF THEM

DEAR EDITOR: I have missed one Steel-High Football game in the last 30 years and haven't missed one during the last 20 years. That qualifies me as a Roller fan. I have seen the great Williamsport classics. I have seen the titanic struggles against the enormous old Allentown schools. I have seen our sidelines literally covered with bodies as Doc Silver went from one to the other tending their injuries. I have seen the epic John Harris upsets and recently the District playoffs when, during the last two seasons, Steel-High has beaten every team entered. And during this long period the Roller teams have always, always made me feel so proud of their exploits on the Football field.

CANADIAN-AMERICAN FLAG FLY STAR SPANGLED BANNER RINGS OUT

Last week the Canadians came to our area. I was fortunate to have been close-up when thousands and thousands of our towns' peoples turned out to cheer and welcome them to America with dignitaries and a parade that stretched from Steelton to Highspire. I saw the way our students and our peoples welcomed them and opened their arms, their homes and their hearts to the Confederation team. In brief welcoming remarks United States Representative George Gekas said, "When you leave Steel-High after your brief stay, you will have seen the very best America has to offer!" and he was right! During the next few days I've never heard the Star Spangled Banner sang any louder. I've never seen more Canadian and American flags flying together. America and the Harrisburg Area in particular can be proud.

And during the various social events planned for both teams I saw the way our players, both before and after the game, became as one with their Canadian guests. I saw the Cardinals practice with the Rollers and watched our players teaching our techniques and drills to their opponents while they shared the same practice equipment. At school I saw our students make a special effort to go out of their way to welcome the Canadians. At the pep meeting the Cardinals and their Cheerleaders were cheered as loudly and as long as the Rollers were. At the many banquets given for the team from Canada I saw our boys willingly sitting at the opponents' tables. I saw first-hand the comraderie between players of different Nations, the seemingly endless hands-clasping and arms circling one another.

And yes, when the time for goodbyes came I saw the tears. Not Canadian or American tears. Just heart-to-heart tears. I heard the Canadian people being told, "This is the hard part—not the game!" Yes, I saw unashamed hugging and kissing and sadness. So much sadness after such a brief encounter!

They say we're Football Factory at Steel-High. They say all we teach our kids at Steel-High is how to win at Football. After viewing our students and our team during last weeks many Banquets, Dances and Festivities, I can't help but think that we must have been doing something right all these years. For in all the years I have been associated with the school, I have never been prouder of a Roller team than I was last week. And strangely none of the happenings that have made me so proud took place on a Football field!●

SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives a recent article in the Wall Street Journal that points out the dangers of President Reagan's assiduous courting of religious fundamentalists—groups and individuals who are determined to impose their narrow, rigid ideology on everyone.

We Americans have a great history behind us: A history of tolerance, of making room for every group and individual, of diversity, of freedom of speech and religion, and of a firm and definitive separation of church and state. These ideals do not weaken our Nation. On the contrary, they are our source of strength. Mr. Reagan, despite his election-year rhetoric, chooses to align himself with people who are bent on making a mockery of our history and of the basic rights of Americans to express views born of conviction, not consensus.

Mr. Speaker, the Reagan administration has put us in danger. Our freedom is in jeopardy, our faith—if not structured along officially "acceptable" lines—is suspect. As this article notes, a White House aide recently reproached her colleague with the directive to "get saved or get out." Get out, Mr. Speaker? Leave a job because of "insufficient" faith, or what others have deemed to be the wrong kind of faith? And get out from where? The White House? The executive branch? America?

The idea of groups or leaders setting themselves up to judge the religious beliefs of others is more than an outrage: It poses a desperate threat to the constitutional rights of every American. Citizens throughout this Nation can no longer afford to sit back and let Mr. Reagan and his friends, such as the Reverend Jerry Falwell, claim exclusive rights to God's message.

Mr. Speaker, the article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 18, 1984]

BIBLE IS BATTLE CRY—RELIGIOUS RIGHT COUNTS ON REAGAN

(By Rich Jaroslovsky)

"It doesn't matter what the Supreme Court says, or what the Senate says," asserts Jay Strack, an earnest young preacher from Fort Myers, Fla. "We know what the Bible says."

With that as their battle cry, Mr. Strack and countless others of the so-called "religious right" have plunged into the 1984 presidential campaign. Polls show a commanding lead for the candidate they support—President Reagan—so expectations among fundamentalist Christians are soaring.

With the economic crises of the president's first term, "our agenda had to be reserved for a later moment," says the Rev. Richard Hogue, an Oklahoma City pastor and religious broadcaster. He and others leave no doubt they believe that "later moment" has arrived. "Now, our issues can be addressed," he says.

Some of those issues are well-known, while others may be obscure to many voters. But all share an underlying assumption that the government should take religious precepts—specifically, fundamentalist Christian precepts—into account in determining its politics.

"The nation's leaders are going to have to set an example" for its people, says the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart, a television evangelist, who has been to the Reagan White House several times. "That example, I believe, should be Christianity."

The president himself has done much to raise their expectations. Since taking office, he has assiduously courted fundamentalist leaders with White House invitations and personal appearances at their meetings. To fundamentalist audiences, he pronounces that religion and politics are inseparable, and dedicates himself to such cherished religious-right goals as a constitutional amendment allowing prayer in public schools.

The religious right's affection for him far transcends election-year rhetoric, though. They regard him as their entree into the halls of political respect and power, as well as what the Rev. Jerry Falwell, head of the Moral Majority, calls "God's instrument in rebuilding America"—along fundamentalist lines.

The religious right is a loose amalgamation of fundamentalist Christians united in their concern about what they regard as the nation's moral decay over the last several decades. In White House meetings last January and June, many of them sealed their support for Mr. Reagan's reelection: Mr. Falwell; the Rev. Charles Stanley, head of the Southern Baptist Convention, the nation's largest Protestant denomination; TV evangelists such as Mr. Swaggart and James Robison; the Rev. Tim LaHaye and his American Coalition for Traditional Values; and many others.

"We have a world view and we want to see it codified into law," says Gary Jarmin, national field director for Mr. LaHaye's group. "We recognize not everyone agrees. But somebody's values will prevail."

Religious-right leaders say their emphasis on fundamentalist Christian values doesn't mean they're bigoted against Jews and other religions that don't accept their teachings. Many, in fact, strongly support Israel, seeing the Jewish state as the fulfillment of biblical prophecy.

But such support doesn't always extend to Judaism as a religion. Many fundamentalists hold that God doesn't hear the prayers of Jews and that fundamentalist Christianity is the only way to assure salvation of the soul. "Unless you accept Jesus Christ as your own personal savior, you're not going to make heaven your home," says Mr. Swaggart.

To demonstrate their political strength, religious-right leaders aim to register two million new voters for this year's election. Such voters, almost exclusively white and conservative, are sure to favor Mr. Reagan. The religious leaders will circulate "moral" scorecards rating the candidates; support for a nuclear freeze, for example, is a black mark. Not surprisingly, Mr. Reagan comes out with the top rating. "About 80% will favor the candidate with the highest moral voting record," Mr. LaHaye asserts.

If Mr. Reagan is reelected, these groups expect a major payoff in Supreme Court appointments. With five current justices older than 75, it is widely assumed the next president will have several vacancies. Fundamentalists expect to hold Mr. Reagan to the Republican platform, which calls for the appointment of only judges opposed to abortion. The result, they hope, will be a reversal of the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortion.

"We have his word," says Mr. Strack. "If God doesn't judge America for the hideous sin of abortion, he'll have to apologize to Sodom and Gomorrah."

But the fundamentalists political agenda extends well beyond the abortion and schoolprayer issues. Many religious-right figures hope for changes in the federal policy on tax exemptions for church-affiliated schools: Mr. Reagan tried but failed in 1982 to provide such benefits for Bob Jones University despite its racially discriminatory policies. Additionally, the president's support of tuition tax credits could benefit church schools.

Many religious right leaders also hope to see Mr. Reagan continue to fight against the Equal Rights Amendment, oppose any expansion of gay rights and lead a crusade against pornography. "He's already laid the gauntlet down that he's interested in protecting children from pedophiles and child pornographers," asserts the San Diego-based Mr. LaHaye.

Mr. Reagan has been voicing support for those goals for four years without notable success. But there have been some results. "One of the misconceptions is that he hasn't delivered on a lot of things," says Anthony Podesta, president of People for the American Way, a liberal group that keeps tabs on the religious right. Fundamentalists won recent passage of legislation allowing religious groups "equal access" to public-school facilities with other student activities.

Moreover, Mr. Reagan has placed figures sympathetic to religious-right goals throughout his administration. One White House aide, Carolyn Sundseth, recently raised eyebrows when she scolded insufficiently religious administration colleagues to "get saved or get out."

Apparently fearing a voter backlash—Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale recently assailed the president and his supporters for "moral McCarthyism"—the White House has begun to back away from emphasizing religious-right issues. In his own address to B'nai B'rith, Mr. Reagan dispensed with his standard calls for a school-prayer amendment and an end to abortion. Moreover, the official White House line currently is that Mr. Reagan's social policies aren't going to veer sharply if he gets reelected. "I don't think he's going to do anything differently" in a second term, says Douglas Holladay, who recently succeeded Mrs. Sundseth as White House liaison to Protestant groups.

But the president's fundamentalist allies don't believe Mr. Holladay. Paul Weyrich of the Washington-based Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress, who often has criticized the White House for failing to push harder on "moral" issues, says "there's reason to be somewhat optimistic" about a second term. And Mr. Strack, the young Florida minister, counts on great things from a reelected Ronald Reagan. "I expect the man to use whatever power he possesses," Mr. Strack declares.●

THE PLIGHT OF SOVIET JEWRY

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, as a participant in the 1984 Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jews, I would like to bring to my colleagues attention the latest developments in the plight of Soviet Jewry generally and the case of Vladimir Slepak and his family specifically.

I can't think of a human rights issue which has drawn more concern from the Members of this Congress than Soviet Jewry—and with good cause. Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union has decreased by 98 percent since 1979, and life for those who remain behind has become increasingly more repressive. These people are forced to remain in a country where they are the victims of religious persecution by a government which openly sanctions antisemitism in its policies and in its press.

One particular example of this is the case of Vladimir Slepak, one of the pioneers of the Soviet Jewry emigration movement. In April 1970, Vladimir Slepak, his wife Maria, and their sons first applied for their exit visas. They were refused for reasons of "secrecy" and "state interests."

Since then, Vladimir has become a leading activist and a spokesman for Soviet Jews trying to go to Israel. He was the first Jew in the Soviet Union to talk to foreign correspondents, and was among the first to address petitions, letters, and appeals to the United Nations. In addition, he led demonstrations and became a member of the "Public Group to Assist the Fulfillment of the Helsinki Accords in the U.S.S.R."

The Soviet Government has maliciously harassed and ostracized Vladimir Slepak, labeling him a traitor and accusing him of espionage and treason. The Slepaks' home has been continuously raided and searched, their personal possessions confiscated and destroyed, the telephone disconnected, and the walls bugged. At various times the family has been kept under house arrest and beaten by the KGB. Vladimir was also sentenced to various short terms in prison on minor charges and was banished to Siberia from 1978 to 1983.

Vladimir Slepak still clings to the hope that he will eventually receive permission to emigrate to Israel. The U.S. Committee to Free Vladimir Slepak, along with its honorary chairman, Elie Wiesel, are trying to aid in the repatriation of this brave man and his family to Israel, the historic Jewish homeland.

Mr. Slepak states that he is convinced that the only protection he and other Refuseniks have is the awareness by the authorities that someone outside the Soviet Union cares for them. On September 25, my colleague from New York, Representative DOWNEY, and I will be sponsoring a special order on behalf of Soviet Jewry. The intent of this special order is to send a clear message to the Soviets that Congress and the American people do care about the abuses leveled at the 2½ million Jews left in the Soviet Union. I urge everyone to please join us on September 25 to help Vladimir Slepak and other Refuseniks.●

RESPONSE TO THE PRESIDENT'S ANNOUNCEMENT ON STEEL

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, despite his slick salesmanship, President Reagan has failed at statemanship. Yesterday, the President denied help to the ailing American steel industry.

Rejecting the recommendation of the International Trade Commission, President Reagan refused any type of quantitative restrictions on imported steel.

He had the opportunity to adopt a comprehensive approach to the problem of steel imports. He had the chance to act as a true national leader.

Instead, he offered the Nation's steelworkers piecemeal promises and election year assurances while he presides over the decline of a leading national industry.

President Reagan claimed that he rejected quantitative restrictions on steel imports because "it is not in the national economic interest." in the past 2 years, the American steel industry has lost $6 billion.

In our country, steel industry employment has been cut by close to 50 percent—from an average of 453,000 workers between 1975-79 to about a quarter million today.

An additional half million workers in related industries—coal mining, railroads, water transportation, and the like—have been directly hurt by decreasing American steel production. Surely these ills cannot be in "the national economic interest."

The President's announcement ensures that America will remain the world's dumping ground for steel. The latest statistics available reveal that imports surged to a record high of 33 percent in July. By continuing to import illegally subsidized foreign steel, America continues to import the misery that comes with each shipment: The loss of American jobs, the loss of American tax revenues, the loss of American productivity, and the loss of the American way of life. This intolerable situation cannot be in "the national economic interest."

In western Pennsylvania, I have seen firsthand the suffering caused by the massive flood of imports. In many parts of my district, unemployment stands at 15 percent. Steel mills and production facilities have shut down. Long-established communities are dying. My constituents and their loved ones feel frustration and despair. As a result of yesterday's decision, President Reagan has given them no cause for hope.

America needs a sensible trade policy now.

The President had his chance; he prefers rhetoric to reality.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5081, the Fair Trade in Steel Act.

This legislation gives the American steel industry a much needed helping hand to fight imports.

President Reagan has given the industry nothing but hurt.●

FISHERMEN ARE SUFFERING TOO, MR. PRESIDENT

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, perhaps if we can turn Federal relief for the hard-hit Northwest fishing industry into a campaign issue, the President will feel compelled to acknowledge the plight of this industry for the first time in his administration.

After all, if President Reagan can suddenly find $650 million in aid to the Midwestern farmers he has been foreclosing on for the past 3½ years, if he can find time now to meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko after antagonizing the Russians for 3½ years, and if he now can decide to support the Genocide Treaty after ignoring it for 3½ years—all because Fritz Mondale has raised them as campaign issues—then why can't he do the same for these economically distressed fishermen?

For over a year now, I have been working, along with several other Members from the Northwest, to provide Federal disaster relief for businesses devastated by the El Nino climatic disturbance. The El Nino global weather phenomenon is a warming of ocean currents that in the Northwest has destroyed stocks of salmon, steelhead trout, crabs, and shellfish used to far cooler waters.

The result has been economic disaster for businesses who rely on the harvesting, catching and processing of seafood products. Commercial salmon fishermen in my State of Washington have seen their annual income plummet from average levels of over $13,000 to only $1,318 in 1983.

Although this administration has made available over $98 million through the Agency for International Development to Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador for relief from this same natural disaster, the Small Business Administrator has refused to recognize the El Nino phenomenom as a natural disaster to qualify businesses under the Economic Injury Disaster Loan Program. It was not without a sinking sense of irony that I recently read a copy of a letter to the President Belaunde of Peru from a mayor in one of the most hard hit communities in my district, asking for him to share a small amount of Peru's El Nino disaster relief—American aid that had been denied him by the SBA.

Members of the Northwest delegation have not stood idly by during these troubled times. In the House we added an amendment to the Small Business Administration authorization bill which would have qualified the Northwest fishing industry for El Nino disaster relief. Unfortunately, this bill because stalled in the Senate, due to White House opposition to the El Nino provision and other elements of the bill. Several Northwest Senators then attached the El Nino relief to the fiscal year 1985 appropriations bill for the Department of Commerce and other Federal agencies, but this bill too, became bogged down in controversy and the El Nino relief was dropped.

Since then, the SBA has agreed to offer low interest loans to certain west coast fishermen under the Federal Action Loan Program. Businesses are eligible for this type of loan as a result of hardship caused by Government action, in this case the shortened fishing season ordered by the Pacific Fisheries Management Council [PFMC]. The SBA still refuses to acknowledge El Nino as a natural disaster which caused the poor season necessitating the action by the PFMC to shorten the season.

While these low interest loans appear on the surface to be a good solution, closer examination proves them to be extremely restrictive in scope and unlikely to provide much relief. I am concerned that the new SBA policy would not take effect for many months and would not apply to inland fishermen, or processors, clammers, and related tourism firms. The SBA regulations also would provide loans at a far less advantageous rate that we have envisioned.

Member of the Oregon, California, and Washington delegations, including all six Senators, have written the SBA and outlined these and other concerns. We are hopeful for a fair solution. In the meantime, however, our fishing industry is left to read headlines about relief to South American countries and midwestern farmers suffering from drought and weak market conditions.

The administration's irresponsible attitude on SBA relief for the El Nino disaster is only one example of their hostility to Northwest fisheries resources. In each of his past four budget proposals, President Reagan has tried to abandon the longstanding Federal financial responsibility to fishery programs nationwide.

The administration's budget proposal for fiscal year 1985 included a 37-percent cut in National Marine Fisheries Service funding, and represented a wholesale attack on recreational and commercial fishermen in the Pacific Northwest. The administration proposed eliminating the $10 million Columbia River Hatchery Program, the $2.5 million salmon vessel and license buy-back effort, and a wide variety of research, development, and grant programs critical to improved management and better utilization of our salmon, groundfish, and other marine resources.

Fortunately, in each of the past 4 budget years, Northwest Members, working closely with the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the Appropriations Committee, have been successful in restoring these cuts.

On another issue, the administration is almost predictably resisting legislation which would make giant steps toward full domestic harvesting, processing, and marketing of the abundant fish resources within our 200-mile economic zones. The bill, H.R. 3255, would provide loan guarantees for fish exports, similar to those provided for other agricultural products. This, in turn, will enable our fish product manufacturers to break into new foreign markets and stimulate investment in processing facilities and other capital needed to phase out foreign involvement in our 200-mile zone. According to recent estimates, we could create 43,000 new jobs in our fishing, processing, and related industries if we took full advantage of our 200-mile zone resources.

Department of Agriculture programs, including the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Public Law 480 Food for Peace Program, currently provide close to $7 billion annually in export financing, promotion, and other trade services for producers of agricultural commodities. No comparable financing is available for U.S. fishery products and funding for fisheries export promotion programs like Saltonstall-Kennedy have been under attack by the Reagan administration for the past several years.

The 200-mile exclusive economic zone of the United States contains an estimated 20 percent of the world's fishery resources, more than any other nation. Yet the United States has suffered a trade deficit in fish and fish products for over 35 years. The fisheries trade deficit has risen from $259 million in 1960 to more than $4 billion in 1983.

As a nation we have grain-producing capabilities to the point that we regularly have a surplus. We now have in place several programs like PIK—Payment in kind—which actually pay farmers not to produce. However, we have scarcely begun to appreciate the fantastic resources within our 200-mile zone which already have established markets and offer enormous trade opportunities. For years our offshore zone has been heavily fished by foreign vessels from nations who consume much larger amounts of fish per capita than we do at home. In the Northwest, U.S. fisherman still must take their catches to large foreign processing vessels offshore because of inadequate facilities and marketing conditions at home.

Mr. Speaker, without question, the farmers in the Midwest need the financial assistance to weather the disastrous economic policies of this administration. But I am distressed to see one segment of America's food producing industry rewarded because of their political strength and potential votes in November, while fishermen in my area are ignored by this administration.

Our small fishing firms in the Northwest have been suffering the same high interest rates and weather-induced hardship as the farmers, yet they have no relief in sight. They're not asking for a handout. They just want a chance to save their small businesses, to earn a decent living, and to be treated on the same basis with the other food producers in the country.

I will continue to press for this needed assistance to the fishing industry as will my colleagues in coastal States around the country.●

MART NIKLUS—FIGHTER FOR BALTIC FREEDOM

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on September 22, 1984 Mart Niklus, an Estonian human rights activist and Helsinki monitor will celebrate his 50th birthday. He will observe his birthday in a depressing prison cell in the infamous Christopol Prison, away from his family and friends.

For many years Mart Niklus has been an outspoken supporter of human rights. As a result of his activities, he has been accused of anti-Soviet behavior and served several prison terms. We in the West know that his only true crime is his advocacy for human rights. His personal cause has been the pursuit of civil and national liberties for the people of the Baltic States.

In 1981 the Supreme Court of Estonia sentenced Mart Niklus to 10 years in a special regime hard labor camp and 5 years internal exile. The charges of anti-Soviet behavior were based on his efforts to publicize and renunciate the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact. As a result of that pact, the independent Baltic nations of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania were partitioned by Hitler and Stalin on the eve of World War II.

While in prison, Mart Niklus has been subjected to numerous physical beatings, including one that occurred within earshot of his mother while she was visiting him in the prison. In addition, Mart Niklus is in very poor health, a combination of untreated radiculitis and successive hunger strikes. He is clearly in need of medical attention which the prison authorities have denied him.

For several years members of Congress have spoken out in support of Mart Niklus. In 1982 I joined my colleagues in supporting House Concurrent Resolution 218, a resolution which calls upon the Soviet Government to honor its commitments under the Helsinki accords by allowing Mart Niklus to emigrate to Sweden.

This year, along with many Members of the House, I am participating in a program sponsored by the Estonian American National Council to send birthday greeting to Mart Niklus. The birthday cards featured two swallows in flight, the symbol of freedom to Estonians.

Mr. Speaker, I doubt that the Soviet prison authorities will allow Mart Niklus to receive the hundreds of birthday cards being sent to him from his supporters around the world. Yet, be sending these birthday cards, by calling attention to the plight of Mart Niklus, we let the Soviet officials know that we will not forget him and the fight for human rights that he symbolizes for Estonian in the United States, in the Soviet Union and around the world. I can only hope that next year Mart Niklus will be able to celebrate his birthday in freedom, living with his family and friends in the country of his choice.●

GUAM PRESS HAILS OMNIBUS BILL

HON. ANTONIO BORJA WON PAT

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, on September 14, 1984, the House passed legislation I authored known as the 1984 omnibus territories bill. This measure provides vital new Federal assistance to Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Northern Marianas.

Your approval of my latest efforts to bolster the economy of these islands is deeply appreciated both by myself and by the people of Guam.

I call your attention to editorials printed by the Guam Tribune and the Guam Pacific Daily News which salute the passage of the 1984 omnibus territories bill. The Guam Tribune said the bill is like "manna from heaven," and the normally conservative Pacific Daily News called the bill's historical benefits for Guam an early Christmas.

The strong praise the two editorials have for the omnibus bill is a reflection of how much the territory needs the provisons of the bill. Of particular concern is the status of a Federal loan owed by Guam Power Authority. My legislation revamps the conditions of the loan to prevent the people of Guam from facing a new power rate hike in the near future.

As the primary sponsor of this bill and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs which initially approved the measure, I am proud of a role in its success. Let me quickly add, however, that the credit for this bill must also be shared with my colleagues on the subcommittee and with my many friends here in the House who gave unstintingly of their support for my efforts on behalf of the territory.

I also want to thank the writers of the two editorials, Mr. Carlos Nivera of the Guam Tribune and Mr. Joe Murphy of the Pacific Daily News for their excellent commentaries on the value of the 1984 omnibus territories bill to Guam. Through their editorials the people of Guam will become better informed of how we here in the U.S. Congress are working to enhance the quality of their lives and improve the relationship which exists between the Federal Government and American territories.

Editorials follow:

LIKE MANNA FROM HEAVEN

(By Carlos Nivera)

Swift approval by the House of Representatives of the amended 1984 Omnibus Territories bill with a new refinancing plan for the Guam Power Authority speaks well of Congresman A.B. Won Pat's connections and "savvy" in Congess. When he left Guam for Washington, there was considerable pessimism because Senator Lowell Weicker had excluded from the original bill the entire section (Sec. 203) concerning GPA.

It was feared that with so little time left before Congress' adjournment in October, the House would place Won Pat's bill in the low priority list. Within a week after he got to Washington, the 1984 Omnibus Territories bill with several new pro-Guam features moved quickly through committee onto House consideration. There was hardly any opposition in the House.

Now the bill is up for Senate approval. There is still a possibility that someone in the Senate may put up an objection. In which case there would be a further delay should the bill be referred to conference committee.

But if the Senate gives its blessing to the bill as approved by the House, only President Reagan's veto can stop it.

And for the sake of Guam, everyone, Republicans included, should pray for Senate approval of the Ominbus Territories bill. No one should begrudge Congressman Won Pat credit for carrying the ball through the House.

What is pleasantly surprising is that Congressman Won Pat not only succeeded in pushing through a liberal 20-year subsidy plan for GPA worth about $100 million, he was also able to push through three new significant provisions that will definitely benefit the people of Guam.

These are: 1) A refund to GovGuam of federal taxes paid by retired military personnel and other federal employees on the island or Guam servicemen stationed abroad; 2) a special visa waiver for Guam, and 3) a relaxation of the federal restrictions on the transfer of 927 acres of Cabras Island land.

The original 1984 Omnibus Territories bill even without the GPA refinancing plan was good enough. But with the restoration of the refinancing plan and the three new "sweeteners" the bill, if passed by the Senate and signed into law, will prove for Guam "like manna from heaven."

BENEFITS TO ISLAND HIGH IN OMNIBUS BILL

(By Joe Murphy)

Talk about an early Christmas.

The passage of the 1984 Omnibus Territories bill could be just that. The total benefits to Guam, based on an analysis of the Guam provisions, would total as much as $36 million, equivalent to more than $1,285 per household annually.

This doesn't mean that the bill has passed yet. It has been approved by the House of Representatives, but now must face a Republican and cost-conscious Senate, and a tough-minded president.

Nobody should be cheering or taking bows yet until Ronald Reagan puts a pen in hand, and signs the bill.

It is an impressive list of benefits and grants, however, and this is especially so at a time that government cutting is the order of the day. It may be that the federal government is beginning to worry about the low economic conditions existing on Guam today.

The big item, of course, is the authority to refinance a $36 million GPA bond issue that would be done in 1990, cutting back the interest rate from 14 to 7 percent. In a compromise to placate certain senators, like McClure, Weicker and Johnston, in case of a default on the payments, Interior could step in and take over management of the authority, but Interior can't force the sale of GPA. Over a 20-year period this could mean as much as $100 million to Guam.

The Brooks amendment on the Cabras Island industrial development is almost as important to Guam. It would exempt policy that revenue from sale or lease of federal lands cannot be used for local development of the property. The potential benefit to Guam could be as much as $3.2 million annually for port development.

The visa waiver provision, originally contained in the Simpson-Mazzoli Immigration Bill, is another important section. It could trigger a new boom in Guam's tourism, removing a major obstacle to the expansion of the tourism markets of Asia.

A provision in the bill on withholding taxes of the military and federal retirees, under Section 30, could also bring $1 million annually into the general fund.

Guam's long years in the economic dog days could end with the passage and signing of this bill. Let us hope that we can bring it ahead to a beneficial conclusion. JCM.●

FOSTER CARE AND SSI AMENDMENTS APPROVED BY COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

HON. HAROLD E. FORD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, September 19, the Committee on Ways and Means ordered reported the Foster Care and SSI Amendments of 1984 (H.R. 6266). This bill is scheduled for consideration on the Suspension Calendar the week of September 24. This bill is cosponsored by myself and the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation, Mr. CAMPBELL. The bill provides for a 1-year extension of two expiring foster-care provisions, and a 1-year authorization for the Child Welfare Resource Centers. It also provides for an increase in the personal needs allowance for SSI recipients in Medicaid facilities from the current $25 a month to $35 a month. In addition, it makes a number of needed administrative improvements in the SSI program that were included in H.R. 5341, introduced earlier this year by Mr. STARK, and myself, and other Members of the House.

The following is a summary of the provisions of H.R. 6266 as it was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

FOSTER CARE AND SSI AMENDMENTS OF 1984—H.R. 6266

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS—CHILD WELFARE AND FOSTER CARE AMENDMENTS

1. Foster care maintenance payments for children voluntarily placed in foster care (Section 101). Section 101 provides for a one year extension beyond September 30, 1984 of the authority for States to claim Federal matching funds for children who are placed in foster care under a voluntary placement agreement between the agency and a child's parents.

2. One year extension of state option to use foster care assistance for child welfare services in certain cases (Section 102). Section 102 provides for a one year extension of the provision expiring on September 30, 1984 that allows States to transfer funds allocated to them for foster care under Title IV-E to use for child welfare services under Title IV-B of the Social Security Act.

3. Child welfare resource centers (Section 103). Section 103 requires the Secretary of HHS to fund in fiscal year 1986 a network of Child Welfare Resource Centers to provide assistance to States and other organizations and agencies in implementing the provisions of the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Amendments of 1980.

SSI AMENDMENTS—PART A—TREATMENT OF INCOME

1. Exclusion of certain real and personal property from income (Section 201). Section 201 provides for excluding from countable income certain unearned income received in the form of real or personal property which would not be counted as a resource in the following month.

2. Exclusion of interest and dividends from income (Section 202). Section 202 provides that interest and dividend income received by an SSI recipient on countable resources which are within the SSI resource limits would not be counted as income under the SSI program.

3. Exclusion of certain temporary income in retrospective budgeting (Section 203). Section 203 requires that temporary non-recurring income received by applicants for SSI may not be counted more than once under the retrospective budgeting process. This provision must be implemented no later than October 1, 1985.

4. Exclusion of reparations received by holocaust survivors (Section 204). Section 204 excludes from income reparations received from the West German and East German governments by holocaust survivors.

PART B—TREATMENT OF RESOURCES

5. Modification of penalties where assets are transferred at less than fair market value (Section 211). Current law provides a two year delay in eligibility for SSI benefits when resources are transferred at less than fair market value in order to qualify for benefits. This provision is modified by Section 211 to give the Secretary of HHS the authority to waive the denial of benefits to the extent determined necessary to avoid undue hardship.

6. Computation of vehicle value in assets test (Section 212). Section 212 provides that in determining whether an individual or couple meets the countable resources test, there shall be excluded one automobile.

PART C—DETERMINATION OF BENEFIT AMOUNTS

7. Changes in one-third reduction formula (Section 221). Section 221 modifies the assumptions to be used in determining whether or not an SSI applicant is receiving in-kind assistance when living with others in such a way as to protect SSI applicants from an automatic ⅓ reduction in their initial Federal SSI benefit if at the time of application they are living with a relatively low income household.

8. Increases in benefit standard for institutionalized recipients (Section 222). Section 222 increases the current $25 a month SSI benefit standard for residents of Medicaid facilities to $35, effective January 1, 1985. The committee directs the Department of Health and Human Services to take steps to assure that the full $35 SSI payment to persons in medical institutions will accrue to their personal benefit, and will not be subject to misuse by the operators of these institutions, or be used by States to lower Medicaid reimbursement rates to such institutions.

PART D—PROVISIONS RELATING TO ELIGIBILITY

9. Eligibility for benefits due deceased recipients (Section 231). Section 231 provides for payment of retroactive benefits on behalf of a deceased recipient to the ineligible spouse and the parent of a disabled or blind child. Present law provides that only an eligible spouse may receive the retroactive payment that was due a deceased SSI recipient.

10. Modification of certain filing requirements (Section 232). Section 232 provides that certain SSI applicants or recipients (those disabled widow/ers who at age 60 qualify for reduced title II benefits) will not be required to file for title II benefits, if receipt of such benefits would disadvantage the individual, i.e. loss of eligibility for SSI and subsequently health services under Medicaid.

11. Eligibility of couples living apart (Section 233). Section 233 reduces from six months to three months the time that an SSI individual and an eligible spouse must be living apart before they will be treated as individuals for determining eligibility for and the amount of SSI benefits.

PART E—OVERPAYMENTS, EMERGENCY PAYMENTS AND INTERIM ASSISTANCE

12. Extension of interim assistance program (Section 241). Section 241 expands the interim assistance program to include payment of the appropriate amount of retroactive SSI funds to the State, when the State has provided financial assistance to SSI recipients who have appealed a termination or suspension of benefits, subsequently won the appeal, and have qualified for retroactive SSI benefits. The provision must be implemented no later than October 1, 1985.

13. Study of alternative methods of promoting compliance with standards for group living facilities (Section 242). Present law requires that Federal SSI payments be reduced dollar-for-dollar for any payments made by a State to provide medical or remedial care on behalf of an SSI recipient who is in an institution that is not approved as meeting relevant State standards. The committee's provision directs HHS and GAO to analyze alternatives to current law and report findings by July 1, 1985.

14. Presumptively eligible individuals (Section 243). Section 243 provides that emergency advance payments which can be paid directly by a Social Security district office to those in need of immediate subsistence income bill be increased from a maximum of $100 to a maximum of 1 month's payment of SSI benefits.

15. Notice to recipients regarding overpayments (Section 244). Section 244 requires that when an individual has been overpaid, the Secretary must send the person a notice which contains, in simple language, the following information: the precise amount of the overpayment; the months in which the overpayment occurred; the reason the overpayment occurred; a statement of the manner in which, and the rate at which, the overpayment is proposed to be recovered; a complete statement of the individual's right to seek reconsideration of the finding that overpayment occurred; the right to seek waiver of repayment; and notice that if waiver or reconsideration is sought, payment of full benefits will continue until a decision is made.

PART F—STUDY OF EXTENSION OF SSI PROGRAM

16. Study of extension of program to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam and American Samoa (Section 251). The Department of Health and Human Services is required to conduct a study of the feasibility and cost of the extension of SSI to residents of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

PART G—OTHER PROVISIONS

17. Extension of outreach efforts (Section 261). Section 261 requires HHS to establish and conduct an ongoing SSI outreach effort.

18. Requirement of increased clarity and readability for written materials to be used by SSI applicants or recipients (Section 262). Section 262 requires that HHS take action to increase the clarity and readability of written materials to be used by SSI applicants or recipients. The amendment also requires SSA to contract with recognized experts to review current and future notices to determine if they are readily understandable by the SSI population, except to the extent it is determined not to be feasible. The objectives of simplicity and readability should not be permitted to override concerns for completeness, accuracy, or legal sufficiency.

19. Notice to blind SSI recipients (Section 263). Section 263 requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to provide SSI recipients who are blind with special notice of official actions which may affect their SSI benefit rights. The SSI recipient will be provided the option to receive a supplementary notice of any action by SSA by telephone or to receive the initial notice by certified letter. The Secretary must attempt to provide all blind SSI recipients with the option to receive this supplementary notification within at least one year after the bill is enacted.

It also requires the Secretary to conduct a study to determine the feasibility of providing supplementary notification rights to individuals who may have difficulty in reading printed notices. These individuals may include the mentally impaired and persons for whom English is a second language.

20. General effective date (Section 264). Except as otherwise specifically provided, the provisions of title II are effective January 1, 1985.●

COUNCILMAN ARTHUR KATZMAN'S 80TH BIRTHDAY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me now in extending best wishes to New York City Councilman Arthur Katzman on his 80th birthday, on September 21, 1984.

The distinguished councilman was first elected in January 1962, and has devoted 22 years of selfless service to improving the quality of life for citizens in the New York area. He has championed the causes of the good people of the 22d city council district in central Queens. He has fought tenaciously for the interests and issues of his constituents. He is truly a representative of the people—listening to their concerns, caring and translating that compassion into action. He has kept his door and his heart open to his people for these many years.

Arthur Katzman is the chairman of the council committee on environmental protection, and is former chairman of the committee on standards and ethics. He has been a source of strength and wisdom to the council, and his guidance and influence are well known and held in high esteem.

Mr. Speaker, Arthur Katzman is truly a legend in his own time. He has made an immeasurable contribution to the people of Queens and to the city of New York as a whole. It was a momentous day for the citizens of New York when Arthur touched down on American soil as a young immigrant from Russia, eager for a new life in the United States. He was educated in New York and received his law degree from Brooklyn Law School.

Arthur Katzman is a leading citizen in the community of Forest Hills. He practices law part time, and is a member in good standing of many notable organizations, including the New York State Americans for Democratic Action, the New York State Queens County Bar Association, the New York Civil Liberties Union, and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Mr. Speaker, Arthur Katzman's 80th birthday marks a long and remarkable career of public service. He has dedicated himself to the betterment of others, and his tireless efforts have ensured a safer, brighter future for every resident of New York City.

Mr. Speaker, let us take this moment to congratulate Mr. Katzman on his memorable career in public office and to wish him a joyous 80th birthday.●

THE PLIGHT OF SOVIET JEWRY

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, several months have now passed since my colleagues and I joined together on March 15, 1984, to mark the International Day of Concern for Soviet Jewry in honor of the scores of Soviet Jews who are trapped in the enigmatic life of refusenik. In a continued effort to reaffirm the resolve to secure freedom for Soviet Jews and beleaguered people everywhere, I address my remarks today to the case of Dr. Viktor Brailovsky.

Viktor Brailovsky, who completed a 5-year term in internal exile and returned to his Moscow home in mid-March, is in urgent need of support. Although he is at last reunited with his family, the string of harassments brought in by his 1972 application to emigrate to Israel grows longer everyday.

A few short weeks ago, Brailovsky's fortunes appeared to be on an upswing as, without a hitch, he was issued a propiska [residence permit] for Moscow. At that time, he wrote, "It is great luck. So my next step is to renew my emigration request." But complications have since set in. During a telephone conversation with his friend and cofounder of the Moscow Scientific Seminar, emigre physicist Alexander Voronel, Brailovsky revealed that the Soviet bureaucracy has geared up to visit new tribulations upon him.

Apparently blacklisted, he has been unable to find gainful employment, professional or menial. Should this situation prevail for an extended period of time, Brailovsky will be open to a charge of parasitism and possible relegation to the gulag for a second time.

Progress on his close-to-12-year quest for emigration is also stymied. OVIR [Office of Visas and Registration] has refused to accept the Brailovsky family's latest application for exit visas on the ground that Viktor's 76-year-old mother-in-law, Fanya Feffer, has not submitted her birth certificate. Given their acceptance of earlier family emigration applications unaccompanied by this document, the authorities now appear bent on confounding matters for the Brailovsky's. Undaunted, Viktor's wife, Irina, has gone to Dnepropetrovsk to search the archives for her mother's birth certificate. It is open to conjecture, if and when this document is produced, whether the authorities will accept the application or raise still another technicality.

These developments, which find Brailovsky jobless and his emigration application stalled, are fraught with potential for prolonging his long ordeal. Until there is an end to the nightmares suffered by Soviet Jews and they are allowed to emigrate freely, we must continue to raise our collective voices in outrage. We have been and must continue to be forceful and persistent in our efforts for Soviet Jews.●

MARJORY STONEMAN DOUGLAS

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, on October 18, I will be participating in ceremonies honoring the achievements of a very special lady from Florida, Marjory Stoneman Douglas. She is an example to us all of the impact one dedicated individual can make toward the preservation of our natural resources.

Ms. Douglas majored in geography at Wellesley College, where she graduated in 1912, and credits that major and her study of elocution with giving her the tools she has needed for her crusade to guarantee a safe water supply and to preserve the ecology of her adopted region. Her knowledge of Florida and its natural history, her disciplined mind, her wit and her elocution skills have all been put to use when she has stood up against the giants of industry and development and still been able to sway elected officials to do what she defines as right and necessary.

Ms. Douglas arrived in Miami in 1915, when it was still a pristine new frontier, and quickly joined the staff of the Miami Herald. She became part of that set of individuals who formed and shaped south Florida and whose names adorn its streets, parks, and monuments. By 1921, following wartime service, she had become a short-story writer, chiefly for the Saturday Evening Post. Her sensitivity to the south Florida environment formed the base that underlies many of her literary endeavors. Her work with the committee that formed in 1927 to create an Everglades conservation region led to the dedication in 1947 of Everglades National Park, the same year her definitive book, "The Everglades: River of Grass," was published.

By 1970, Ms. Douglas had become the founder and president of Friends of the Everglades, a group that is omnipresent whenever a human or natural force threatens the ecology of Florida. Today, at the age of 94, Ms. Douglas is still campaigning. This time she is hard at work supporting Gov. Bob Graham's Save the Everglades Program by restoring the natural flow of water to the park. On July 28 of this year, Ms. Douglas was present at a ceremony on the banks of the Kissimmee River to kick off the first trial run for the river restoration she and the friends had long advocated.

Some people call Ms. Douglas the mother of the Everglades; others the grandmother. I am happy just to call her a friend and an inspiration. On October 18, I look forward to joining her at a major celebration hosted by the numerous organizations and individuals indebted to her for her tireless defense of our natural resources. Then I can thank her in person. Today, I wanted to bring to the attention of our colleagues the achievements of this remarkable woman.●

ON BEHALF OF MART NIKLUS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge my colleagues to take a few minutes out of their busy schedules today to sign the scroll which is in the well of the House.

This scroll will be sent to an Estonian human rights activist, Mart Niklus, as an expression of sympathy from the United States. Mart Niklus has literally put his life on the line for human rights. Now he faces his 50th birthday dangerously ill and in solitary confinement in Chistopol Prison. It is my hope that by sending this scroll we can send him a bit of encouragment and boost his morale as he faces the inhumane conditions of his confinement.

On April 13 of this year, I wrote Soviet Chairman Chernenko and requested that he review this case and see that Mr. Niklus received proper medical attention. I also asked that Mart Niklus be released from imprisonment and permitted to emigrate to the country of his choice, Sweden. Of course, I received no reply from the Soviets.

Even though we may never know the results of our efforts, I have been assured by State Department professionals that correspondence from the free world is encouraging to imprisoned dissidents and can even influence the way they are treated daily by prison authorities. If the Soviets will not heed requests for Mr. Niklus' emigration, perhaps receiving this scroll will help them to realize that many people in the United States are concerned about this case and any treatment Mr. Niklus receives will be noticed by the free world.●

ANOTHER HONOR FOR JACK TERRY FOR DEDICATED SERVICE TO HIS COMMUNITY, STATE, AND AMERICA

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, September 25, the Onondaga County Republican Candidates' Committee in my 27th Congressional District of New York State will honor an outstanding and dedicated citizen as the committee's "Man of the Year."

He is John Hart "Jack" Terry who served as a distinguished Member of this legislative body.

Mr. Speaker, Jack Terry is not only a man of the year. He is a man of years, of constant service to the people of his native Syracuse, his State of New York, and his beloved America.

Endowed with a fine mind, exceptional spirit and deep compassion for humanity, Jack was a high school graduate at 16, a prelaw graduate of Notre Dame University at 18, and decorated hero of World War II, who enlisted as a private and earned his stripes as a top noncommissioned officer and an officer's commission.

After receiving his law degree from Syracuse University, where he was president of the law student council, Jack Terry served a decade as Onondaga County supervisor, the youngest ever elected. He went on to serve as Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's secretary, to 8 years of service in the New York State Assembly where he was chairman of the Government Operations Committee and a member of the Ways and Means, Judiciary, Vehicle and Traffic Committees and the Joint Committee on Corporations. In 1970, he was elected to represent New York State's 34th District in Congress, in the same freshman class as our distinguished colleague, JACK KEMP, who will be the featured speaker at our September 25 dinner honoring Jack Terry.

Jack Terry served skillfully and effectively on the Committees on Public Works and Transportation, and Interior and Insular Affairs, as well as the Bipartisan New York State Congressional Delegation's Steering Committee. He did not seek election to the 93rd Congress but chose to return to Syracuse where his subsequent record of civic and public service, and political leadership have proved of immense benefit to our Greater Syracuse area and the Empire State.

As senior vice president, general counsel, and secretary of the Niagara Mohawk Corp., as well as his service on the boards and councils of a broad spectrum of community organizations, Jack Terry continues to contribute to the betterment of our citizens and their quality of life.

His many honors already include the Kiwanis Club's Distinguished Citizen Award, the Freedom Political Club's Outstanding Citizen Award, the Jaycees' New York State and Syracuse Young Man of the Year Distinguished Service Awards, Notre Dame's Man of the Year Award, the New York State Traffic Safety Council's Award of Merit, the Maria Regina College's Highest Award Medal, and the Seneca County Medal.

Mr. Speaker, it is with signal pride that I bring the attention of the Congress to the accomplishments of our former colleague and yet another honor for my personal friend, Jack Terry.

In behalf of our Members who served with him and we who continue to seek his counsel, I wish Jack, his dear wife, Jean, and their daughters the best on this coming Tuesday's memorable occasion and in the years ahead.●

POVERTY INCREASING AT ALARMING RATE

HON. HAROLD E. FORD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon, the Subcommittee on Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation and the Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Ways and Means held a hearing. What was unique about this hearing was that Office Management and Budget Director, David Stockman, was the chief witness. Mr. Stockman talked to us about the steady and alarming increase in the poverty rate—it now stands at 15.2 percent—over the past few years. We asked him to explain any plans this administration has for helping the 34.4 million Americans who are poor in this country.

The hearing was special because back in 1983, Mr. Stockman assured us that he was "absolutely certain" that the poverty rate would decline in 1983. Unfortunately, Mr. Stockman's prediction did not prove correct. This afternoon, we asked Mr. Stockman about that prediction but, more importantly, we asked him what the Reagan administration proposes to do to reverse this trend. Mr. Stockman offered us no suggestions. He said that the only thing that will help female-headed households who are poor is economic growth, and he implied that these families will have to wait 3 to 5 years before a substantial reduction in poverty occurs. We cannot afford to wait 5 years.

With one out of every four of our children below the age of six, and one-third of all black Americans, now living in poverty, the poverty problem can no longer be ignored or defined away. To do so is to foreclose the future of our children. We must act to reverse this trend and offer some hope to the nearly 35 million Americans who live in poverty today.

I also have taken the liberty of including my opening remarks made at the hearing.●

IN HONOR OF DR. DAVID E. SWEET

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to take a moment to honor Dr. David E. Sweet, president of Rhode Island College. Dr. Sweet died suddenly last Sunday, and we in the Rhode Island community will miss his dynamic leadership at Rhode Island College.

During his 7-year tenure as president, Dr. Sweet completed the transformation of Rhode Island College, the oldest public college in my State, from a teachers' college to a school with a solid liberal arts curriculum. Dr. Sweet also initiated at Rhode Island College a successful business management program and developed a graduate program in social work. His energy and determination helped Rhode Island College grow in both student population and academic excellence.

Dr. Sweet came to Rhode Island College after serving as president of Minnesota Metropolitan State College, a school which provided innovative, nontraditional education. He also served as special assistant to the president of Illinois State University and taught at Ohio and Duke Universities. A political science professor, Dr. Sweet was a magna cum laude graduate of Drury College and received his master's and doctoral degrees from Duke University.

I extend my sincere condolences to Dr. Sweet's family and regret that Rhode Island has lost such an important and vigorous educator.●

REPEAL IMPUTED INTEREST RATE PROVISIONS OF THE DEFICIT REDUCTION ACT OF 1984

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 6021. This legislation will repeal those provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 which changed the tax treatment of imputed interest rates.

Under current law, sellers can finance their sales at interest rates as low as 9 percent and be taxed directly on that "safe harbor" percentage. However if the financing rate falls below 9 percent the imputed interest rate for tax purposes is set at 10 percent.

The Deficit Reduction Act will change this treatment so that the "safe harbor" rate is set at 110 percent of the T-bill rate at the time of the sale. If the interest rate is set below that level, the seller will be taxed as receiving an interest rate equivalent to 120 percent of the T-bill rate.

This change, Mr. Speaker, was designed to help cut the abuse of owner financing rates in large scale transactions. And it will succeed in doing that. But it will also adversely affect the small seller, the seller who is providing financing to the purchaser of his or her home, farm, or land. And this new policy of requiring the seller to charge a market or above market rate will, for all practical purposes, bring seller financing to an end—at a time where this method of financing is becoming an increasingly important factor in the sale of homes, farms, and small businesses.

I appeal to my colleagues to join me in working to repeal this section of the Deficit Reduction Act. The loss of the large number of small transactions the enactment of the new rates will cause, will have a tremendous negative impact on the economy. In the next session of Congress we can work for a solution to the abuse of the current rates. But now, we need to encourage economic recovery, for my district in New Mexico and for all of the United States.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.●

MORE AMERICANS DIE IN COWARDLY TERRORIST ATTACKS

HON. C. W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, American officials are sifting through the rubble of another American Embassy that has been the target of a cowardly terrorist attack.

It's too early to know how many Americans have died in this attack, but whatever the toll, it must once and for all be the impetus for our Nation to undertake an international effort to combat and punish terrorists. Last year, 668 people were killed and 1,288 wounded in almost 900 international terrorist incidents, half of which were aimed at American citizens or property.

Legislation I introduced this year urges the President to seek an international convention on terrorism at which participating nations could share intelligence about terrorist organizations and discuss counterterrorism strategy. More importantly, this convention would draft an international agreement to strengthen international law to provide for severe punishment of terrorists and their accomplices and establish clear procedures for extradition of terrorists.

Until the nations of the world adopt and implement this type of international agreement, acts of violence, death and destruction such as we witness today will continue because terrorists roaming the world believe they are immune from prosecution and extradition.●

TRIBUTE TO DAVID A. HANSEN—CHIEF OF POLICE IN DALY CITY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the American people have much cause to be grateful for the service that our police officers perform in upholding this Nation's laws, and Congress, which is the source of many of these laws, is a fitting place to pay tribute to a man who has served his community for many years as a police officer.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor David Hansen, who for the past 10 years has served as the chief of police for Daly City. Chief Hansen has been a resident of Daly City for 45 years, and he entered the Daly City Police Force in 1949, having previously served with the Marine Corps in the Pacific and China during World War II. In 1950, his new career with the police force was interrupted by the Korean war. He fought with the 1st Marine Regiment during the Inchon landing and the battle for Seoul. For his actions, he received the Purple Heart and the Presidential Citation among other decorations.

David's example of leadership and emphasis on training have been two major facets of his career. In 1964 he attended the FBI National Academy and he has subsequently sent many of his men to train there. For several years he has been a police lecturer and he has also written five books and contributed to various journals. In addition to these achievements, David has found time to earn a bachelor's degree in political science and a master's in public administration. He has also been an instructor in law enforcement at the College of San Mateo and Golden Gate University.

Under the leadership of Chief Hansen, the Daly City Police Department has taken a number of steps to improve its activities. He has contributed to the professionalism of the force, improved the law enforcement procedures in the department, and strengthened the relationship of the police with the community. The department will miss his leadership, but his retirement is well earned.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to pay tribute to Chief David Hansen on the occasion of his retirement. I wish also to acknowledge the support that he has received from his wife of 37 years, Rosemarie, and their four children. I extend my warmest congratulations and best wishes to David and his family on his retirement.●

THE PLIGHT OF DR. IOSEF BEGUN

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, As a participant in the 1984 Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jews, I would like to take this opportunity to call my colleagues attention to the plight of Dr. Iosef Begun.

Although Dr. Begun has spent most of the last 8 years in Soviet jails, the only "crimes" of which he is guilty are wanting to immigrate to Israel and struggling to preserve the Jewish culture in the Soviet Union. Since 1971 when Dr. Begun first applied for an exit visa to leave the Soviet Union, he has been consistently persecuted by the Soviet Government.

Dr. Begun has made repeated attempts to obtain an exit visa but all of his requests have been rejected by the Soviet Government. In addition, he has been arrested and convicted several times on charges such as "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." In June of this year, he was sentenced to spend 6 months in solitary confinement for violating camp regulations and not completing his work quota. These actions taken by the Soviet Government against Dr. Begun represent a callous disregard for basic human rights and a direct violation of the letter and the spirit of the Helsinki Accords.

We in Congress cannot ignore the treatment of thousands of Soviet Jews, like Iosef Begun, who are persecuted for their beliefs and their desire to emigrate. We must not cease in our efforts until every single Soviet Jew who wants to leave Russia is permitted to do so.●

TRAGEDY IN LEBANON

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I condemn the cowardly terrorist bombing today of the American Embassy in East Beirut, and extend my sincere condolences to the families and friends of those who lost their lives.

This attack, like the bombing of the American Embassy in West Beirut 17 months ago and the bombing of our Marine headquarters in Lebanon just 11 months ago, was, to be sure, an attack on the U.S. Government itself. It also was an attack against every democratic nation in the world.

I call upon the President to use all the resources at his command to find out who perpetrated this senseless act of brutality and to report to the Congress so we can formulate an appropriate response as quickly as possible.

It is clear that those responsible for this ruthless act seek to undermine our support for Israel, seek to undermine the stability of the Lebanese government, and seek to undermine those committed to peace in the Middle East.

Let the terrorists know that all Americans, regardless of political affiliation, stand united in our determination to continue our efforts to bring peace to the Middle East.

We must never allow acts of terrorism to dictate American foreign policy. If we do, the free world will be fair game for those who seek to destroy what we so strongly believe in.●

CONSTITUTION WEEK

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this body a noteworthy anniversary; 197 years ago, the framers to this Nation's Constitution finished work on that venerable document and forwarded it to the States for ratification. I join with my colleagues in commemoration of this event during this, U.S. Constitution Week.

The praises awarded our Constitution are many; and well deserved. As the World's oldest written Constitution still in effect; its longevity is remarkable. As noted by President Franklin Roosevelt:

> Our Constitution is so simple and practical that it is possible always to meet extraordinary needs by changes in emphasis and arrangement without loss of essential form. That is why our constitutional system has proved itself the most superbly enduring political mechanism the modern world has produced.

The flexibility of the document has allowed this Nation's political structure to evolve smoothly and has thus enabled its people to become the greatest Nation on Earth.

I believe noting the anniversary of the formation of our Constitution will help serve as a reminder to all of us just what our true purpose for being here is. Supreme Court Justice David Davis summarized it best when he said:

> The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances.●

CONGRESSIONAL MIA COMMEMORATIVE MEDALS

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, on September 23, 1984, I will have the honor of presenting the Congressional MIA Commemorative Medals to the families of the five American servicemen still missing or unaccounted for in Southeast Asia who live in Pennsylvania's Eighth Congressional District.

The ceremony will be held, quite fittingly, at Washington Crossing Historic Park where we remember the courage and patriotism of another group of Americans over 200 years ago.

The five brave men we will honor are most deserving of this special recognition by the Congress. Furthermore, the loyalty, hope, love, and courage of their families who will receive the medals this Sunday provide inspiration to us all.

Mr. Speaker, on June 16, 1984, I was present at the dedication of the Bucks County Vietnam War Memorial in Doylestown, PA. This memorial records the names of the 136 Americans from Bucks County who have not returned from Vietnam. At that time, we said that the memorial would serve not only as a reminder but also as an expression of the love, honor, and commitment we in Bucks County accord to our Vietnam veterans, both living and dead, and to their families.

We continue this commitment by presenting the MIA Commemorative Medals this Sunday because they will not only recognize the heroism and sacrifice of those missing in action, but also serve as an important reaffirmation of this Nation's dedication to a full accounting for all Americans missing or unaccounted for in Southeast Asia.

It is with great honor that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the names of the five servicemen who will be honored and whose families will receive the Congressional MIA Commemorative Medals this Sunday:

MART NIKLUS, AN ESTONIAN DISSIDENT

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today on the front steps of the Capitol, I participated in a very emotional and, I am afraid to say, all too common scene. It was a ceremony designed to draw attention to yet another highly gifted individual who the Soviets have decided to condemn and imprison for "anti-Soviet propaganda and agitation."

Mart Niklus is an ornithologist but has never been permitted to work or to publish in his profession as a result of his continued opposition to Soviet repression.

It is easy to take American freedoms for granted—to enjoy the first amendment rights with little thought. However, I ask you please to reflect on their importance and to honor a man who has been harassed, imprisoned, and tortured because he chose to exercise these rights in Soviet-occupied Estonia.

In 1958, Mart Niklus was imprisoned for sending 15 photographs depicting conditions in Soviet-occupied Estonia to a Western journalist. He has been persecuted ever since. Today, dangerously ill from untreated radiculitis, Mart Niklus is in solitary confinement in the infamous Chistopol Prison.

As it has been documented by my Soviet mail investigation, letters have not been allowed through to this wonderful man whose only crime has been to speak the truth from his heart.

Though I was happy to see on the Capitol steps an effort made at bringing attention to this tragedy, I hope that such events do not become routine because of any lack of diligence on the part of the U.S. Congress.●

VETERANS CONCERNED OVER BEING IGNORED

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to alert my fellow colleagues about a matter very important to me and millions of other Americans. It regards a U.S. veterans group in Rhode Island and its efforts to bring political attention to the problems faced by today's war veterans.

I recently had the pleasure of being contacted by Arthur J. Belair, an instrumental leader with the United Veterans Council of Woonsocket, RI.

During our correspondence, Mr. Belair stressed his frustration that American veterans are widely being ignored by many lawmakers and political candidates.

Mr. Belair's criticism, which is shared by the many veterans his organization proudly represents, centers around the fact that elected officials often render token responses and assurances to veteran concerns and that little is done to actually solve problems.

The United Veterans Council of Woonsocket recently drafted and circulated a petition opposing budget cuts for veteran programs. Mr. Speaker, the 1,875 men and women veterans who signed this petition deserve more than polite responses. Let us never forget that because of their sacrifices, we live in freedom.

I am pleased to see the United Veterans Council of Woonsocket actively involved in alerting our lawmakers that the American veteran shall not be ignored. I agree with Mr. Belair that the veteran must always know that his service to our Nation is not taken for granted. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have this organization of loyal veterans strongly based in my district.●

A BRAVE COACH, A BRAVE PLAYER

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

●Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow night in Columbia, KY, in my home district, a high school football player will suit up for his team's game. Nothing special, you say, except for one important difference. It was just 3 weeks ago that that player nearly died, but was saved by the heroic effort of one man, his coach.

On August 28, player Mike Antle was in the whirlpool in his team's locker room. Suddenly, the motor shorted out and Mike was shocked. But fortunately, his coach, Jim Moss, was entering the room, saw what happened and unplugged the whirlpool.

He then dragged Mike out of the water and immediately began administering CPR and other first aid. Coach Moss was able to revive Mike's vital organs and keep him stable until the ambulance arrived.

Friday evening, when Adair County High School takes to the field, Coach Moss will be there leading the charge. And Mike Antle will be there, too, thanks to his coach's quick work and courage.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join with me in congratulating Coach Jim Moss for his exemplary action in saving this boy's life. Let us also commend young Mike Antle for his courage in recovering from this accident. Both of these men set the finest examples of courage and determination that we can all follow.●

TRIBUTE TO JEAN FLANAGAN

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I would like to honor today Jean Flanagan who won a gold medal in the women's eight-oar rowing event at the 1984 International Olympics in Los Angeles.

Jean Flanagan is being honored today at a parade in Killingworth, CT, in Connecticut's Third District, where she is a lifelong resident. She attended Killingworth Elementary School, and later Morgan High School where she was on the Morgan High School basketball and swimming teams.

Jean discovered the sport of rowing when she began her undergraduate studies at the Florida Institute of Technology [FIT] in 1976. She rowed for FIT's rowing team and in 1980 attended the world championships in Lucerne, Switzerland. It was at the world championships that she received international recognition in rowing by winning a silver medal in the women's pair crew. In 1980 she also rowed with Princeton University's distinguished rowing team.

I know that all my colleagues share my pride in Jean's tremendous achievement. She has brought international recognition to her country and has captured the hearts of the people of Killingworth and the State of Connecticut. I would like to offer my warmest congratulations to Jean and wish her the best of luck for her continued success.●

PORTRAITS OF SCHOOLS THAT WORK

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, Instructor magazine has a program which honors exemplary schools. It is entitled "A+ Schools—Portraits of Schools That Work." I am proud to announce that a school in my district, Burton Elementary School in Huntington Woods, MI, was recently honored with this award.

Burton and the Berkley School District, of which it is a part, are the only such school district and elementary school in the State of Michigan to receive this recognition, and one of only a handful in the entire Nation to be so honored; 472 children attend kindergarten through fifth grade at Burton. There is a strong sense of parent and community involvement at Burton. The school district offers 2 days a week of vocal music at the primary level and orchestra and band are available daily at the middle school level. This is due, in part, to the fact that 11 members of the Detroit Symphony are residents of the Huntington Woods community, and they give generously of their time and talent to expose the children to musical experiences. Almost 30 percent of the elementary school students choose to continue their musical education when they enter the middle school system.

Volunteers have used their life experiences to foster other programs. The Ethnic Festival Week, an enrichment activity, was planned entirely by parents, and teachers are free to choose any of the curriculum materials developed by the parents for classroom use. Activities have included performances by Caribbean dance troupes, learning Italian vocabulary words and singing Portuguese songs.

Teachers help spur enthusiasm for learning. They embrace a wide variety of teaching styles with a premium on innovation. The fact that the Burton student's achievement scores rate in the top 25th percentile statewide bear out the fact that all this hard work by teachers is working.

Mr. Speaker, this award manifests the impact of well-trained and caring personnel, with support and encouragement from parents and the community. I hope that you will join me, Mr. Speaker, in congratulating Burton Elementary School, the city of Huntington Woods and the Berkley School District on a job well done.●

CONGRATULATING THE MORTON COLLEGE "FAMILY" ON THEIR 60TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, September 23, Morton College, located in Illinois' Fifth Congressional District, which I am privileged to represent, will be holding its annual Morton Fest celebration for the community. This year's celebration will mark Morton College 60th anniversary.

Morton College of Cicero, IL, has, since its founding in 1924, been a leader in the educational effort of Illinois. It has truly been a pioneer among community colleges, with its being the second oldest junior college in the State.

Morton College's student enrollment has grown from a beginning class of 76 to a student body of more than 4,000, and has graduated more than 11,500 people over the years.

The Morton College board of trustees administered the college from its founding until 1967, when the district voted to give the college autonomy under its own board, separate from the Morton High School District No. 201. The newly independent school quickly decided to separate physically as well as legally, and began plans for a new campus in Cicero. Ground was broken for the new campus in 1973, and the school began to accept students at the new location in the fall of 1975. The new facilities, with its five buildings, replaced 12 widely spread temporary facilities in churches, schools, and rented buildings.

I, along with my fellow colleagues, extend congratulations to the faculty, staff, and students of Morton College upon the 60th anniversary of the founding of their college. Their contributions to the educational betterment of our community members is to be commended and I wish them many more years of service to the community.●

ELIAS KARMON, COMMUNITY LEADER, CELEBRATES HIS 75TH BIRTHDAY

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to pay tribute to one of America's most outstanding community leaders, Elias Karmon, on the occasion of his 75th birthday.

Mr. Karmon has worked tirelessly for decades as a businessman, a philanthropist, and a community activist. But in each of these capacities he has held one important goal dear to his heart: making the Bronx a better place to work and live. Without question, this unselfish spirit with a deep compassion for his fellow citizens has worked small miracles for the Bronx.

Mr. Karmon's list of achievements belies an energy and enthusiasm that most of us would find difficult to match. He has served as the president of the Bronx Chamber of Commerce and as chairman of the Advisory Committee of the Bronx Venture Corp., a nonprofit local development corporation. In addition, Mr. Karmon has held positions of leadership in numerous business, civic, health, service, and humanitarian organizations, including the Bronx Rotary Club, the Bronx Council of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine, the American Jewish Congress, the Bronx Boys' Club, and Community Services for the Blind.

He sits on the boards of the Ponce de Leon Federal Savings & Loan Association, the Bronx House, the YMCA, the Fordham Road Area Development Corp., Regional Aid for Interim Needs [RAIN], the South Bronx Mental Health Council, the Pelham Parkway Mall Local Development Corp., the Bronx Dance Theatre, the Bronx Overall Economic Development Corp., and the Pelham Parkway Jewish Center.

Mr. Karmon has also distinguished himself through his work on behalf of the new Lincoln Medical Center, where the Lincoln Hospital Community Board and the administrative staff named the board conference room after him to show their appreciation. And the New York Urban League recently cited Mr. Karmon for more than 35 years of dedicated service and leadership on behalf of his fellow citizens.

Throughout the years, Mr. Karmon has received awards so numerous that to list them all would be prohibitive. In 1979 he received the coveted Jefferson Award for Public Service in a live television ceremony. Mr. Karmon's professional life is also reflective of his commitment to the highest ideals. Active in real estate, Mr. Karmon still works out of the same office on Prospect Avenue in the South Bronx where he has worked since 1940.

Mr. Speaker, Elias Karmon deserves the highest accolades for his impressive accomplishments, which have truly improved the quality of life for those who live and work in the Bronx. We can all learn a lesson from his unswerving devotion to his community and from the enthusiasm which he demonstrates and cultivates in others. It is apparent that the Bronx will continue to benefit from Elias Karmon's energy and enthusiasm for years to come. Happy Birthday, Mr. Karmon, and many happy returns.●

A TRIBUTE TO LESLIE E. BAINES

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to recognize Leslie E. Baines of Summit, NJ, who will, in October, take over as president of the National Association of Bank Women [NABW], one of the most prestigious women's organization in the financial services industry.

Given Mrs. Baines' accomplishments in the world of banking are numerous this is no surprise. As vice president and division executive of Chase Manhattan Bank in New York, she is responsible for the marketing, sales, new product development and national expansions of the Domestic Private Banking Group. Just this past year, she was vice president for the 30,000 member NAWB this past year after serving as treasurer for 3 years. Additionally, Mrs. Baines has been active in NABW's educational foundation since 1977.

Her business affiliations profit greatly from Mrs. Baines' talent and devotion to the industry. She is a member of the Financial Women's Association of New York, the Bank Marketing Association, the New York Society of Security Analysts, and the Financial Analysts Society.

Mrs. Baines also manages to find time to chair the Bankers and Lawyers Advisory Committee on the New York Philharmonic, and she sits on the board of the directors of Consortium for Cable.

A leader in her field, a leader in her affiliations, Leslie expels enthusiasm and confidence in all her endeavors. I know I speak for many when I congratulate Leslie on her appointment as president of the NAWB. The experience and expertise she brings to this post will, no doubt, bring continued growth and success to the organization.●

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INCORPORATION OF THE CITY OF DES PERES, MO

HON. ROBERT A. YOUNG

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, the 23d of September 1984, the city of Des Peres in St. Louis County, MO, will celebrate the 50th anniversary of its incorporation.

The French name of Des Peres originated when a group of Jesuit missionaries temporarily settled near the mouth of River Des Peres in 1701. When the Jesuits left the area, the name of Des Peres remained with the river and the area. Des Peres translated is "of the Fathers." Des Peres appears to be a new suburban residential community. However, in 1834 the German immigrants who first settled the area were continuing to build their community. Farming and flower growing were the leading industries in 1834. The flower growers remain a leading industry. The farms have been replaced by attractive subdivisions answering to the needs of the area today.

During the 1850's the Midwest was experiencing rapid growth. The Civil War had ended leaving many homeless children. The cornerstone was laid March 15, 1868, in Des Peres for the first orphan home west of the Mississippi River. The orphanage operated from 1868 until 1966 when the need for such a facility diminished. It is fondly remembered by many of the residents today whose ancestors found love and stability in the orphanage. In 1973 the city purchased the orphanage property which now houses the city government. The grounds are preserved as a city park.

The city of Des Peres is a progressive city whose residents enjoy the modern community of today along with a respect for the heritage left to them by the Jesuit Fathers and the German immigrants who first settled in the area. The spirit remains one of cooperation and neighborly. The people of Des Peres have a right to be justly proud of their community.●

THE 100TH BIRTHDAY FOR CHURCH OF THE HOLY APOSTLES IN ROCHESTER, NY

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay special tribute to the Holy Apostles Church in Rochester, NY, as it celebrates its 100th birthday this year.

Holy Apostles Church was established May 1, 1884, and was named for the Apostles since it was Rochester's 12th Catholic parish. Over the past 100 years, Holy Apostles Church has grown with northwest Rochester and has contributed significantly to the settlement and growth of the area. Much of the area's urban development is directly attributed to the church, since the first pastor, Father Murphy, purchased a large tract of land, subdivided it into lots and built streets and sanitary facilities.

The Holy Apostles School has also been a major influence on the community, and has grown in size from 113 students in 1885 to over 700 students today. The school is proud to count among its graduates many of Rochester's outstanding citizens and public servants.

The present church building is itself a landmark and is made of Medina stone which was transported on mule-drawn boats over the old Erie Canal. Dedicated in 1897, it is one of the finest examples of Norman Catholic architecture in western New York.

In 100 years, Holy Apostles has been served by seven pastors. J. Emmett Murphy concluded the longest pastorate in parish history, over 22 years, when he retired in 1983 and was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Lawrence A. Gross.

I am extremely proud to have this active, energetic church community as part of my district and urge all of my colleagues to join me in wishing Holy Apostles Church a "Happy Birthday" and another 100 years of success.●

SPARKY VINDICATED

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, Sparky has been vindicated; 8 years after having the 1976 Cincinnati Reds team win the World Series, Sparky Anderson can hold his head high and say it wasn't a fluke. You see, the Detroit Tigers have come of age. And you can thank Sparky and first-year Tiger owner, Tom Monaghan, for that.

After a blistering 35–5 start, a record unmatched in baseball history, the Tigers seldom had to look over their shoulder to see the Toronto Blue Jays, let alone the 1983 world champion Orioles.

Growing up in Findlay, OH, meant growing up with the Tigers. Both Cleveland and Cincinnati were too far away for radio or television coverage, so my home team has been the Tigers for as long as I can remember. This prompted me to become the first Member of Congress to join the Mayo Smith Society, the Detroit Tiger fan club which was started here in Washington. Now, with the spread of Tiger fever, the Mayo Smith Society has chapters throughout the entire country. If you have to ask who Mayo Smith is, you can't be a member.

I look forward to Sparky leading the Tigers to continued success in the playoffs and to a World Series to end all World Series when they take on the Cubbies in October.●

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 613

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 20, 1984

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, one of our colleagues, Hon. WILLIAM D. FORD, has introduced House Joint Resolution 613 designating 1985 as the "Year of the Teacher." I cannot think of a better profession to commemorate with a year of appreciation.

Everyone of us here today owes something to a teacher. Without the encouragement and patience of those teachers who gave us so much, many of us would not have been able to attain the goals we have set for ourselves. Designating 1985 as the "Year of the Teacher," which would be accompanied by appropriate ceremonies and other activities, is one small way to express the Nation's gratitude to its teachers and to elevate them in the public's esteem.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to recognize a special teacher in Maryland's First District which I am proud to represent, Mr. Carvel LaCurts. Mr. LaCurts is a mathematics instructor at Pocomoke High School, in Pocomoke, MD. He was named the Maryland Mathematics Teacher of the Year for 1982–83 by the Maryland Mathematics Teachers Association and was appointed by Maryland State Superintendent David Hornbeck to the Maryland Commission on Secondary Education's Instruction/Instructional Support Services Task Force.

Recently, a great honor has been bestowed on Mr. LaCurts. He has been selected as one of the State's two finalists for the Presidential Award for Excellence in Teaching Science and Mathematics. This program was established by the National Science Foundation to recognize outstanding secondary school teachers of science and mathematics who serve as models for their colleagues and to provide status and rewards for demonstrated professionalism.

We in Maryland's First District are proud of Carvel LaCurts and feel he has earned this award. To the teachers of this great country I say thank you for all your hard work and dedication to our Nation's youth.●

SENATE—Friday, September 21, 1984

(Legislative day of Monday, September 17, 1984)

The Senate met at 10:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Omniscient God, Who knows all things, all of us who labor in this place need Your presence, Your love and peace. You know what is in the heart of each of us in these stressful days. You know those who are troubled—frustrated—angry—anxious. You know the fearful heart, the lonely heart, the broken heart. You know those who feel forsaken or rejected or guilty. You know those who are arrogant, impatient, or resentful.

Where there is alienation or estrangement give reconciliation and healing. In Your gracious, forbearing love, touch each life, each family, each person who serves here from the greatest to the least, the most powerful to the totally powerless. Dear God infuse this place with Your mighty love. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I remind Senators that this morning, after the special orders, there will be morning business until 11:30 a.m. in which Senators may speak. Since that will consume 1 full hour, that together with the opening formalities, the mandatory quorum under rule XXII will begin at 11:30 a.m. and as soon as a quorum is established the Senate will proceed to vote on cloture to limit debate on Senate Resolution 66.

Mr. President, if cloture is invoked, then the Senate will continue to debate and attempt to dispose of Senate Resolution 66. In the event cloture is not invoked, it is highly likely that a second cloture motion will be filed and after that perhaps the leadership would ask the Senate to go to other matters.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Did the Senator say highly likely that a cloture motion will be filed or not highly likely?

Mr. BAKER. I said if we do not invoke cloture this time it is highly likely it would be filed.

Mr. LONG. I hope that the distinguished majority leader would judge by how many votes he gets today whether he is going to file another one.

Mr. BAKER. I count Friday votes one way and Tuesday votes another way. So I will have to weigh the average on the basis of the calendar in order to make a judgment in that respect.

Mr. President, if cloture is not invoked, however, I anticipate that the leadership on this side will ask the Senate now to turn to consideration of some matters that should be dealt with, such as the Treasury-Postal conference report and perhaps the Labor-HHS appropriations bill.

Mr. President, I do not believe I have anything else.

The Senate will be in session, of course, throughout this day, and I do not anticipate this will be a late day, but it will be a full working day. We will not be in session tomorrow. We will be in session all next week and once again Senators should be on notice that next week and next weekend may be difficult times in terms of the schedule.

Mr. President, that is all I have to announce, and I offer my time to the minority leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOLDWATER). The minority leader is recognized.

TENTATIVE ACCORD REACHED BETWEEN MINEWORKERS AND COAL OPERATORS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, at approximately 4:40 a.m. this morning, September 21, the United Mineworkers of America and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association reached a tentative accord on a new contract. The agreement will be distributed throughout the UMWA districts for examination by union members, followed by voting on the question of ratifying the agreement.

Similarly, the BCOA will begin a process of informing its member coal companies as to the contents of the agreement.

The current contract expires on September 30. I am gratified that a tentative accord has been reached in advance of the expiration of the contract, and I await the results of the voting on the draft agreement. It is very important to the 45,000 miners in West Virginia and to my State's economy.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I believe time has expired. If not, I yield it back.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might suggest the absence of a quorum without it being charged against the time allocated to the first special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

WHY WISCONSIN STANDS OUT AS A GREAT STATE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, every one of us in this body is proud of the particular State we represent. When our State does well, we like to tell the world about it—or at least our fellow Senators. Our States engage in a kind of friendly competition. And anyone who has ever competed in sports or in business or academic pursuits or even bridge or poker knows that nothing improves performance like competition.

So why should we not compete in the kind of performances that really count? Why should we not vie for excellence in education? Why not compete in the fight to hold down crime and poverty? This competition may not be as exciting or as dramatic as the epic struggles between our football teams—the University of Wisconsin versus Michigan or Indiana or Illinois.

31-059 O-87-15 (Pt. 19)

But on the other hand can anyone seriously argue that the competition over which State excels in such things as voter turn out, educational attainment, and the suppression of violent crime is a great deal more significant? Unfortunately, few people pay much attention to this far more significant competition or even have any awareness of how different the States are in these critical respects.

The National Journal has done something about this. They recently compiled statistics for each of the 50 States. I have not had a chance to see results for all of the States, but here is one Senator who cannot wait to tell my colleagues about our State. We have a few serious slips here and there. But overall, according to this Senator's value judgment, Wisconsin is doing great.

Of 15 categories, Wisconsin rates in the top quartile, that is the top 12 of the 50 States, in 10 categories. We rate just about in the middle in two categories. We rate in the bottom quartile in three areas. Now consider where our State rates high and where it rates low, and it tells you why, in general, this Senator is so proud and happy to be a U.S. Senator from Wisconsin.

In two categories Wisconsin rates at the top—No. 1. We are No. 1 in the college board scores of our high school students. That is, we are first of all the 50 States in the kind of job our grade and high schools are doing.

The National Journal also reports that Wisconsin is No. 1 in the country in voter turnout. Our people take their responsibilities as citizens seriously. They participate in elections more fully than citizens in any other State in the Nation. Wisconsin, unfortunately, is very near the top in alcohol consumption. Of the 50 States, we rank fifth. That is sad. It is also a reflection of the fact that we produce beer that has made Milwaukee famous. Although we have only 2 percent of the population, our citizens consume 20 percent of all the brandy consumed in the country. A shot of brandy with a beer chaser is an unfortunate Wisconsin affliction.

And our State makes welfare payments that are the seventh highest in the country. This is not a statistic that makes our taxpayers happy. On the other hand, it does show a concern, a compassion, a generosity for which Wisconsin citizens can be proud. Obviously Wisconsin takes better care than most States of those who cannot take care of themselves.

Our State is eighth in three categories. It is eighth in the level of taxes. That is explained in very large part by the two statistics I have already mentioned: The excellence of our education system that turns out students who have earned the highest college board scores of students from any State, and the generosity of our welfare system.

Wisconsin is also eighth highest in unemployment compensation, an indication of our concern for those who have lost their jobs, seek another job but cannot find it, and a further explanation of our relatively high taxes. Our State also has the eighth highest teacher salaries. That helps explain our fine record on college board scores and the painful level of our State's taxes.

Wisconsin is 10th of the 50 States in the use of library books, another tribute to our educational system and to the generosity of our taxpayers. This is also an indication of the knowledge and understanding of Wisconsin citizens as a literate people.

Hourly wages in Wisconsin are the 11th highest of any of the 50 States. Our strong clean union movement should take much of the credit for that figure. And of course, our strong educational system means that employers are likely to get a competent and intelligent day's work for a full day's pay, even though employers do pay more in Wisconsin. Our State is 12th in the amount it spends per public school pupil. Again that figure helps explain both our high taxes and our superlative educational results.

In two categories Wisconsin ranks roughly in the middle of the 50 States. Our level of unemployment has been 22d of the 50 States. Our per capita income is 28th. We are not a rich State. Hourly wages are high, but we have relatively few wealthy people, and our farmers and small businessmen have to struggle more than in most States to make ends meet.

In three categories, our State is near the bottom. When you consider the categories, you can see that low rating is a good thing. Our State is 43d in violent crime. That means only 7 of the 50 States have a better record. Considering the fact that our State has a large urban population, that rating is especially encouraging. The National Journal found that Wisconsin ranks 46th in stress. That means the living is easier in Wisconsin with less high pressure than in all except 4 others of the 50 States. And finally, of the 50 States Wisconsin ranks 48th in the proportion of its people who live in poverty. Considering the fact that our per capita income is less than average and that our unemployment is about average, that statistic should give Wisconsin citizens special pride.

Part of the explanation for our fine showing in holding down poverty lies in our generous welfare system and our strong union movement winning high wages. But most of the credit in the judgment of this Senator goes to our very strong vocational and technical education system that enrolls Wisconsin citizens of all ages and has done an extraordinary job of lifting the level of skills for Wisconsin citizens. Only Wyoming and Connecticut do better in this regard, and both those States have much higher per capita income and much lower unemployment.

Mr. President, I challenge Senators from other States to join this friendly, but serious competition and to show that they have anything like the overall record Wisconsin has as a place to live, to work, to learn, and to care for others.

I ask unanimous consent that an article in the Capital Times of Madison, by Matt Pommer entitled "Statistically, Wisconsin, a Mixed Bag" be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATISTICALLY, WISCONSIN A MIXED BAG

(By Matt Pommer)

Wisconsin folks drink quite a bit—but we read a lot, too, and we don't often murder each other.

Our kids appear to be among the smartest in the nation, our teachers among the best paid. Poverty is low and taxes are high.

That, in a nutshell, is a kind of paint-by-number portrait of America's Dairyland, drawn up by the decimal crunchers who chew up statistics day in and day out and spit out national rankings.

There's more to Wisconsin, of course:

Violent crime is low, environment is a priority, and "stress" is among the lowest in the nation, according to the ranking folks, who never seem to run out of things to measure and dissect and weigh and balance.

Grinding out statistics that pit state against state has grown so popular—and gained such respect among bureaucrats, business groups and politicians—that The National Journal, a highly regarded Washington weekly, recently called the state-ranking game "a new national pastime."

Throwing itself whole-hog into the numbers game, The National Journal went about compiling various state rankings for all 50 states. Here's the magazine's snapshot of Wisconsin:

We came up fifth in consumption of alcohol per person, but also 10th highest in the use of library books.

We rank tops in College Board test scores and boast the highest percentage of voter turnout in the country. Teacher salaries are eighth highest in the nation, and per pupil spending ranks 12th from the top.

Per capita income is 28th; the unemployment rate has been 22nd; the average hourly wage is 11th; and unemployment compensation is rated 8th highest of the 50 states.

Welfare payments are 7th highest in the country—but a mere 9.5 percent of our people live in poverty. Only Connecticut at 8.1 and Nevada at 7.8 percent are lower.

A "stress index" placed Wisconsin 46th, meaning the state is one of the easiest places to live in the country.

That might be attributed in part to the level of violent crime. Wisconsin ranks 43rd in per capita violent crime. Last year, there were 2.7 murders per 100,000 population; the national average was 9.1 per 100,000 persons.

A lot of the stress we do suffer here in God's Country can be blamed on our seemingly insatiable state and local governments. Wisconsin ranks 8th in the country in combined state and local taxes.

That figure gives ammunition to special interest groups trying to leverage "business climate" ratings into new tax breaks for industry. Yet not everyone in business is playing the game.

Pewaukee businessman Harry Quadracci, for one, recently denounced all the business climate talk as nonsense. Quadracci, whose firm grew from 13 workers in 1971 to 1,100 last year, dubbed as nonsense a recent Alexander Grant Co. study that tagged Wisconsin's business environment as the eight worst in the nation, and the initial Inc. Magazine rating, which listed the state as the third worst for small business.

"The fallacy of this kind of approach should be obvious," Quadracci said, adding that the ratings are "prepared solely on the basis of cost, without regard to value. No weight was given to the quality of the work force, schools, government, or lifestyle.

"But we don't run our business that way. We don't run our businesses solely on price, nor do we purchase goods and services on price alone. Our prices are not the lowest, nor the highest; rather they are calculated to reflect value. Why should a state be measured any differently?

"In Wisconsin, we get what we pay for. We get value."

WHERE WISCONSIN RANKS

1st—College board scores and voter turnout.
5th—Alcohol consumption.
7th—Welfare.
8th—Taxes, unemployment compensation, and teacher salaries.
10th—Use of library books.
11th—Hourly wage.
12th—Per pupil spending.
22nd—Unemployment.
28th—Per capita income.
43rd—Violent crime.
46th—Stress.
48th—Poverty.

THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION'S ENDORSEMENT OF THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION TREATY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the Reagan administration's recent endorsement of the Genocide Convention Treaty has generated a great deal of publicity.

I am a longtime supporter of the Convention; therefore, my office has been inundated with requests for information about the administration's position and about the treaty itself. In response to these inquiries, I would like to direct the attention of my colleagues and the American people to a pair of administration statements that were presented in conjunction with the formal endorsement announcement. The first item is the State Department's September 5 press release on the Genocide Convention, and the second is an excerpt from President Reagan's September 6 speech before the B'nai B'rith International Convention.

As the State Department points out, the failure of the United States to ratify the Genocide Convention has left us vulnerable to propaganda attacks from several among the more than 90 nations which have joined in this important pact. Inasmuch as the United States of America actually stands second to none in the arena of human rights protection, we should move swiftly to eliminate the excuse for this unwarranted criticism.

After subjecting the treaty to painstaking scrutiny, the Reagan administration has rightfully concluded that there is no justification for further delay of ratification. The treaty's moral rectitude is beyond question; moreover, ratification of the Genocide Convention would be, in the State Department's words, "in the Nation's best interest."

I think the President deserves great credit for this. I know it was difficult for him to come to this conclusion. I am positive he did it strictly based on the merits, because my staff and I have talked to the State Department and Justice Department for a matter of months and found that they have continuously, not just because of an election that is coming up, but continuously over a number of months favored the ratification of the convention and wanted it studied carefully. They did and they came out on the right side.

I urge my colleagues to make an emphatic statement in support of human rights by supporting the Convention.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the press release and the speech excerpt appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE DEPARTMENT'S STATEMENT ON THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

On August 22, the Administration completed an extensive review of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. As a result of that review and at the strong urging of the American Bar Association and other interested groups, the President concluded that it would be in the nation's best interest for the United States to ratify the Genocide Convention.

The commitment of our country to prevent and punish acts of genocide is indisputable. Yet our failure to ratify this treaty, which has now been pending before the Senate for thirty-five years and has been supported by Presidents Truman, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, and Carter, has opened the United States to unnecessary criticism in various international fora. We can refute such baseless criticism by ratifying the Convention, and more importantly we can utilize the Convention in our own efforts to expand freedom and fight human rights abuses around the globe.

In 1976, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported favorably on the Convention and recommended that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification subject to three understandings and one declaration. This approach exceeded the clarifications considered necessary by the Nixon Administration, but the President supports these understandings and declaration and we believe they will help to secure Senate advice and consent to ratification of the Convention.

We look forward to working with the Senate to resolve any issues that may arise in connection with its consideration of this treaty. Ratification of the Genocide Convention would reaffirm in this international legal context the fundamental and timeless American commitment to human rights.

As a result of an extensive review by the Administration of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and at the strong urging of the American Bar Association and other interested groups, the President has concluded that it would be in the nation's best interest for the United States to ratify the Genocide Convention.

The Genocide Convention defines the act of genocide, confirms that it is a crime under international law, obliges States which are Parties to enact legislation to make genocide a crime under national law, and specifies that genocide shall not be considered a political offense for the purpose of extradition. The Convention also provides that disputes between Parties relating to the Convention's interpretation, application or fulfillment shall be submitted to the International Court of Justice.

For the purpose of the Convention, genocide is defined as any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial, or religious group, as such: killing members of the group; causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; or forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

President Truman sent the Convention to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification in 1949, and it has remained pending in the Senate ever since. More recently, Presidents Nixon and Carter have endorsed the Convention. The Senate has not yet given its advice and consent to ratification of the treaty. More than 90 countries have already ratified or acceded to the Convention.

On several occasions, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has favorably reported out the Convention, most recently in 1976 when it recommended that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification subject to three understandings and one declaration. The President supports these understandings and declaration. Two of the understandings describe how the U.S. construes various elements of the definition of genocide; the third expresses the U.S. understanding that a State retains the right to bring to trial before its own tribunals any of its national for acts committed outside the United States. The declaration expresses that the United States Government will not deposit its instrument of ratification until after the U.S. has domestically enacted implenting legislation.

The Executive Branch stands ready to work with the Congress so that the United States may ratify the Genocide Convention. Before such ratification can take place, the Senate, by a two-thirds vote of Senators present, must give its advice and consent to ratification. In addition, implementing legislation must be enacted which would add to the criminal code a new crime called genocide and set forth criminal penalties for its commission. After these events have taken place, the United States would deposit its instrument of ratification with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

EXCERPT FROM SPEECH OF PRESIDENT REAGAN TO THE B'NAI B'RITH INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION

Anyone who has contemplated the horror inflicted on Jews during World War II, the deaths of millions in Cambodia or the travail of the Mesquito Indians in Nicaragua must understand that if free men and women remain silent in the face of oppression, we risk the destruction of entire peoples. I know that B'nai B'rith has been among the most concerned of the groups advocating American support for the Genocide Convention. With a cautious view, in part due to the human rights abuses performed by some nations that have already ratified the documents, our administration has conducted a long and exhaustive study of the Convention. And yesterday, as a result of that review, we announced that we will vigorously support, consistent with the United States Constitution, the ratification of the Genocide Convention. And I want you to know that we intend to use the Convention in our efforts to expand human freedom and fight human rights abuses around the world. Like you, I say in a forthright voice, "Never again!"

WHY WE SHOULD NOT COMMIT BILLIONS TO EXTEND NUCLEAR WAR TO SPACE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the White House is playing it quietly and cool for now, but it is reported that after the election they will put up a whale of a battle for something they call the Strategic Defense Initiative. Its critics call it Star Wars. Some taxpayers may call it a stickup.

The President proposes to spend about $2 billion in 1985 and $25 billion over the next 5 years simply to research the possibilities of defending against the Soviet Union's intercontinental ballistic missiles. The Congress, it appears, would approve about $1.5 billion for 1985.

How many billions would this program cost eventually? No one knows. How much will the research on the program cost? Again, no one knows.

Mr. President, how can any Member of the Senate buy a military research program for $1.5 billion down and $25 billion over the next 5 years when the military cannot even give us an outside estimate of how much we will eventually have to pay to get any possible benefit out of that research before we produce a single piece of hardware? For this kind of investment and research we at least should have a persuasive conviction that, when we get this new strategic defense initiative finally in place, it will work. Is it possible that this immensely costly defense against an ICBM attack from the Soviet Union will work? No, it is not.

What do the defense experts heading this new program tell us? What do they tell us it is designed to do? They tell us it is designed to shoot down the Soviet Union's incoming intercontinental ballistic missiles before they can strike targets in this country.

Why is this not possible? How can I be sure all the billions we spend on this program will not be wasted? Even the SDI experts from the Defense Department admit that these many billions will not work if the Soviets continue to build more and more offensive intercontinental ballistic missiles. Why is that? Because if the Russians initiate a strike they can choose their targets. They can exhaust the antimissile defenses. The system can only work—and get this—if the Russians agree in an arms control agreement to limit their offensive missiles. That is right. I am not kidding. Can you imagine the Russians standing still for this kind of agreement that would nullify their painstakingly constructed deterrent.

Will the Soviet leaders agree to abide by an arms control agreement that would make it impossible for them to retaliate in the event they should suffer a first strike? Mr. President, many Americans may still believe in Santa Claus. But not many believe that Santa Claus lives in Moscow instead of the North Pole and makes military decisions for the Soviet Union. Why in the world would the Soviets agree to nullify the deterrent that makes them a super power? The SDI experts tell us the Soviets would agree because they would win a quid pro quo agreement from the United States that we would reduce our ICBM's as they reduce theirs. We would also expect the Soviets to build their own antimissile system. So both super powers would be relieved of the haunting nightmare that the other power would launch a pre-emptive ICBM strike. Talk about a never-never land.

Now, Mr. President, what would be the full consequence of both super powers pouring this immense amount of resources into antimissile systems? We would have traded one kind of nuclear war stand-off—what we have now which is deterrence—for another an anti-intercontinental ballistic missile system. Would we have achieved safety for our country from a Soviet nuclear attack? Of course not. Neither the United States nor the Soviet Union would enjoy any more safety from low trajectory attack from such as cruise missiles or from the deployment of nuclear antidemolition devices by terrorists, or from low-flying plane attacks, or off-shore, in-close nuclear attacks from submarines.

Above all nothing in the Strategic Defense Initiative would prevent the nuclear technology from moving on within 4 or 5 years to develop new technologies to foil the antimissile defenses, not necessarily by saturation, but through the kind of invisibility that gives our new Stealth bomber such a decisive advantage, or through a variety of possible technological innovations. If we have learned nothing else over the centuries in warfare it is that military technology is dynamic. With each passing year it becomes more dynamic. It is something else. It is unpredictable. We do not know where the next military breakthrough will come.

We do know, however, that principles continue to apply in military doctrine. One is that the offense enjoys a continuing advantage over the defense. The side which uses offensive military weapons instead of relying on defensive weapons can choose the time, the place, as well as the quantitative and qualitative force. That principle applies as clearly for nuclear as for conventional weapons.

Does this mean that the answer to the Strategic Defense Initiatives or Star Wars billions is to spend billions on ever newer and more deadly offensive weapons? No indeed. The answer is to seek arms control agreement with the Soviet Union which the SDI experts say they also favor, but on a realistic basis, not by expecting them to agree to surrender their deterrent. They will not do that. We know they will not. But both super powers have everything to gain and billions to save by agreeing to a mutual comprehensive freeze on the testing, production, and deployment of all nuclear weapons. Let us get on with it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LAUTENBERG

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The Senator from New Jersey.

THE GENOCIDE TREATY

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, our colleague Senator PROXMIRE has been a lone voice, crying in the wilderness, urging ratification of the U.N. Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. Speaking, eloquently, day after day, he has made over 2,000 speeches on this matter here in the Senate. I congratulate him for his diligent attention to this important issue. This country should hang its head in shame among the family of nations for resistance to ratifying the Genocide Convention.

I have had many opportunities to study first hand the heart-rending evidence of the most far-reaching campaign of genocide in history, the despi-cable work of the Nazis before and during World War II. That one group of human beings can turn against another in an attempt to wipe them off the Earth is beyond comprehension, and yet it has happened, again and again.

Early in this century, the Turkish slaughter of the Armenian people was nothing short of genocide. What was originally called the Ukrainian famine of 1932-33 is now known as a broad and orchestrated campaign of starvation, physical abuse, and internment, and called genocide by many. Today Cambodia is reported to be the site of genocide killings.

The litany goes on. The victims are many, the voices of outrage too few. The ratification of an international treaty outlawing the practice of genocide seems a small enough protest against the enormity of the crime. Still, this is a government of laws, and we write the moral bases of our society into law.

It, is therefore, imperative, that after a 35-year delay, the Senate should give its advice and consent to the signing of the Genocide Treaty. In the closing days of the 98th Congress the Senate should write itself a place in history by following the recommendation of the Foreign Relations Committee to ratify the convention.

President Truman transmitted the Genocide Convention to the Senate for its advice and consent on June 16, 1949. Hard on the heels of the end of World War II and the revelation of the world of the Nazi extermination camps, the United Nations declared genocide a crime under international law. This was followed by the drafting of the Convention of Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

Let us not lose sight of the background. The world was shocked by the evidence of lengths to which man can go when driven by irrational forces. One reaction was the swift passage of measures to outlaw and punish such genocidal actions against a whole people. Another action, motivated at least in part by the revelation of the genocide of World War II, was the establishment of the State of Israel.

Israel has provided a safe harbor for the victims of the Holocaust. But even there peace has proved elusive. Jews, Israeli citizens now, continue to die solely because they are Jews. And Arabs in that region of the world are dying violently, too. All are victims of difficult and seemingly intractable political conflict.

Yesterday's New York Times contained a quote suggesting that Israel might be charged with genocide under the treaty. According to the Times, it was stated that:

> Israel is likely to be the first victim of this convention * * * They have killed a lot of Arabs. Who knows what a World Court would do?

The killing of any person is a tragic event. And political conflict which involves bloodshed is no less sad. But that is a long way from "the intentional destruction of any national, ethnic, racial, or religious group." The Israelis have a right to defend their country and themselves. But clearly such actions are not genocide. It is somehow obscene, and a preversion of the term, to intimate genocide in this case.

A charge of genocide is not an accusation to be made lightly. Our arsenal of outrage and abhorence, indeed our very language, is debased and trivialized when extreme charges are glibly made. One of the most serious charges that can be leveled against a people is that they have engaged in genocide. Mr. President, the history and context of the Genocide Convention remind us of the seriousness of the charge, and make it clear that the actions of Israel in its fight for survival cannot be considered genocide.

Genocide is the atrocities committed against the Armenian people in Turkey during the time of the First World War. Some 1.5 million people of Armenian ancestry were killed throughout the Ottoman Empire and more were driven from their homes during that time.

Genocide is the actions of the Soviet Government during the early 1930's which resulted in wholesale deaths and displacement of the Ukrainian people.

Genocide is the deportation of Jews from all over Europe to slave labor and death camps in Germany and Eastern Europe for the express purpose of wiping out the Jewish people.

Genocide is the intentional uprooting and killing of millions of the Cambodian people by the Khmer Rouge forces.

Genocide is not fighting in the Middle East, the sectarian battles in Northern Ireland, or similar tragedies which have marred human history. It is clearly an undertaking of a more treacherous magnitude.

Mr. President, no reasonable objection can be made to a treaty that labels genocide an international crime which must be prevented and punished. Inventions of false cases in which charges of genocide may be brought do nothing to advance the debate about this issue. And they serve to defame the memories of those who were genuine victims of genocide. The only real question is whether the United States will join over 90 of her sister nations in denouncing genocide.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Will the Senator yield, Mr. President?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I want to thank my good friend from New Jersey for his remarks. I not only appreciated his references to this Senator, but also that excellent speech he has delivered.

He pointed out that genocide was not only the heinous and vicious crime committed by the Nazis against the Jews in Germany and throughout Europe before and during World War II, but has been perpetrated against Armenians, Cambodians, and people in the Ukraine time and again. It goes way back to the Romans slaughtering the Carthaginians, not because these people were a threat but because they happened to belong to a particular racial, ethnic, or religious group.

As the Senator said, people were killed not because they committed a crime but because they were Jews or Armenians or Cambodians—good, decent people were killed simply because the government wanted to exterminate them.

As the Senator has pointed out, this is as vicious a crime, as heinous a crime, as anyone can imagine. It is a crime committed by government, almost overwhelmingly, not committed by individuals.

The only way we can get at this is through international law. There is no other way we can do it.

Mr. President, the speech of the Senator this morning was one of the best I have heard. I have heard many speeches on genocide. I thank him for making an excellent statement.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for his kind comments. I congratulate him for his hard work and firm stand on behalf of the Genocide Treaty.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 11:30 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader is recognized.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF SENATOR GOLDWATER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues the fact that tomorrow will be a very special day for the distinguished Senator from Arizona, the occupant of the chair, for I am told on good authority that it will be his 50th wedding anniversary. That seems hard to believe, considering the youth and vitality of the distinguished occupant of the chair.

The thought that comes to mind most readily is that Peggy should be congratulated. I have heard it said on good authority that the reason that the Goldwaters have stayed so happily married for so long is that every Saturday, at 10 o'clock in the morning, Peggy Goldwater makes a conscious decision on whether she is going to let him live with her one more week or not. So far, she has answered in the affirmative.

Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the distinguished Senator from Arizona, and Peggy Goldwater, for a momentous occasion, their 50th wedding anniversary tomorrow. I am sure every Member of the Senate joins me in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the majority leader for his kind remarks.

CHALLENGES AND OPPORTUNITIES IN UNITED STATES-JAPAN RELATIONS

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise to share with you and your interested colleagues a report recently submitted to the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Japan. The report, entitled "challenges and opportunities in United States-Japan relations," was prepared by the United States-Japan Advisory Commission. For those unfamiliar with it, the Commission is a small group of private citizens, appointed by the President and the Prime Minister and representing major sectors of society, to provide advance to our respective heads of state on the conduct of United States-Japan relations. David Packard, chairman of Hewlett-Packard, and Ambassador Ushiba, former State Minister for External Economic Affairs in Japan, have served as cochairman of the Commission.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on East Asia and Pacific Affairs of the Foreign Relations Committee, I am pleased to be able to share what I find to be some interested findings made by the Commission. The Commission found that the bond between the United States and Japan is strong and that "the two countries share a wide range of common interests and attitudes." It was felt that "no two countries possess the essential ingredients of a vital bilateral partnership—economic, political, and security ties—in greater degree than the United States and Japan."

While the report clearly emphasized the close relationship that Japan and the United States enjoy today and the possibilities for enhancing that relationship in the future to both countries' benefit, it also provides disconcerting and sobering examples of the number of relatively minor issues that have become politicized and are gradually eroding what Ambassador Mansfield has called "the most important bilateral relationship in the world, bar none."

The report points out that the difficulties our two nations face in our bilateral relationship today are by no means insurmountable. Indeed, in my opinion, the future for increased interaction between our two nations is great and will yield benefits to not only our respective nations, but will add a new dimension to the political and economic stability of our neighbors throughout the world. As the Commission report is quick to point out, however, both nations have improvements to make if our relationship is to continue to prosper and grow. Key to this growth is an understanding of each other's political processes and a willingness on both nations' parts to consider the long-term broader interests at stake and the grave damage to our world economic order if we let specific interests override what we know to be for the greater good of both nations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report entitled the "Significance of the Relationship" which I found particularly interesting. I hope my colleagues will take the time to read it and the report in its entirety, for indeed, the significance of our relationship with Japan should not be taken lightly.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE RELATIONSHIP

BETTER MANAGEMENT: THE KEY ISSUE

Fundamentally, the United States-Japan relationship is on the right course. Our countries share basically similar interests: the preservation of regional and global peace, the maintenance of open world trade and monetary systems, and access to raw-material and fuel supplies. Although our cultures differ vastly and we by no means share identical societal values, we both are dedicated to preserving democratic societies, promoting free enterprise, and respecting individual rights.

These interests are widely recognized in our countries, yet an unacceptable level of friction has become an unfortunate by-product of our relationship. The current, too often confrontational pattern of interaction between the two countries is eroding good will and mutual trust. We need to improve mechanisms for coordinating our own policies and dealing with each other. It is also imperative to increase popular understanding of the importance of the relationship. The United States and Japan will have failed in their leadership if they allow the fabric of their relationship to become damaged by preoccupation with short-term, narrowly focused controversies.

SOURCES OF FRICTION

Politicization

As the economic relationship between the two countries has grown, many issues in U.S.-Japan relations are injected into political debate before adequate effort is made to find solutions at the working level. Close relationships between particular politicians and special interests or interjurisdictional battles among bureaucracies can thwart compromise and elevate economic frictions into highly publicized political disputes. Fear of being criticized for being "soft" inhibits compromise at the bureaucratic levels.

Focus on Peripheral Rather Than Central Issues

There has been a tendency for a great deal of bureaucratic and political attention to be focused on questions that should be routinely resolved through administrative mechanisms. Debate on U.S.-Japan trade is filled with examples of longstanding petty issues, principally involving access for specific U.S. products in Japan, which become frequently cited symbols in our respective countries of the alleged unreasonableness of the other. These issues have diverted attention from broader problems of the kind address below under Market Access, and overshadow the many beneficial aspects of the relationship.

Shifting the Blame

In each country, the other is frequently cited as a cause of economic problems or political adjustments. American industries in economic difficulty tend to stress foreign—often Japanese—competition as a cause rather than a symptom of such problems as lower productivity growth, insufficient attention to long-term market share, or management mistakes. In Japan, U.S. pressures are frequently used to justify difficult political or economic adjustment that Japan should make anyway in its own economic interests.

Bilateralism

Unlike U.S. relationships with its European allies, U.S.-Japan relations are characterized by a high degree of bilateralism. Many of the adjustments involved in Japan's assumption of broad international responsibilities and the attendant changes in its domestic system, e.g., financial deregulation, are worked out in the context of the bilateral relationship. This process inevitably casts the United States as a source of pressure and places a heavy political burden on the relationship. It diverts Japanese debate away from questions of broader global responsibilities toward the focus of whether the adjustment is being made to please the United States. It also results in suspicion in third countries that Japanese trade concessions or other adjustments are skewed to favor the United States.

AN ACTION PROGRAM

Some of the causes of these problems have been the failure to recognize the mutual benefits of the relationship, the absence of a longer-term vision of goals toward which the two countries should strive, poor policy coordination, inadequate recognition of the need for policy changes, and inadequate implementation of commitments and policies.

Japan and the United States should develop an action program to address these shortcomings and improve the management of their relationship with each other.

Establishing an Agenda

There are lessons to be learned from the precedent set during the consultations between the President and Prime Minister in November 1983. The two leaders personally established a priority agenda for addressing the most pressing issues pending between their countries, and directed their respective administrations to follow through on their decisions.

We recommend that this become a permanent process, focusing on measures directed toward realizing longer-range goals. Approximately once a year, the two leaders should take advantage of one of their periodic meetings to develop common longer-term goals and plan a course of action addressing the issues they believe call for priority attention over the next three to five years. These agendas would anticipate problem areas, not only between Japan and the United States, but elsewhere in the world, where joint cooperation is especially desirable, and would be reviewed on a continuing basis. They should provide guidelines to shape the work of subordinate departments and agencies, and the implementation should be assessed at each subsequent meeting.

It must be recognized, of course, that some decisions will call for legislative action or require the concurrence of successor administrations. Accordingly, there is potential for criticism if the requisite support is not forthcoming. However, if understood as laying out intentions that the respective administrative branches of government will make their best-faith efforts to live up to, this danger can be minimized.

Improving National Policy Coordination

As indicated above, management of U.S.-Japan affairs is of such importance that overall policy must be established at the highest levels. In Japan, because of the paramount importance of the U.S. relationship, the Prime Minister should maintain direct authority over coordination of policy relating to the relationship. In the United States, policy coordination should be vested in a Cabinet-level officer under the President. We applaud the decision to have the Secretary of State coordinate Japan-related policies. This direction should not impinge on the prerogatives of other agencies or restrain the essential contacts of counterpart officials—if anything, these should be expanded. The Secretary of State, however, should insist that major negotiating positions be developed under his direction, and that once established, policies be pursued with a single negotiating voice. The views of the private sector, including representatives of the business community and academicians, should be sought in the policymaking process.

Policy coordination also presents special problems in Japan, where administrative power is less centralized than in the United States. The bureaucratic and political process entails lengthy and complicated consensus building. The coordination process is likely to become increasingly difficult in Japan's external relations as more and more issues involve several ministries or agencies, each with its own institutional set of interests and constituents. It is essential that Japan update policy-coordination mechanisms to meet the requirements of a more complex society and international environment.

Effective Implementing Mechanisms

A source of continuing friction in the relationship has been tardy or inadequate implementation of commitments. This has been a particularly difficult problem in Japan, where too often commitments have been made or implied, but implementation has been thwarted by bureaucratic opposition.

As discussed below under Market Access, Japan needs to develop stronger mechanisms to ensure that once commitments are given, they are implemented fully and on schedule. Dates should be specified, and checks instituted to ensure these dates are met.

Establishment of a Special Commission on Japan's Agenda for Strengthening the International Economy

It is time for Japan to formulate its own agenda of external and internal tasks to improve the working of the international economy, rather than simply respond to successive U.S. pressures. Japan's economic packages, discussed under Market Access, are an example of a reactive approach which is losing its effectiveness.

To escape the pitfalls of a reactive approach, Japan should establish a "Special Commission on Japan's Agenda for Strengthening the International Economy," analogous to Japan's Ad Hoc Commission on Administrative Reform. This commission would be charged with identifying areas where Japan can make a stronger contribution to the international economy through further measure to open its markets, develop new international rules, exert diplomatic leverage, and share its capital and technology.

Relating the Pieces to the Whole

The extent of high-level meetings between Japanese and U.S. officials is impressive. The President and Prime Minister have met four times, while the Secretary of State and Foreign Minister have met together on thirteen occasions since January 1983. Regular meetings take place between Cabinet officers responsible for defense, finance, trade, agriculture, labor, and occasionally, education, law enforcement, etc. Moreover, the various aspects of economic affairs are collectively addressed at the biannual Economic Sub-Cabinet meetings, while the Secretaries of State and Treasury jointly meet with the Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Finance at the annual Summit meetings.

In recognition of our common international interests, close security relationship, and Japan's more active foreign policy, it is suggested that occasional joint meetings be held of the Secretaries of State and Defense and Minister of Foreign Affairs and Director General of the Japan Defense Agency, at which regional and global issues with broad security implications would be discussed.

Multilateralizing the Economic Relationship

While the resolution of bilateral issues should not be allowed to lag, a good number of the issues in U.S.-Japan economic relations need to be addressed in a broader context. This is true of exchange rates as well as trade.

With regard to trade issues, a new multilateral round of trade discussions in the GATT is needed further to develop international trade rules and continue the momentum of trade liberalization to ensure a more open and fairer world trading system. Our two governments proposed such a GATT round at the recent London Economic Summit, but to prepare the ground, more concrete action is required.

Japan should develop a multilateral trade initiative laying out those particular tariff and nontariff barriers on which it is prepared to negotiate, as well as the kind of concessions it is most interested in obtaining in a new round. Because Japan has by far the largest current-account surplus among the industrialized democracies, it is in a position where it need not demand or expect full reciprocity from its trading partners. However, some reciprocity is needed to make trade concessions more politically acceptable in Japan and to promote a more general reduction of trade barriers.

On the U.S side, the Administration should seek new trade negotiating authority that will strenghten its bargaining flexibility. U.S. trade negotiators are severely limited by authority which largely restricts them to asking for unilateral concessions, in return making it difficult for other countries to negotiate.

Using International Institutions for Dispute Resolution

In general, bilateral disputes should be resolved bilaterally. Japan and the United States should, however, not hesitate to use international dispute-settlement mechanisms, particularly if negotiations on ongoing issues have become so acrimonious that they threaten good will between the two countries. In this connection, Japan has been reluctant to make use of GATT dispute-settlement mechanisms, and has tended to regard resort to GATT by its trading partners as a hostile move. Japan should overcome this "GATT allergy."

Inasmuch as international dispute-settlement mechanisms are not well-developed and the procedures are slow, Japan and the United States should work together to make these mechanisms more effective.

Needless to say, more effective management of the relationship is not just a matter of governmental procedures. Procedures are a means of achieving more effective actions. Actions are needed in many instances to improve the quality of the U.S.-Japan relationship, as the rest of this report will make clear.

AID TO POLAND

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, as a Polish-American and an individual committed to the promotion of free enterprise and the private sector, I want to express my resounding support for S. 3000, a bill authorizing aid to the private agricultural sector in Poland. I ask unanimous consent that I be added as an original cosponsor of Senator PERCY's resolution.

Throughout the world we see many countries whose economies are being suffocated by excessive government involvement. Poland is one clear example. However, after 18 months of negotiations between the Polish church and the Government, a law has been passed which allows the establishment of private charitable foundations for the first time in postwar Poland. Negotiations on a separate statute specifically governing the church-affiliated agricultural foundation are nearing conclusion.

The Polish church in conjunction with the administration and Chairman PERCY have conceived a plan to channel Western assistance to Polish agriculture. Such assistance will strengthen this industry, increase food supplies, and enhance the church's role in the countryside.

Today, private farms occupy about 75 percent of Poland's farmland. Most of the remainder consists of government-owned farms with collective farms occupying 1 percent. Crops account for nearly three-fifths of the value of Poland's agricultural production, and livestock accounts for about two-fifths.

Polish and German agricultural specialists have identified 10 key sectors of Polish agriculture which would benefit from Western assistance. In the July issue of Polonian, it is mentioned that Upper Silesia, 1 of 7 land regions in Poland, is an "ecological wasteland."

This particular region has rich farmland and is also the most highly industrialized region in Poland. Its smokestacks emit one-third of the gases and one-fourth of the soot polluting the country's atmosphere. This pollution has caused widespread respiratory and other diseases and only half of the region's farmland can produce food fit for human consumption. Also, butter, meat, sugar, chocolates, and cereal are being rationed.

The pilot project will channel $28 million into a modest test project in each of the identified key sectors. The U.S. contribution to this endeavor will be $10 million as announced by the President last month. Other contributors have not been formally announced but it is the understanding of the administration that another $8,200,000 has been pledged with $200,000 of that figure donated by Lech Walesa from his Nobel Peace Prize money.

That's quite a sacrifice from one individual, Mr. President, and an affirmation of the necessity of this program as well as a commitment to its success. We, as a country, are committed to the Solidarity movement; let us now make a small sacrifice in helping to insure its success.

TV AND RADIO COVERAGE OF SENATE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I am voting against the cloture motion on Senate Resolution 66 to provide for TV and radio coverage of Senate proceedings. In doing so I am not registering opposition to the concept of televising the Senate. I support the idea of Senate broadcasts. As a Senator identified with the sunshine law and open committee meetings, I commend any effort to make the processes of Government more accessible to the public.

My concern rather is whether we are giving adequate consideration to this resolution; whether we have fully explored its implications and whether we have sufficiently addressed the problems that will certainly result. Make no mistake, passage of the resolution will have far-reaching effects on the operation and indeed the character of the U.S. Senate. It would well revolutionize the manner in which we conduct our business and perhaps even the nature of the issues that come to the Senate floor. There may well be important benefits for the general public. There may also be serious consequences for the legislative process and the ability of the Senate to conduct its business.

Consequently, this is not a matter to be dealt with in the hectic, closing days of Congress. This is not a pressing or urgent matter but it is important. And its importance warrants a full debate and a full consideration of all options. In the climate of the end of a Congress that is not likely.

I feel we should be considering the option of televising only debates on the more significant legislation the Senate addresses. I question whether gavel-to-gavel coverage will represent a real contribution to the edification of the public. Much of the significant business of the Senate does not take place on the Senate floor. When the Senate is engaged in a full-scale debate on a bill or issue of national importance, the public would have a valuable insight into how its business is being conducted. That claim cannot be made for the day in, day out actions of the Senate.

In providing for gavel-to-gavel coverage we may be opening the door to an unneeded and detrimental politicization of the Senate floor. Obviously, politics is part of what we do but the Senate would be ill served if the floor of the Senate becomes an annex of the recording studio. I do not believe there has been sufficient thought given to how we safeguard against the political misuse of television coverage.

In like manner, I am concerned whether the rights of the minority will be fully protected under the resolution. Televising the proceeding could have drastic impact on operations of the Senate; operations which are controlled by the majority. Control of the floor and of legislative scheduling will take on a whole new importance. The impact on the minority and how the minority is protected must be fully aired and resolved.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not act precipitously on this measure. As Senators we have an obligation to the Senate as an institution. It is a unique legislative body. It changes and improves but in its traditions are the seeds of its greatness. The essential adjective for the Senate is "deliberative" and if we enact changes that may fundamentally alter the Senate it must be done with all due deliberation. Thus, I cannot support this motion.

ELECTION YEAR DEBATES JUST STARTED

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, the Presidential campaign swirls around the country, with media coverage of statements involving religion, patriotism, national defense, foreign affairs, deficits, and taxes.

Yet to emerge in the Presidential debates are the basic questions of the disastrous conditions of the U.S. industries that depend upon production from the earth. The President may have fired the initial popgun by announcing Tuesday an obscure procedure of negotiations on imported steel and turning loose long-pent-up Farmers Home Administration farm loans. Hardly anything but election year tactics.

Agriculture, forest products, minerals and energy all come from the earth, and all of these industries are on the brink of economic disaster.

When a candidate in 1980, the classic campaign question of Ronald Reagan was: "Are you better off now than you were 4 years ago?"

That same question should be asked now of those who toil the earth, those that mine or drill the earth, or those that harvest the trees that grow from the earth's forest lands.

For agriculture: Farmers, ranchers, agribusiness, and Main Street;

For minerals: Miners, smelter workers, mill workers;

For forest products: Loggers and sawmill workers;

For energy: Oil and gas producers, roughnecks.

Their answer is: "No, no, no, and no."

Agricultural prices are at their lowest level, in relationship to the cost of production, since the dark days of the Great Depression in the 1930's. While it is hard to imagine that farm prices could go lower, there is no question that costs keep rising and more producers go out of business every month.

In the case of minerals, the lower prices have meant closing mines, smelters, and mills.

In the case of copper, the real question is whether any domestic producer will be left in business after this year.

With the forest products industry, prices for dimensional lumber are off 40 percent, and with the further sagging of home construction, there is the prospect of a bleak winter at best—and at the worst, the permanent closure of a significant number of sawmills.

Energy is faring only slightly better, with a very low percentage of rigs drilling wells, and the number of available jobs cut by one-third. The country follows a pied-piper energy policy, in that a higher percentage of oil and gas consumed in the United States is imported; and in the case of natural gas, the decrease in drilling is like a lighted fuse on a stick of dynamite. So sharp is the decrease in drilling for natural gas that a shortage in 5 years is certain, followed by escalating costs to consumers.

With all of these basic industries, high interest rates and escalating costs during the past 4 years have brought producers to their knees.

Sure, there has been a lower rate of inflation during the past year. We thoroughly understand that. But a great part of that decrease in inflation has come out of the hides of basic commodity and mineral producers as prices for their products have declined. Yet their costs of production have gone up even as the price for their products has gone down. They understand full well why there are lower inflation rates as their pocketbooks and bank accounts have declined. Their debts have greatly increased.

In the case of each of these basic industries a floundering trade policy is a part of their demise. The strong dollar has worked to their disadvantage. Our exports are off. Our imports are up. Copper and steel import problems are fresh in the minds of the public. Lumber imports from Canada have captured about one-third of our soft wood market. Rarely discussed is that imported gas from Mexico, Canada, and Algeria receives a much higher price than the conditions allow for domestic producers.

The trade imbalance allowed by this administration has reached the staggering amount of $120 billion more in merchandise and commodities imported than is sold abroad. And the balance of trade, including services which used to be the backstop for a merchandise and commodity imbalance, is now $80 billion in the red. With an administration that has established a world-record national debt of $1.6 trillion, the trade imbalance, while a staggering record itself, seems puny.

It should be noted that the debate on tax matters has left these producing people out. It's simple. No profit—no income tax. No job—no pay check—no income tax. No business—no tax.

For Main Street and the agriculture, mining, and forest towns of America, in all the 50 States, the serious economic collapse of an adequate price for producers to cover costs has meant creeping stagnation and closures of small businesses.

The question for all of these producers and their suppliers is survival. Numbering in the tens of millions, their economic recovery is in jeopardy. Consequently, the heralded economic recovery is spotty and very uneven throughout the country. Without recovery in these basic industries, there is truly no chance of a sound recovery in the United States, despite the ever-increasing amounts of deficit defense spending by this administration or, for that matter, the next administration.

So, on with the debate in this Presidential election campaign.

If farmers and ranchers like it the way it is, then they can cast their votes again for Ronald Reagan for President.

If miners, smelter and mill workers like it the way it is, then they can cast their votes again for Ronald Reagan for President.

If loggers, sawmill workers, and paper workers like it the way it is, then they can cast their votes for Ronald Reagan for President.

If oil and gas independent wildcatters and roughnecks like it the way it is, then they can cast their votes for Ronald Reagan for President.

But I believe that we can do much better for the basic American industries with trade policy, with monetary policy, and Federal Government policy. I believe that prompt changes can bring prompt reversals in the deepening pit of economic collapse for these industries, and that is absolutely essential for economic recovery in the United States.

To add true dimension to the opportunity for national debate on these critical matters during the weeks ahead, I have asked Walter Mondale to meet with myself and other Democratic Senators to discuss with us what appears to be the dominant issue of 1984: Saving these industries from further collapse and to assure their survival.

President Reagan has either not understood their importance or lacks the necessary leadership to change this course of decline. We deserve better. I am certain that we can do better and that the entire spectrum of the American people will benefit when we do better for these basic industries.

In food aid alone, although we have staggering amounts of Government-owned surplus food in Federal warehouses, this administration failed, faltered, and fumbled in not using them wisely and prudently as U.S. policy for the hungry and malnourished at home and abroad.

Surely ordinary horse sense can become part of the Presidential campaign debates as these issues for the American voters to consider before they cast their votes on November 6.

TV COVERAGE OF SENATE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, for the past couple of weeks—as well as 2 years ago, when the issue first came up—I have listened to or read most of the debate on TV coverage of Senate floor proceedings.

I am aware of the advantages and the possible problems and pitfalls of such coverage.

And I believe I understand the complexities—and appreciate the perplexities—of the issue.

But from the very beginning, there has never been any question in my mind:

Senate proceedings should be open to television coverage.

I believe in the people's right to know what is going on in their Government.

More than that, I believe it is the people's responsibility to know what is going on in their Government.

And I believe it is the duty of Government officials to tell them.

More than that, I believe that the people should, where possible, be allowed to see for themselves.

There's altogether too much mystique, too much of a mystery made about government.

Democratic government is not an exclusive, arcane rite to be kept accessible only to a select few.

It is an open proceeding, with decisions openly arrived at, to be participated in and witnessed by as many people as is practically possible—and still get the job done.

I repeat: I believe there should be TV coverage of the Senate.

But—and no one regrets more deeply than I the necessity for me to utter that "but"—I am adamant that that coverage be fair coverage.

And under the pending proposal, Senators, especially those of us who are presently—but not forever—in the minority, have no real assurance that coverage will be fair.

Indeed, the way the Senate has been operating of late, we have reason to fear that it won't be.

We have seen the development of new techniques to set up artificial parliamentary situations so as to thwart legitimate debate—techniques like the so-called blockade arrangement under which two majority Members, aided and abetted by the Chair, propose first and second degree amendments and then keep it pending without bringing it to a vote. This tactic effectively blocks consideration of any other amendments for hours—or days—unless the Republican handling the legislation is willing to grant unanimous consent to set aside the blockade amendment.

We have seen too many instances of the Presiding Officer ignoring a Senator on this side of the aisle who is standing and seeking recognition, and recognizing instead a Senator on the other side—in response to head and eye signals but in violation of Senate practice and tradition. This is a tradition so time honored and essential to comity that it led former Vice President Nelson Rockefeller—in a gracious and historic gesture—to apologize to the then Senator from Alabama, the late James B. Allen, for failing to recognize him though Senator Allen had been on his feet seeking recognition.

To quote the Vice President directly:

Every Senator in this distinguished body has, at all times, the right to be heard and it is the responsibility of the Chair to see that that Senator or those Senators have that opportunity. . . .

I want to assure this body that as Presiding Officer I totally recognize the responsibility, the need, and the essentiality of recognition of any senator, from any State, at any time.

We are all aware of the temptations to which the Chair ordinarily is subject to abuse the power of recognition, especially on highly controversial issues. We Democrats have not been blameless when we've been the majority. That's without TV.

How much greater will be the temptation—and how much weaker will be the power to resist temptation—when recognition means the bestowal of prime time exposure. And when nonrecognition—by one means or another—means no exposure at all.

Mr. President, 2 years ago the Senate rejected a similar proposal for TV and radio coverage.

In summarizing the arguments against the proposal, the Senate Republican Policy Committee—I want to stress that; the Senate Republican Policy Committee—said in part:

The proposed coverage might force the Senate to adopt rules on debate a la the House. In examining the House experience with television, we must remember that the House is preeminently a representative body. Accordingly, its rules have been designed to protect the majority, to insure majority rule. Further, owing to its size, it is a structured institution with limitations on debate. In contrast, the Senate abides by rules and customs which, reflecting its deliberative purpose, place a premium on fairness over efficiency. Indeed, they have the specific function of protecting the rights of a minority, even a minority of one. Yet television coverage would signal the end of the Senate tradition of free, unlimited discussion, as pressures mounted from within and without to constrict debate.

This proposal is objectionable because it turns over to a single committee the total authority to establish whatever rules and requirements of implementation it may deem necessary. The full Senate should have an opportunity to examine these rules.

Finally, too many pertinent questions as to the effect of this proposal remain unanswered. Will the rules for recognition of individual Senators have to be revised to allow a more organized and predictable sequence of speakers? In order to establish legislative history, which will take precedence: the written record, where Senators are permitted to revise their remarks and insert material, or the video recording of what actually transpired? Will the free flow and occasional chaos of rollcall voting have to be replaced by electronic voting, as in the House? Will we have to replace the use of frequent quorum calls with a far more structured order of business in order to accommodate the demands of public television?

In short, this is not simply a matter of extending the public gallery. The rules, customs, and traditions of the Senate will be affected, perhaps profoundly and irrevocably damaged.

Mr. President, 2 years have gone by and those questions and concerns still have not been addressed.

Until they are—until the Senate majority and minority agree on procedures that will guarantee fair play to all and that will enhance rather than demean this great body—I cannot vote for the pending proposal. And for those reasons, I will not support cloture, for cloture would stifle debate, and could lead to a premature decision that could deprive the present minority Democrats of their rights today and could deprive the future minority Republicans of their rights tomorrow.

TELEVISION IN THE SENATE

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, as with many issues we face in the U.S. Senate, the question of whether to allow television cameras in this Chamber is not one where the arguments are all on one side. There are legitimate points to be made in favor of allowing the cameras in to broadcast all our deliberations.

If you view the issue narrowly, the arguments in favor of the cameras are persuasive. I have always supported openness in government including letting the public and press in to cover meetings at the State level that had always been closed.

I also want to make it clear that I am not irrevocably opposed to any and all broadcast coverage of the U.S. Senate. I am opposed to Senate Resolution 66, which would authorize gavel-to-gavel coverage without addressing the almost certain rules changes that would be forced by such coverage.

There is more at stake here than simply allowing television coverage of Senate debates. For the decision we make on this issue could force profound changes on the institution of the U.S. Senate.

I am not speaking here as a traditionalist who opposes all change, who believes the old way is always the best way. As many of my colleagues can testify, I am usually in the forefront of those demanding reform. For example, I recently testified before the panel headed by the Senator from Indiana that is studying the Senate committee system. We do need to make changes in the Senate. We must make changes that will allow this body to operate more efficiently and effectively. But they need to be changes that have been carefully studied for all their possible ramifications.

It is my strong feeling and belief that if we simply open up the galleries to television cameras for gavel-to-gavel coverage, many profound changes will be forced in the way this 200-year-old institution operates. I confess to you that I do not claim to know what all these changes will be. No one can predict with any certainty. What is disturbing, however, is that the proponents of this resolution do not seem to be concerned about it. They want to force this one change and then let the shock waves of that decision rumble through the system forcing adjustments willy-nilly.

Now there are many reforms that are needed in the Senate. They are the reforms that will help us efficiently govern this country. We need to consider all of these questions and proposals as an overall restructuring of the Senate. We should not pull out one idea and try to institute it without careful consideration of all of its possible ramifications. We should know beforehand, what Senate rules must be changed to accommodate this new development. I do not see how the current rules would long survive gavel-to-gavel television coverage.

At times, the debate over this issue is trivialized, as if the opponents were simply afraid of television or were seeking to keep something from the public. There are no secrets here. The Senate does not suffer from a lack of press and media coverage. We are not holding secret meetings here. Reporters from all over the world attend our sessions. They are free to write or broadcast any information they learn or any opinion they form from watching our deliberations.

I do not think the public suffers greatly from a lack of information about the happenings in this Chamber.

There is no doubt the television reports on our actions would be more lively if the reporters could use video tape of the actual speeches. There might be a few people who would pay more attention to that part of the news.

But I do not believe there is any great popular outcry over the lack of television coverage.

So, what is driving us to make this decision immediately? First of all, the House of Representatives has allowed the cameras in and although the situation there is very much different than what we would face on this side, changes have resulted.

One of the biggest changes is the access to the national networks this has given the Members of the House. It is natural that the reporters and editors focus more on the activities over there than they did in pretelevision days. Having to choose between a reporter reading Senate quotes and tape of the actual House debate and speeches, I would put the House on the evening news myself. I have my doubts that it produces better Government, but it certainly produces better television.

More recently, there was a new development. The House proceedings are broadcast on cable television by C-SPAN. A group of energetic young Republicans led by my good friend and colleague from Georgia NEWT GINGRICH began to make speeches geared toward educating the viewing public on issues that were not being addressed by the House of Representatives leadership. It wasn't too long before the Speaker and the rest of the leadership had to react. As the saying goes, "A hit dog will holler."

All of this received great publicity in the media. Also Members of the Senate began to notice that the access to television was slowly changing the status of some Members of the House. Until television went into the House Chamber, the average Congressman was fairly unknown outside of his district. Now as the television stations back home tape speeches off C-SPAN for use on local news, Congressmen are becoming much better known throughout their States. A few have become regular features of the network newscasts and were developing national reputations.

Now this may come as a shock to some of those watching these proceedings from the galleries. But all Senators have egos. There are few of us who believe in hiding our light under a bushel. When we introduce a bill or take a stand on an issue, we do what we can to get the word out to the public. That includes the use of television. There are few things a politician enjoys more than getting on television.

The Members of the Senate have been carefully watching the rapidly developing situation in the House. They have watched nervously as the new stars of Congress have been born. This is especially true of Senators who might harbor an ambition to be on the national ticket of one of the Presidential parties. No one can say for certain, but there might be one or two Senators who have such ambitions. Even those without Presidential dreams have concerns. After all, those suddenly very visible Congress men and women might be contemplating a race for the Senate.

What the increased coverage from the House has launched is a type of "Star Wars." We hear that term referring to space weaponry. But it also applies here. Some of my colleagues are alarmed that the Senate is being left behind in the "Star Wars" race. Resolution 66 could be called the Senate defense bill. We've fallen behind in the media war and need to counter the House's new weapon.

That is one of the hidden movers behind this proposal. I do not mean to suggest this is the motivation of the prime sponsors. After all, no one has backed this idea more than the majority leader. I know how deeply and sincerely he believes television coverage will be a good thing for the Senate and for the country. As the majority leader is leaving the Senate at the end of the year, he will not be able to participate in the televised debates.

Let me add, that I will greatly miss the gentleman from Tennessee. We will have to get along without him next year and that will not be easy in the best of circumstances. If this resolution passes, we will truly need his wisdom, patience, and leadership. If Resolution 66 passes, I may organize a write-in campaign down in Tennessee to force the majority leader to return to the Senate for another 6 years.

As I said in the beginning, there is a legitimate open Government argument for letting television into this Chamber. But there are other factors at work here too and they should be brought out into the light of day.

There are no votes to be won by voting against this resolution. There are no constituents that will be made happy by voting no on television. I doubt there will be many made unhappy by a no vote either. But there will be some. And they will surely hear about it, for voting no to television will not be popular with some of our friends in the media galleries who have a special interest in this resolution.

So, why go against the stream? Why oppose this resolution?

There is something called the law of unintentional consequences. That might be best expressed as, "Today's solution can become tomorrow's problem." Congress provides regular illustrations of the law of unintentional consequences, but let's look at Senate Resolution 66.

I believe gavel-to-gavel coverage of the U.S. Senate will mean the end of the tradition of unlimited debate. There is no way unlimited debate can be allowed once television cameras are in this Chamber.

Now perhaps, you want to do away with unlimited debate. There are arguments that can be made in favor of that change. I would be interested in hearing them and reading studies on what this would mean to the process.

What I cannot understand is the backhanded, thoughtless way we could be ending something that began with our Founding Fathers. Unlimited debate is one of the crucial differences between the House and the Senate.

Although some argument can be made over how well the House has adjusted to television coverage, I think it has been fairly successful. But the House is not the Senate. There is the critical difference over control of access to the floor.

Some of my colleagues who have served in the House can speak to this better than I. But my understanding is the Members of the House have 1 minute each morning that they can each take, if desired, to discuss whatever issue happens to be on their mind. One minute. That's all. After that, it is the leadership and the managers of legislation who control the floor. When they are debating legislation, the floor manager of a bill might yield 5 minutes or 10 minutes to the Members desiring to speak on the bill. The speeches we have heard so much about in the House are special orders which come at the end of the legislative day.

Could not the Senate do this? Yes, we could. But only if we had iron control over the access to the floor. Currently, if a Member is speaking on a bill and he gets warmed up on the subject, he can go on for quite some time. As long as there is no time agreement on legislation, there is no control on the length of a speech by a Senator. If a Senator wants to speak on a bill, he or she can. This is as it should be.

What would happen if Resolution 66 were passed?

There would have to be a time agreement on every major bill or we would be forever getting to a vote. Right now, if a Member wants to put his views on record he does not have to read every speech on the floor. The speech can be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Many of us wanted to say something on the historic occasion of the confirmation of Supreme Court Justice Sandra O'Connor. There were no negative votes that I can remember. Yet, it took the better part of a day to get to that vote because of all the speeches that had to be made. That was under our current rules. With Resolution 66, we might still be trying to get to a vote on her nomination.

Why is that? It is often overlooked in discussing television in the Senate that we are not just talking about the availability of the Senate action going to just the national networks and C-Span. Local television stations will also be regular users. Some, of course, have bureaus here in Washington. But that isn't necessary in order for television stations to obtain tape of its two home State Senators.

These local stations will have access to the C-SPAN feed. The news departments will be able to tape their State's Senators' comments for use in that evening's newscast.

If you home State colleague goes to the floor to make a statement on the bill, this will be on the televison stations back home. The people at home will wonder why their other Senator didn't speak on the issue.

How can you control this problem? It would place an intolerable burden on the majority and minority leaders. They have to move legislation forward as best they can. It is an extremely difficult task coordinating the activities of 100 individuals. I am in my first term in the Senate and I have not served with any leadership other than our current majority and minority leaders. But it is hard to imagine how we could be blessed with any more knowledgeable and accomplished than the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from West Virginia. To my friend from Tennessee, let me say that I think he has performed miracles in the last 4 years. I deeply regret having to oppose him on an issue he feels so strongly about. But I do not believe a majority leader, even one so accomplished as our current leader, could keep the agenda moving forward with a rules change that I am positive will result in far more speech making on the floor of the Senate. We move at a snail's pace now. But if this resolution passes, we may view this as the last of the real action days in the upper Chamber.

Now this problem will go far beyond speeches on the substantive issues being debated and voted on in this body. Resolution 66 will be the greatest boon to press secretaries since the invention of the press release. Most Senators, if not all, want to get on television and their press secretaries work to make this possible. We make video tapes and send them to stations and now we even have the ability to beam our message back home by satellite.

With Resolution 66, we could cut out the middle man. With gavel-to-gavel coverage of the Senate floor, anything a Senator wanted to get to his television stations at home, he could say on the Senate floor. This is in addition to whatever live viewers would be watching the coverage on C-Span. They would be a bonus. The real prize would be the pick ups made by stations from the cable broadcasts from the Senate floor.

If your press secretary hasn't thought of this yet, he will. And although we might all deny it now, this technique will be used.

Let me give you an example. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is replete with tributes to individuals and institutions. Anniversaries are recognized, achievements praised, and the dead are ulogized. But for the most part, this is done through inserts in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We can even have the excerpt from the RECORD printed on parchment and suitable for framing. With Resolution 66, this type of activity will quickly find its way onto the floor of the Senate.

This is how it will happen. A college in your home State is celebrating its 100th anniversary. Your press secretary writes up a nice little speech recalling all the history and achievements of this fine institution of higher learning. He then calls the news directors at the television stations in the city where the college is located. The Senator, he tells them, will be paying tribute to the college on the floor of the Senate this afternoon.

Do you think the stations will use that tape? Of course, they will. After all, this speech has something that no tape made in our studio will have. It's not a canned little talk. This speech has the entire U.S. Senate as a backdrop. It makes for great television. You bet it will get used.

After this type of circumstance has gone on a few times, what do you think your home State colleague is going to do when he sees you on the television extolling the virtues of the 100-year-old college? He might be in the middle of figuring out where to put the MX missile. But I'll tell you what he is going to do. He's going to call in his press secretary and tell him to work up a good 10-minute speech on that college. Maybe I'm wrong. Maybe human nature isn't what I think it is. He might continue to do his real work and not worry about commemorating the college's anniversary. When the voters down there wonder about his silence and ask him, this statesman can explain that he had more important things to do. I am certain they will understand.

I predict that if Resolution 66 is passed and gavel-to-gavel coverage instituted, we will see many of the items now just printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD read on the floor of the Senate. We will endure this onslaught of rhetoric until we are forced to change our rules and more tightly control access to the floor. To the future Senators who will have to draft these new rules, I would like to wish them good luck and express my sympathy. For how can you craft a rule to cut down on extraneous talk and speed up Senate action, without opening the door for future abuse. Anything you do in that line will eventually be used by a majority seeking to shut off or limit debate.

In addition, who will decide who gets to speak? The leaders? Will Members have to go hat in hand to their leader to get permission to speak on the floor? Who will decide who gets 10 minutes and who gets 5 minutes?

And, of course, there is a world of difference between speaking at 4 in the afternoon and 9 at night. On a normal day, 4 in the afternoon would be a good time. It would give the television correspondents time to edit a portion of that speech into a report scheduled for that night's newcast. But if the debate was hot enough, the networks might carry the debate live. The "plum" time would then be when the maximum television sets would be tuned in to watch.

In recent Presidential election years, we have witnessed the candidates for nomination holding debates throughout the country. If we pass Senate Resolution 66, Presidential candidates from the Senate will be able to save on travel time and expense money. They can conduct the Presidential debates here on the floor of the Senate. They not only can, they will.

The minute Senate Resolution 66 passes, it will become a major factor in the planning for the 1988 race for the White House. More than likely, we will have hot primary contests in both parties. How many Senators will be actively involved? No one can even begin to guess now. But it could easily be in double figures.

What will the Senate be able to accomplish if it has 10 or 12 members straining to get on network television everytime this body debates an issue?

I will grant the proponents of this resolution one point: Attendance during debates, at least in Presidential election years will increase, and there will be moments which will be exciting television.

But I am not certain this will result in good government.

If you think we have grandstanding now, and I certainly do, just wait until we have gavel-to-gavel television coverage in the Senate. You haven't seen anything yet.

Now there are those who say any Senator who becomes known as a showboater will suffer with the voters. As a rule, I doubt that would happen. I don't know of any House Members who have been defeated because of their antics in televised debates. The minority leader in the House was troubled by his opponent using carefully selected pieces of House debate in negative advertising. The use of the debate tapes in political advertising is another problem area for the proponents of this resolution. Judging from what has happened in the House, unless a Senator became a complete buffoon, I would expect the political positives of television would outweigh the negatives. Let me just say, there are no doubt more ways to exploit television in the Senate than we possibly can imagine here today. But if we pass this resolution, we will all be experts within a year.

I say let us try and head off some of these problems by devising rules changes and setting some parameters for broadcast coverage. I can't imagine any other piece of legislation that has the potential impact of Senate Resolution 66 that we would pass without first carefully working on the rules that will govern its use.

Each Senator who is considering voting for Senate Resolution 66 should ask himself: Are you for ending the Senate's long tradition of unlimited debate? For there is no way unlimited debate can coexist with gavel-to-gavel television coverage.

To those who say this is nothing more than opening the doors of the Senate to a larger public, I ask why stop at halfway measures? Why stop with just gavel-to-gavel coverage. Why don't we allow reporters here on the floor? They do at political conventions. We could have anchor booths set up on the galleries and when the speeches on the floor were boring they could interview other Senators on the floor or bring in the expert commentators. Why limit the poor souls to just the floor action.

When a Senator lost a bill by a 48-to-47 vote, a reporter would be there to stick a microphone in his face and ask what it feels like to blow a close one. We could bring our wives or husbands down to the galleries and they could be interviewed as well.

As long we are going to have a circus, let's have all three rings.

If television is such a wonderful thing, why don't we let it work its magic on the Senate as it has on our political conventions. The conventions are now organized for and geared to the television coverage. Unfortunately, something may have been lost in the process. It has become a stage show. A rather boring stage show. The television audience for convention coverage has diminished significantly in recent years.

Mr. President, we have many important issues awaiting action in this Senate. We do not have the time to settle all the questions that remain regarding Senate Resolution 66. Let us not rush in the waning moments of this Congress and live to regret our haste.

TIGERS TRIUMPH

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, on Tuesday of this week an event of tremendous significance to the people of Michigan occurred. On that evening, the Detroit Tigers clinched the 1984 American League Eastern Division title. This team, which had not won a division title since 1972, had fallen on difficult times, but it has risen to the top of its division and will complete the season with the best record in all of baseball. Sparky Anderson has the chance to become the first manager in baseball to win 100 games in both leagues. Beyond that, few will forget the history-making winning streak at the beginning of the 1984 season where the Tigers won 35 of their first 40 games. While many outside of Michigan doubted that the pace would continue, the Tigers did maintain their winning ways and became the first team in baseball since 1927 to lead a division from the start to the finish of the season. They are only the third American League team in history to achieve this success.

The Tigers are more than a baseball team, since they have the enthusiastic support of millions of fans in Michigan. I saw countless examples of this feeling throughout the State where most conversations began, "How about those Tigers?" Just as the Tigers underwent difficult seasons, so did the State of Michigan, but hope always did spring eternal and the team symbolizes our spirit, our perseverance and our determination to succeed. Detroit is a city of many different people, but on that September night, just 3 days ago, they became one in joy for the success that their team had reached. We all know it will continue through the playoffs and into the World Series, but for now the Tigers should be congratulated for their marvelous season.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4375) was agreed to.

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the Senate is considering S. 2538, a bill to provide for authorization of several important programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA]: Non-living Marine Resources, the Sea Grant Program, the Ocean Thermal Energy Conversion [OTEC] Program, and the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere [NACOA].

NOAA was created by Executive order in 1970 with the primary responsiblity for most of the Federal Government's civilian research, service, and regulatory programs affecting the Nation's oceans and atmosphere. The functions of NOAA are critical for the sound and productive management of the Nation's ocean and coastal resources.

This bill is one of a series which, together, provide a comprehensive authorization for NOAA.

Included in S. 2538 is an authorization for programs concerning nonliving marine resources. Hard mineral resources in the ocean represent a source of supply in addition to that on land. It is likely that these resources will eventually be used to supplement domestic and foreign supplies during approaching decades.

The technology for mining and processing these minerals has advanced to the point where mining companies in the United States and other nations are on the verge of commercial exploitation. Manganese nodules and polymetallic sulfide deposits, if commercially developed, would reduce dependence on potentially unstable foreign supplies of strategic minerals, improve the balance of payments, provide new employment opportunities in the private sector, and help maintain U.S. leadership in ocean technologies.

NOAA's Sea Grant Program is directed toward developing and protecting the Nation's marine resources through the application of academic expertise in coordinated research, education, and advisory service programs designed to meet national, regional, and local needs. Sea Grant's excellent research program has accelerated growth of marine industries, such as aquaculture and ocean engineering, through the development of new technologies and the effective application of research by governmental, industrial, and private users.

Sea Grant's training program continues to produce the specialized personnel needed to develop and manage our Nation's marine resources. In the 8 years of its existence, Sea Grant has more than justified continued support of its successful programs and I am pleased to include its reauthorization in this bill.

Also included in this bill is the reauthorization of NOAA's Ocean Thermal Energy Conversion [OTEC] Program. This program provides a framework for the licensing and commecial use of technology to generate electricity from the temperature difference between warm water at the ocean's surface and the colder underlying waters. Utilization of this energy resource would help reduce dependence on foreign sources of oil by providing an alternate and renewable supply of electrical energy.

Finally, this bill provides for the reauthorization of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere [NACOA]. NACOA, comprised of individuals having expertise in oceanic and atmospheric affairs, reviews the Nation's marine policies and programs and reports to the President and the Congress. In the past, NACOA has provided useful advice to Congress and demonstrated the value of its services.

In conclusion, the bill being acted on today provides authorization for a number of important and cost-effective programs of NOAA, and I ask my colleagues for their support.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

The Study Group shall undertake, subject to oversight and review by the Interagency Committee, such studies and other activities as it considers necessary and appropriate to determine the technical and commercial feasibility, economic impact, and other consequences of developing cigarettes and little cigars that will have a minimum propensity to ignite upholstered furniture or mattresses. Such activities include identification of the different physical characteristics of cigarettes and little cigars which have an impact on the ignition of upholstered furniture and mattresses, an analysis of the feasibility of altering any pertinent characteristics to reduce ignition propensity, and an analysis of the possible costs and benefits, both to the industry and the public, associated with any such product modification.

SEC. 5. The Interagency Committee shall submit one year after the date of enactment of this Act a status report to the Senate and the House of Representatives describing the activities undertaken under section 4 during the preceding year. The Interagency Committee shall submit a final technical report, prepared by the Study Group, to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than thirty months after the date of enactment of this Act. The Interagency Committee shall provide to the Congress, within sixty days after the submission of the final technical report any policy recommendations the Interagency Committee deems appropriate. The Interagency Committee and the Study Group shall terminate one month after submission of the policy recommendations prescribed by this section.

SEC. 6. (a) Any information provided to the Interagency Committee or to the Study Group under section 4 which is designated as trade secret or confidential information shall be treated as trade secret or confidential information subject to section 552(b)(4) of title 5, United States Code, and section 1905 of title 18, United States Code, and shall not be revealed, except as provided under subsection (b). No member of the Study Group or Interagency Committee, and no person assigned to or consulting with the Study Group, shall disclose any such information to any person who is not a member of, assigned to, or consulting with, the Study Group or Interagency Committee unless the person submitting such information specifically and in writing authorizes such disclosure.

(b) Subsection (a) does not authorize the withholding of any information from any duly authorized subcommittee or committee of the Congress, except that if a subcommittee or committee of the Congress requests the Interagency Committee to provide such information, the Chairman of the Interagency Committee shall notify the person who provided the information of such a request in writing.

(c) The Interagency Committee shall, on the vote of a majority of its members, adopt reasonable procedures to protect the confidentiality of trade secret and confidential information, as defined in this section.

SEC. 7. As used in this Act, the terms "cigarettes" and "little cigars" have the meanings given such terms by section 3 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act.

SEC. 8. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish an interagency committee and a technical study group on cigarette safety.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise in support of the passage of S. 1935, the Cigarette Safety Act of 1984. This legislation would establish a special task force to assess the feasibility of developing and producing cigarettes which do not readily ignite carpeting, furniture and bedding. The idea for a so-called fire-safe cigarette has been in existence for some time and the task force established by S. 1935 will help determine whether it has merit or not.

Mr. President, in 1982, 6,020 people died in house fires in the United States. Almost 40 percent of these deaths involved persons over the age of 65 or under the age of 10. This is the largest group in the population at risk from fires in the home and also the most helpless in saving themselves from serious injury or death once fire strikes. In fact, an astounding 82 percent of all fire-caused deaths in this country occur in the home and nearly a billion dollars worth of property damage results each year from such fires.

Even more startling, however, is the fact that more than a third of all Americans killed by fire die in fires ignited by one common source: cigarettes. Just as tragically, over 3,800 Americans each year are injured in cigarette-ignited fires and over $300 million worth of property damage is traceable to such fires.

Two-thirds of these residential fire deaths occur between the hours of 8 p.m. and 8 a.m. when people are most likely to be sleeping. In 40 percent of these cases, those who die were not smoking and were not responsible for starting the fires. The available data indicates that cigarette-ignited fires are far and away the leading cause of fire deaths in the United States.

Because of the extent and seriousness of this problem, my committee decided to seriously review ideas for reducing the extent of cigarette-related fire fatalities and injuries in the home and workplace. Based on expert testimony presented to the committee, most cigarette-ignited fires result from a carelessly discarded cigarette which lands on upholstered furniture or bedding. Often, a lighted cigarette is dropped by a person who has fallen asleep with the cigarette in hand. Usually, the fire smoulders unnoticed for several minutes, in many cases more than an hour. Tests show that most cigarettes will remain lit for between 20 and 40 minutes, allowing plenty of time for a fire to get started. Often the family members of the smoker are already in bed, many times in another part of the House. In many cases, neighbors notice the fire and report it and family members never awaken to the danger. Death in most of these fires is caused by smoke and toxic gases rather than flames.

Cigarette-ignited fires might be prevented if cigarettes could be made in a form that was self-extinguishing—would stop burning if not puffed on regularly—or in a form in which the cigarette would continue burning but not with heat levels high enough to cause combustion of fabrics or upholstery. However, there is still some dispute among experts on the feasibility of designing a fire-safe cigarette. Based on this evidence and on the serious financial and personal losses associated with cigarette-ignited fires, my committee approved legislation to create a special task force to study this matter and provide well-researched and informed conclusions and recommendations on the feasability of producing fire-safe cigarettes. I believe that the reduction of the tragic toll of cigarette related fires is an important goal and one which could be reached through the development of less flammable cigarettes.

S. 1935 would establish an Interagency Committee on Cigarette and Little Cigar Safety. The Administrator of the U.S. Fire Administration would serve as chairman of this Interagency Committee. Also serving on the committee would be the Assistant Secretary for Health of the Department of Health and Human Services and the Chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

The Interagency Committee would direct, oversee and review the work of a special technical study group on cigarette and little cigar fire safety which would have the primary responsibility of assessing the feasibility of developing a firesafe cigarette. The study group would consist of one scientific or technical representative from the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the Center for Fire Research of the National Bureau of Standards, the National Cancer Institute, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Each of these representatives would be appointed by the heads of those agencies.

With the direction and review of the Interagency Committee, the study group would undertake any studies or other activities necessary and appropriate to determine the technical and commercial feasibility, the economic impact, and any other consequences of developing cigarettes and little cigars that will have less propensity to ignite upholstered furniture or mattresses. The matters to be evaluated would include the identification of the physical charcteristics of cigarettes and little cigars which have an impact on the ignition of upholstered furniture and mattresses, an analysis of the feasibility of altering the characteristics to reduce ignition propensity, and an analysis of the possible costs and benefits to both industry and the public associated with any product modification considered by the technical study group.

Mr. President, I would point out that the committee carefully considered the question of which agency should chair the Interagency Committee on Cigarette and Little Cigar Fire Safety. After reviewing the matter, the committee decided to provide in the legislation for the appointment of the Administrator of the U.S. Fire Administration as Chair for several reasons.

First, the problem of cigarette-related fires is primarily a matter of fire prevention, although limited to a specific source of fire hazard. Both the Health and Human Services Department and the Consumer Product Safety Commission, who are also members of the Interagency Committee, have valuable contributions to make to the study required by this legislation since the problem of cigarette-ignited fires is obviously of concern to consumers and has a serious effect on health and safety.

However, the issue to be addressed by the study is how to prevent future fires and reduce loss of life and property damage. Fire prevention matters have been assigned by the Congress to the U.S. Fire Administration and in my view, the appointment of the Administrator as the Chair of the Inter-agency Committee is completely in line with the intention of Congress in creating the agency.

The U.S. Fire Administration was created as a part of the Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA], an Agency established through a reorganization plan submitted to my committee in 1978. The Director of FEMA was assigned most of the duties and responsibilities of the now abolished National Fire Prevention and Control Administration [NFPCA] and he in turn assigned most of those responsibilities to the U.S. Fire Administration.

Among the major goals of the Federal Prevention and Control Act of 1974 which created NFPCA was ensuring that national attention wa directed at fire and fire-related problems with special emphasis directed at preventing fires and attracting more interest and concern in fire prevention matters among professional firefighters and fire experts generally. Assigning the Administrator of the U.S. Fire Administration to Chair the Interagency Committee is perfectly in consonance with his assigned duties under law and will help him further his role and fulfill his responsibilities.

Second, the Fire Administration can make available the use of facilities and test equipment which are ideal for supporting the study required by this bill. Since the Chair of the study will provide much of the support staff and resources for the study, I believe it is important that the Chair's agency be able to provide the necessary support.

The Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974 created a special Fire Research Center in the National Bureau of Standards [NBS] with the mission of performing and supporting research on all aspects of fire with the aim of providing scientific and technical knowledge applicable to the prevention and control of fires. This center was not transferred to FEMA along with the rest of the responsibilities and resources of the National Fire Prevention and Control Administration, largely because the center had extensive facilities already located in NBS and my committee wanted to prevent any unnecessary disruption of the center's work. However, as my committee made clear in establishing FEMA, the content and priorities of the fire research program conducted by the center should be determined only after consultation with the Administrator—of the U.S. Fire Administration—when it is relocated in FEMA.

FEMA has used the resources of the center on numerous occasions to study fire combustibility and safety issues and the Fire Administrator could readily tap these resources for use in the cigarette safety study proposed by this legislation. The center has the responsibility and the facilities to conduct studies of the early stages of fires, the physics and chemistry of combustion processes and the dynamics of flame ignition, flame spread, and flame extinguishment, among other things. I believe, as did my committee, that the center's capabilities and its already extensive experimental activities in the area of fire prevention matters will help contribute to a well researched and supported study. Given the close relationship of the center by law to the Fire Administrator, the committee felt his appointment to the Interagency Committee appropriate and believes it will help make for a successful and useful study.

Mr. President, I believe S. 1935 as reported by my committee will provide useful information of the feasibility of developing and producing a fire-safe cigarette. I would like to give special recognition to Senator HEINZ who has taken a strong leadership role in developing this bill and Senator CRANSTON who has worked hard on the bill as well. I believe the Fire Administration's leadership will be important to the successful conclusion of the study provided for in S. 1935 and I urge my colleagues to support passage of the bill.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I commend to the Senate, for its consideration and expeditious passage, S. 1935, the "Cigarette Safety Act of 1984," which I introduced along with Senators DANFORTH and CRANSTON in October 1983. Our legislation will establish a task force to study the feasibility of developing fire-safe cigarettes. Cigarettes are the greatest single cause of death in home fires, and it is with great appreciation that I witness this milestone of legislation progress which I believe will ultimately control the tragic and unnecessary loss of life and property resulting from cigarette-caused fires.

A hearing I chaired a year ago this July before the Special Committee on Aging focused on home fire deaths and examined measures that can substantially reduce the risk of such deaths. Cigarettes cause more than 2,000 deaths a year in residential fires. That's over one-third of all home fire deaths; far more than any other single cause.

Accounts of these deep personal tragedies are buried in the back pages of our newspapers and go practically unnoticed by the public. While they don't capture the headlines, cigarette-caused fires claim over five lives each day. And every day, more than 10 people are maimed or burned beyond recognition. Fire injuries cause enormous pain and suffering—weeks and months spent in burn centers, repeated skin graft surgeries, and permanent scarring and disfigurement.

Home fire casualties have special significance for our Nation's 26 million senior citizens. Compared to other age groups, senior citizens suffer an excessive amount from the fatalities and serious injuries caused by fire. Older persons are two to three times more likely than younger individuals to be victims of home fires caused by cigarettes. The homebound and frail elderly living in private homes are especially vulnerable when fire breaks out. Because of impairments and disabilities, they may be unable to respond appropriately in an emergency and may lack the mobility to escape the fire's destructive path. And because they are less capable of tolerating injury and combating complicating infectious which may result, the elderly are less likely to survive a burn wound than their younger counterparts. But fire does not pick and choose its victims—old and young, as well as innocent, persons are often harmed. Indeed, almost 40 percent of the people who are killed in cigarette-caused fires are not responsible for the accidental fires.

No price tag can be attached to human life nor can any dollar value be placed on pain and suffering; but it is clear that the economic costs of smoking related fires is high—amounting to $300 million in property loss alone in 1981. And the indirect costs of these fires, such as medical care for injured firefighters, also increases the economic costs to society.

At the hearing, we received substantial testimony that many of these human casualties and economic losses could be avoided if the cigarette industry manufactured a safe cigarette, one less likely to get hot enough to ignite upholstery and bedding when left unattended by smokers. These currently exists, however, a basic disagreement as to whether the technology is available to reduce the ignition potential of cigarettes. To settle this dispute and to address the terrible problem of fire and death and injury, I introduced, along with Senators ROTH, CRANSTON, and DANFORTH, the Cigarette Safety Study Act to establish a Federal interagency task force to study cigarette safety and the feasibility of developing a cigarette which has a reduced propensity to ignite upholstered furniture and mattresses. After the introduction of this legislation, we reached an historic compromise with the cigarette industry, which is reflected in the committee amendments.

In order to resolve this disagreement to the satisfaction of all concerned parties, S. 1935 establishes an Interagency Committee on Cigarette and Little Cigar Fire Safety and a technical study group, whose joint goal will be to determine the technical and commercial feasibility, economic impact, and other consequences of developing fire-safe cigarettes and little cigars that will have a minimum propensity to ignite upholstered furniture or mattresses.

The interagency committee will be composed of leading officials from the U.S. Fire Administration, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Consumer Product Safety Commission. The study group, with its more diverse membership, will bring in the views of the tobacco industry, health organizations, fire protection groups, business organizations, as well as relevant Government agencies.

Subject to the oversight of the interagency committee, the study group will perform important technical functions, such as identifying physical characteristics of cigarettes and little cigars which have an impact on fire safety, analyzing the feasibility of physical changes of cigarettes to reduce ignition propensity, and analyzing the costs and benefits to industry and to the public of any product modification. The study group will be responsible for a mandatory final technical report to Congress 30 months after enactment of the act.

The interagency commitee will supplement the technical report with policy recommendations and will be responsible for an interim 1-year status report. Both bodies will have full authorization to conduct hearings, receive evidence, and undertake studies in order to perform their duties.

The bill protects the interests of the tobacco industry while freeing the industry to share information with the committee and the study group. It does this by specifying measures to be taken to protect industry secrets and confidential information. Only written authorizations from the person submitting such information will allow members of either body to disclose the information to persons outside the committee or study group, except where the information is requested by congressional committees.

This undertaking will be a cooperative effort among industry, Government and public experts to explore the feasibility of a cigarette that is safer for the American public. It will provide Congress with the detailed information necessary to make knowledgeable decisions. Passage of S. 1935 is a critical step toward prevention of death, disability and destruction due to cigarette-caused fires.

In closing, I want to thank all of the cosponsors of this legislation for their support. Special thanks is due to the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator ROTH, for holding hearings and guiding this legislation through the committee and to Senator CRANSTON, who has long championed the cause of cigarette safety in the Senate. They and their staffs have made invaluable contributions toward the passage of this important legislation. Finally, I wish to express my deep gratitude to the many health organizations, fire protection and safety groups, and citizens' groups who have led the campaign to prevent the needless fire deaths and injuries caused by cigarettes.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I want to thank my colleagues Senator ROTH and Senator HEINZ for their efforts in bringing the Cigarette Safety Act to a successful close. Without the interest they have shown in addressing our Nation's leading cause of residential fire deaths—accidential cigarette fires—we would not have a bill today.

I am as confident today as I was 4 years ago, when I first introduced legislation to encourage the manufacturing of a fire-safe cigarette, that the production of a safer cigarette is both economically and technically possible.

Despite the fact that there are several cigarette brands currently on the market with a reduced propensity to ignite upholstered furniture and mattresses, discussions over the past few years have revealed that we do not have a complete picture of the relative interactions of the factors contributing to the burn rate of a cigarette. Significant research has been performed on this subject, yet no systematic effort has ever been made to compile all existing information, so that weaknesses in the data can be identified and reconciled and a consensus reached concerning the feasibility of mass-producing safer cigarettes.

There are several reasons for this. Never before have we had the cooperation of the tobacco industry, and never before has the Federal Government had the authority to look at the cigarette as a source of ignition. This bill provides the framework for experts from the tobacco industry, Government, the medical and fire service communities to pool their best efforts. In so doing. I believe we will be brought measurably closer to our shared goal of reducing the deaths, injuries and property damage caused by accidental fires ignited by cigarettes.

A fair and thorough look at the issue of producing a safer cigarette is a solid first step. At the completion of this study, we will assess the policy recommendations made by the interagency committee and then tackle the need for further action.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for third reading.

PROJECTIONS OF ELECTION RESULTS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I now ask the Chair lay before the Senate Calendar Order No. 1164, House Concurrent Resolution 321.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (H. Con. Res. 321) expressing the sense of Congress with respect to the adverse impact of early projections of election results by the news media.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 321. This resolution expresses the sense of the Congress that the news media, in order to protect the integrity of the electoral process, should voluntarily refrain from projecting or characterizing results of elections before the polls for an office have closed.

The controversy surrounding the 1980 elections renewed fears that early projections can diminish voter turnout. In 1980, all three television networks projected Ronald Reagan as the winner before the polls had closed in many Western States. Those projections and the early concession by President Carter apparently convinced many voters that the election was over.

There were numerous reports that voters left the polling places before they cast their ballots, or simply did not show up to vote. While a reduced voter turnout would not have affected the outcome of the Presidential race, it could have altered many other Federal, State, and local races.

The networks and others in the media question whether early projections actually have a negative impact on voter turnout, but it is clear that much of the public perceives these practices to be an important problem. Many citizens, especially in the West, get the impression that their votes don't count as much, or they wonder whether they are being disenfranchised, in effect, by a competition among the news media to be the first to report election information.

I believe this resolution is the most constructive approach to this problem. If we tried to ban the media from issuing early projections, we would run afoul of the first amendment. Uniform poll closing times have been suggested, but that could be expensive to implement, and could not prevent early projections if projections are based on exit polling. Some States are trying to regulate exit polling practices, but that approach may not provide an effective nationwide solution.

This resolution, I believe, provides an acceptable middle ground. It does not have the force of law, so it avoids intruding into sensitive first amendment rights. At the same time, it says to the media that we are all very concerned about the effects of their election reporting practices, and that we believe that self-restraint is called for.

As a result of House and Senate action on this resolution, I note that already one of the television networks has written to its affiliates to inform them that it has modified its election reporting practices. That is really what we are after in this area—some sensitivity on the media's part that they need to exercise self-restraint to fully protect one of our basic rights, the right to vote.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, House Concurrent Resolution 321 has my strong support. Along with my fellow-Members of Congress, I ask the broadcasting networks not to project the outcome of elections in States before the polls close and people have finished voting in those States. This is an important issue in many States, not just those in the Far West, but has especially adverse effects on the west coast, in Alaska, and in Hawaii.

Mr. President, our democracy depends on our citizens' confidence that their participation matters. I am convinced that early election projections undermine our efforts to increase voter turnout. All of the studies done since the 1980 election have shown some degree of loss of voters because of early projections. Although these studies have differed on the amount of loss, any loss can actually change the outcome of a close race.

My State of Washington has played an active role on this subject. The secretary of state, Ralph Munro, has asked the networks for voluntary restraint, as does House Concurrent Resolution 321. Because the networks have not been responsive, the State banned exit polling within 300 feet of the polls. The Federal district court upheld this law.

The networks protest that not projecting elections will interfere with the quality of their news broadcasts, and that it would be suppression of the news. I disagree, and would like to offer the election news broadcasts in Canada as an example the U.S. networks would do well to emulate. I was fortunate to be able to watch the CBC broadcasts over cable in my home in Olympia on September 4, the evening of the national election. I found the election coverage absolutely first rate.

In Canada, there is a virtual blackout on coverage of election news before the polls close in each province. In British Columbia, election coverage begins at 8 p.m., and only at that point do voters learn of the results so far in the eastern provinces. This goes far beyond our resolution, which would continue to allow the networks to reveal the vote counts in New York, even before the polls have closed in California.

The quality of Canadian news does not suffer from these restrictions. The broadcasts include background information on the candidates, panels of experts to comment on the implications of the election results, interviews with the candidates, and the continuous updating of the election results. I found it to be the most interesting and informative election coverage I have ever seen.

I believe exit polling and early election projections are harmful to our democratic processes. I sincerely ask the networks to exercise restraint and to contribute to the largest possible voter turnout this fall, without predicting the election results in States before their polls close.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TORTURE BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I now ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Calendar Order 1184, House Joint Resolution 605.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (H.J. Res. 605) regarding the implementation of the policy of the United States Government in opposition to the practice of torture by an foreign government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of House Joint Resolution 605, which the Senate now considers. This is the companion House joint resolution to Senate Joint Resolution 320 which I introduced in the Senate on June 26, 1984. On that same day, I chaired a committee hearing on the practice of torture by foreign governments, and U.S. efforts to combat its occurrence. I learned at that hearing that torture is routinely practiced in more than 60 countries and that allegations of torture have been reported in almost 100 countries. This shocking reality should compel the attention of all decent people and their governments, and to that end I explored with the witnesses, including representatives from the administration, Amnesty International, the Baha'i religious community, and the International Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, additional ways in which our Government can increase its efforts to curb this grievous practice.

Senate Joint Resolution 320 and House Joint Resolution 605 request the Secretary of State to instruct representatives of the U.S. Government abroad to engage in efforts to combat torture in countries where it is practiced. Both joint resolutions will also require military and law enforcement training provided by the United States to foreign personnel to include instruction in international human rights standards, addressing the practice of torture and the policy of the United States in this regard.

Senator PELL is the principal cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 320 and 36 other Senators including Senators KASSEBAUM, BOSCHWITZ, PRESSLER, MURKOWSKI, SARBANES, and CRANSTON of the Foreign Relations Committee have joined with us in cosponsoring the resolution which was approved by the committee on September 12, 1984. In the House, Chairman FASCELL of the Foreign Affairs Committee introduced House Joint Resolution 605, which was approved unanimously by the Foreign Affairs Committee and passed by the House of Representatives on September 11.

Chairman FASCELL and I are convinced that both international and domestic pressure can be effective in persuading governments to implement measures to reduce and eventually abolish torture. If one victim can be helped by our efforts, those efforts are worthwhile.

I want to give special thanks to Amnesty International for the fine work that that organization has done in focusing attention on this most difficult problem. Hopefully, all of our efforts together will help to expose the practice of torture and convince the practitioners that it is not in their interests to pursue this illegal conduct. Certainly, this will require an enormous and sustained effort to succeed.

We look forward to the day when the universally proclaimed right not to be tortured is, in fact, the reality. Approving the Percy-Fascell joint resolution against torture is one step that we can take now to help achieve that goal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 605) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TITLE III

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Manufacturing Sciences and Robotics Research and Development Act of 1984".

FINDINGS

SEC. 302. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) manufacturing contributes significantly to the Nation's gross domestic product and employs more than one-fifth of the Nation's work force;

(2) transportation and delivery of manufactured goods are vital components of the Nation's interstate commerce;

(3) while manufacturing industries are essential to the economic well-being of the Nation, many manufacturing processes and methods are no longer capable of producing goods as reliable and cost competitive as those produced by foreign industries which utilize modern manufacturing methods and processes;

(4) domestic manufacturing is increasingly threatened by external competition and the development by foreign countries of more efficient manufacturing processes and technologies;

(5) outdated manufacturing methods and processes result in higher costs and in goods and services of inferior quality, to the detriment of consumers of such goods and services;

(6) outdated and inefficient manufacturing processes hinder domestic commerce;

(7) a decline in consumption of domestic manufactured goods due to outdated manufacturing processes produces a resultant decline in transportation;

(8) various sectors of private industry, the Federal Government, and the United States research establishment have not devoted sufficient attention to research on developing new processes and methods to improve the Nation's capability to manufacture goods;

(9) domestic manufacturers have not sufficiently utilized such recent technological changes in manufacturing as programmable automation, robotics, advanced sensors, and computer-assisted design and manufacturing; and

(10) a program to conduct research in more advanced manufacturing processes and methods and to encourage research utilization would strengthen commerce and be beneficial to the Nation's consumers.

(b) The Congress further finds that—

(1) the widespread implementation of robotics and automated manufacturing technology and other practices and activities to implement improved manufacturing methods and processes, including new metallurgical technology, and processes for new nonmetallic materials, including composite materials and ceramics, can improve productivity, enhance quality, and increase competitiveness in a wide variety of domestic manufacturing industries;

(2) because robotics and automated manufacturing systems and other practices and activities to implement improved manufacturing methods and processes, including new metallurgical technology, and processes for new non-metallic materials, including composite materials and ceramics, affect widely divergent segments of industry, a program fostering these technologies should be of broad benefit to domestic manufacturing firms;

(3) a national program of research and information dissemination in robotics and automated manufacturing systems and other practices and activities to implement improved manufacturing methods and processes, including new metallurgical technology, and processes for new non-metallic materials, including composite materials and ceramics, is essential to ensure the timely and widespread implementation of these technologies; and

(4) to ensure the success of this program, the active participation and support of industry, universities, labor, and government are required.

PURPOSE

SEC. 303. It is the purpose of this title to establish a program for conducting research and other activities which will produce more advanced manufacturing technologies and for conducting research on utilization activities to encourage widespread adoption of these technologies.

Any such consortium shall provide a cash or equipment contribution in an amount equal to at least 50 percent of the Federal Government's share. Contributions from the nonprofit participants of the consortium may consist of inkind contributions.

(4) In entering into agreements under this subsection, the Secretary shall consider (with respect to each such agreement)—

(A) the quality of the research which is to be undertaken as a result of the agreement;

(B) the extent of participation by industry in the research to be undertaken as a result of the agreement;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4376) was agreed to.

The committee substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am very pleased today to rise in support of the fiscal year 1985 authorization bill for the National Bureau of Standards. In addition to containing the necessary legislative authorization and direction for the Bureau, the bill also contains two additional titles.

Mr. President, on June 26, the Senate passed an authorization bill (S. 2458) for fiscal year 1985. The funding contained in that bill reflected the Senate's enthusiastic support for several new initiatives at the Bureau of Standards, as well as for continued funding for several existing programs that had been recommended for cuts by the administration. The House did not act on the Senate's bill, and passed an authorization at a slightly lower level. The bill which I am offering today represents a likely consensus between the House and Senate.

The bill authorizes $125,545,000 for NBS for fiscal year 1985. The total authorization includes: $52,030,000 for measurement research and standards; $23,194,000 for engineering measurements and standards; $10 million for computer sciences and technology; $12,168,000 for Core Research Program for innovation and productivity; $8,598,000 for technical competence fund; $5,827,000 for Center for Fire Research; and $13,728,000 for central technical support.

These amounts include: $13,969,000 for the Center for Building Technology; $1,500,000 for cold neutron research; $582,000 for expanded measurement capabilities in ionizing radiation and dosimetry standards and vacuum and leak standards; and $2,960,000 for the computing support facility.

The bill also provides that the Bureau, after consultation with local authorities, may initiate investigations with regard to structural failures in buildings.

The second title of the bill contains an amendment to the National Science Foundation Organic Act of 1950 which clarifies and emphasizes the Foundation's responsibility for fundamental engineering research and education. The selection criteria for National Science Board and advisory committee appointments are also expanded to encourage broad representation of both scientists and engineers, and references to engineering are added throughout the act to parallel existing references to science.

The purpose of this amendment is to more clearly establish the role of the National Science Foundation in supporting our Nation's base of both science and engineering. While NSF currently operates a healthy engineering program, it does so without the benefit of a clearly defined engineering mission. The amendment better defines this mission by explicitly recognizing the Foundation's responsibility for fundamental engineering research and engineering education, both of which are key ingredients for innovation and technological progress.

The amendment I offer here today is identical to S. 2525, introduced earlier this session by my colleague Senator QUAYLE. I would like to congratulate the Senator from Indiana for his excellent leadership on this issue, and also acknowledge the efforts of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources and of my colleagues from the House, Mr. SKEEN and Mr. BROWN. Due in large measure to their outstanding efforts, the House has passed an amendment identical to the one I offer.

There is broad support among both scientists and engineers for this amendment. The National Science Board, the National Academy of Engineering, the National Society of Professional Engineers, the American Society for Engineering Education, the National Association of Land-Grant Universities and the American Association for the Advancement of Science all support this change. Together, these groups have indicated their confidence in the ability of the National Science Foundation to support both science and engineering.

The third title of the bill is the Manufacturing Sciences and Robotics Research and Development Act of 1984. The title is essentially the same as S. 1286, which was unanimously reported by the Senate on June 8, 1984. However, the changed title also reflects significant input from, and negotiation with, the House on several points. In my judgment, the bill which has emerged from those discussions is a stronger and better-focused bill for the effort.

The bill began as the result of some rather startling statistics.

The manufacturing sector provides 23 percent of our national income and a similar fraction of our Nation's civilian employment. But in recent years, manufacturing employment has dropped from 21 million jobs in 1979 to 18 million jobs in 1983. Foreign imports captured 9 percent of the domestic market for manufactured goods in 1983. The United States had a negative balance of trade in manufactured goods in 1982 exceeding $3 billion. Most startling, more than a third of the manufacturing equipment used by U.S. industry is 20 or more years old, the highest percentage of old equipment of any major industrialized country.—Source: Department of Commerce.

Our Nation's manufacturing industries face problems of unprecedented magnitude, including the eroding position of certain sectors in international trade, obsolescent and outdated manufacturing equipment, and the declining reputation of important U.S. consumer products, such as automobiles and consumer electronic equipment. At the same time, the manufacturing sector stands at the brink of enormous opportunities to develop, adapt and use new and better technologies.

Because I believe that the investment of research in these advanced manufacturing technologies is one which will reward us handsomely in the future, I introduced a modest bill to support basic research in this area. This title, the Manufacturing Sciences and Robotics Research and Development Act, provides for funding of university research with a participating role for industry.

One particular provision of the bill, the Centers for Manufacturing Research and Technology Utilization, is a hallmark of the legislation. In many cases, industry has the machinery and equipment, and the knowledge of what it needs in technology development. At the same time, universities have the expertise, educational qualifications, and technical breadth not common to industry, but they may lack the physical resources. Certainly where these conditions exist, there is an opportunity for a symbiotic relationship of benefit to all. In addition, the centers offer the opportunity to expose future young engineers to the importance of manufacturing engineering, traditionally a less sought-after discipline within the engineering field.

The bill does not attempt to pick winners and losers; the consortia seeking a Federal match must provide the lion's share of the funding for research which they themselves believe is needed. Like the National Science Foundation, the bill operates through unsolicited proposals which come to the Secretary of Commerce from universities, industrial sectors, State and local governments who have determined that the research for which they are seeking matching funding is relevant, timely and necessary.

The future of the U.S. economy, of our standard of living and, indeed, of our way of life, depends upon our judiciously choosing to support programs that represent an investment in our future and our children's future. I am confident that the Manufacturing Sciences and Robotics Research and Development Act is such an investment in the future.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON], which clarifies the mission statement of the National Science Foundation with respect to engineering research and educational activities.

This amendment to H.R. 5172, the National Bureau of Standards Authorization Act of 1985, is identical to a bill I introduced in April, S. 2525, which was reported out of the Labor and Human Resources Committee unanimously. I want to thank my good friend from Utah, the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Mr. HATCH, for his vigorous support of the bill and for all of his efforts in moving the legislation through the committee.

I also want to thank the Senator from Washington for his interest in this language and for supporting an increased emphasis on engineering activities within the NSF.

This amendment would add to the mission statement of the NSF the word "engineering" in several places. This would clarify the importance of fundamental engineering research and engineering education to the operation and success of the NSF. Over the last few years, several major reorganizations of the engineering functions have occurred, which has led to some instability and confusion over the status of engineering at the NSF. I believe that the status of engineering is important to the future of the agency and to the future of our country and continuity must be assured.

The addition of this language to the NSF mission statement does not mean that engineering research should be funded at the expense of scientific research. Both science and engineering research are necessary to maintain our Nation's position as a leader in technological and scientific innovation. Science and engineering research can and do complement each other, and often discoveries in one lead to major advances in the other.

NSF support for engineering activities over the past 3 years has increased from approximately $101 million to $147 million to fund important areas of research such as automated manufacturing, robotics, and microelectronics fabrication. This growth in the engineering activities has not come at the expense of other scientific research programs, yet it is indicative of the importance of engineering to our Nation's technological future.

Mr. President, the National Science Foundation and the National Science Board support this amendment and I urge my colleagues to support this language also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is a title amendment. I send the amendment to the title to the desk and ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: An act to authorize appropriations to the Secretary of Commerce for the program of the National Bureau of Standards for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to amend the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the recently enacted Deficit Reduction Act contained a series of provisions further regulating the issuance of tax-exempt bonds for private purposes, such as industrial development bonds and mortgage subsidy bonds. One of the key antiabuse provisions of the act was the extension to the District of Columbia and the U.S. possessions of the general rules applicable to the 50 States. Most importantly, the act closed down the practice of territories issuing tax-exempt arbitrage bonds that would be illegal if issued by a State. In the case of mortgage subsidy bonds, the act required the territories to comply with the rules of section 103A of the Internal Revenue Code limiting each State or possession to a total of $200 million of bonds, or 9 percent of their recent mortgage originations. Of course, the entire mortage subsidy bond program authorized by section 103A was also extended for 4 years.

During consideration of the tax bill, several States raised concerns about the administration of this volume limitation, and we were happy to allow the Governors of Nevada, Texas, and Kentucky temporary authority to allocate their State bond volume among different State and local agencies. Unfortunately, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico also had a problem in this regard, but did not bring it to our attention until after the bill was passed.

The ordinary solution for a problem of this nature would be to modify the statute in an omnibus technical corrections bill, which would not be considered until some time next year. The Commonwealth explained to us, however, that unless the Governor was given the allocation authority this year, he would be unable to exercise the authority until it was too late, since each year's mortgage bond volume expires if it is not used at year end.

Because of the urgency of the Commonwealth's concerns, I agreed to consider an expedited resolution of this matter by amending this House-passed territories bill. Ordinarily, I would have asked that the bill be referred to the Finance Committee for consideration of the issue. But since there is agreement on the substance of the provision by Senator LONG, the ranking minority member, the Treasury Department, the Joint Committee on Taxation staff, and the majority and minority staff of the Finance Committee, I see no reason why the amendment cannot be approved without referral to the Finance Committee.

The amendment extends to Puerto Rico and the other possessions the same flexibility to allocate bond volume on a temporary basis that was given to the States of Texas, Nevada, and Kentucky. I am pleased that we were able to solve a serious problem for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico by adopting this amendment.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the amendments adopted by the House to the Senate amendment to H.R. 5561 are acceptable and I urge the Senate to concur in those amendments.

I would like to briefly review the House amendments and the reasons for agreeing to them.

The House has included a provision permitting the refinancing of Guam Power Authority's loan at 7 percent. The Senate had rejected any consideration of this provision so long as ratesetting was not independent. Subsequent to the Senate action, the Governor of Guam and the speaker of the legislature agreed to enact legislation to insulate ratesetting from politics. I want to make it clear that there is no intention to dictate from Washington how that independence is achieved, only that it be achieved and maintained. With that understanding, we are prepared to agree to the House language which is generally consistent, except for the rate, with the position taken by the administration in hearings before the Senate. I do want to note that the refinancing is contingent upon prior enactment of local legislation establishing independent ratemaking and maintenance of that independence.

The House has also included an amendment to correct a technical oversight in the Deficit Reduction Act which neglected to include the territories in the definition of State in granting Governors the authority to allocate mortgage subsidy bonds if the local legislature is not able to meet. I understand that this is a clarifying amendment acceptable to both the Finance, and Ways and Means Committees.

The House has also included technical amendments prepared by the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to clarify that the Senate amendments in title III will not apply to the Northern Mariana Islands until after termination of the trusteeship. That amendment is consistent with the Senate intent and recognizes that the Northern Marianas is still a part of the Trust Territory and not yet a territory of the United States.

The House also insisted on its position that the $600,000 authorized for the Virgin Islands airport be a general authorization rather than being included in technical assistance. That is also the preference of the Appropriations Subcommittee and the administration, and is agreeable.

The explanation of the Senate amendments stated that we were increasing the authorization for water distribution facilities in the Marianas and deleting the House limitation of funding only in fiscal year 1985. The amendment, however, was not included. The House has included the amendment and the appropriate figure of $15 million in its amendments.

The House has included language permitting the Corps of Engineers to remove the generators on loan to American Samoa but prohibited the Department of the Interior from financing their rehabilitation. Given the condition of the generators, it makes no sense to expend the limited resources available to Samoa on generators well past their useful life.

The House has also revised a limitation which it had earlier placed on land transferred to Guam for development of Apra Harbor. The amendment would permit Guam to recover development costs while having profits accrue to the United States. I believe the amendment is a useful improvement in that it will permit Guam to develop its only commercial port.

The House also has sought to clarify the application of section 30 of the Organic Act of Guam to residents of Guam. Section 30 provides for the cover over of taxes collected by the Federal Government on residents of Guam to the Government of Guam. The administration raised a technical question on the effect of a 1972 act on the coverage of section 30. The House amendment clarifies that the original intent of section 30 still applies and that all residents are covered.

The House has also included a provision which allows a limited visa waiver for persons traveling to Guam for business or pleasure of not to exceed 15 days. Guam is not a point of entry into the United States and this limited waiver would not offer anyone the opportunity to enter other parts of the United States from Guam without a visa or clearing immigration.

The House has included three changes to the judicial reform titles. The first would clarify that the circuit court of appeals can proceed to review by writ of certiorari as contemplated by the Senate action during the 15-year transition after a local court of appeals is established. The second would permit the current chief judge of the district court in the Virgin Islands to continue as chief judge. The third would remove those provisions dealing with the jurisdiction of the district court of the Marianas and the Trust Territory High Court over the Trust Territory government. Although the Senate had conducted two hearings over the last 3 years and submitted drafts on the legislation to all territories and the administration, the Marianas chose to wait until after Senate action to submit a series of technical questions all of which could have been easily resolved with a little time. I do not disagree with the House action which deletes these provisions until we can review the questions and the administration can comment, but I do not want our concurrence to be interpreted as a lack of commitment to see that legislation is enacted promptly next year. I would note also that under sections 706(b) and 801, interlocutory appeals from an order of a district court judge would be governed in the same manner as such interlocutory appeals in the district courts are now governed—that is, under 28 U.S.C. 1292.

Mr. President, this is a good bill and I believe the House amendments are useful improvements. I urge its enactment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

(2) the recommendations of the Secretary for any additional action the Secretary considers necessary with respect to the pipeline facilities referred to in subsection (a)(1) of this section, together with an estimate of the time and resources necessary for undertaking such actions.

(d) As used in this section, the term—

(1) "interstate transmission facilities" shall have the meaning given to such term in section 2(8) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 (49 U.S.C. App. 1671(8));

(2) "person" shall have the meaning given to such term in section 2(1) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 (49 U.S.C. App. 1671(1)); and

(3) "pipeline facilities" shall have the meaning given to such term in section 2(4) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 (49 U.S.C. App. 1671(4)).

SEC. 7. (a) Section 14(a) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 (49 U.S.C. App. 1681(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In conducting training activities for State or local government personnel in the enforcement of regulations issued under this Act, the Secretary may not assess any charge or fee in the nature of tuition,.".

(b) Section 211(a) of the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979 (49 U.S.C. App. 2010(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In conducting training activities for State or local government personnel in the enforcement of regulations issued under this Act, the Secretary may not assess any charge or fee in the nature of tuition.".

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, on June 21, 1984, the Senate passed S. 2688, a bill dealing with pipeline safety. On June 25, the House of Representatives passed its own version of the bill. Today, we are considering a substitute bill, which represents a compromise between the Senate and House-passed versions of S. 2688.

Section 1 of the substitute bill authorizes appropriations to support the natural gas pipeline safety activities of the Department of Transportation [DOT] and those States that help enforce DOT's pipeline safety regulations. Specifically, it authorizes for fiscal 1985 $3,472,000 for DOT, and $3,728,000 for the States. Similarly, section 2 of the bill authorizes for fiscal 1985 $900,000 to support DOT's hazardous liquid pipeline safety activities and $500,000 for the States. Under the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 [NGPSA] and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979 [HLPSA], DOT is responsible for developing and enforcing regulations governing the safe transportation by pipeline of natural gas and other hazardous liquids, such as gasoline. These statutes also define the enforcement role of the States.

The authorization levels contained in sections 1 and 2 of the substitute bill are the same as those in the original Senate-passed version of S. 2688. What is different here is that the substitute bill provides for a 1-year authorization, instead of a 2-year authorization. This change reflects the provisions of the House-passed bill whose sponsors have said they want to use next year to review DOT's response to a recently published GAO report on the pipeline safety program. As the chairman of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee, I have no objection to the 1-year authorization. Further, I expect my committee to also use the opportunity to review DOT's response.

Section 3 of the substitute bill amends the date and the manner of transmission for DOT's annual pipeline reports to Congresss. This section is identical to that contained in the original Senate-passed version of S. 2688.

Sections 4 and 5 of the substitute bill direct the Secretary of Transportation to perform two separate studies. Both studies were provided for in the original House-passed version of S. 2688. The first deals with issues related to the transportation of methanol through interstate liquid pipelines. The second deals with the feasibility of and costs connected with various methods of testing and inspection of hazardous liquid pipelines. Both studies should provide Congress with helpful information. Accordingly, I have no objection to their inclusion in the substitute bill.

Section 6 of the substitute bill mandates a one-time survey of interestate pipeline facilities constructed prior to 1940. Within 180 days, owners or operators of such facilities are required to submit to the Secretary of Transportation a report on the location and condition of these facilities, along with the results of the most recent leak survey information relating to such pipelines. If, after examining these reports, the Secretary determines that a pipeline may be hazardous to life and property according to the criteria set forth in section 12(b) of the NGPSA, then the Secretary is to inspect the pipeline. The Secretary is to review the reports and take any necessary action within 90 days after the reports are due. Within 180 days after the pipeline companies report, the Secretary is to report to Congress on implementation of this survey, along with any additional recommendations concerning pre-1940 pipe that the Secretary believes are warranted.

Section 6 is based on a provision contained in the original House-passed version of S. 2688. It reflects the belief of the House sponsors that the one-time survey will help supplement DOT's ongoing safety program as well as insure the safe condition of older interstate natural gas pipeline facilities. At the same time, section 6 includes certain changes that I and other members of the Commerce Committe believed were necessary in order to avoid draining the limited resources of DOT and placing an undue burden on the pipeline industry.

There are a couple of terms referred to in section 6 that I want to clarify, because there may be questions about them. First, the information required of the pipeline owner or operator concerning the "location and condition" of pre-1940 pipe should be information based upon the normal records the company has prepared in the course of business and from the periodic reports, made to DOT under the Pipeline Safety Act. Second, the "most recent leak survey information" refers to the information used as the basis for the last annual leak report to the Department, unless more recent information is available.

I also would clarify, as did the House when they passed their original bill, that the required inspection of any pipelines the Secretary may find to be potentially hazardous does not necessarily refer to a physical excavation of the pipeline. Inspection techniques may also include reviewing leak survey data, pipeline patroling with leak detectors, and serial surveys, as well as excavation in cases where earlier inspection indicates a need to do so.

Section 7 of the substitute bill provides that in conducting training activities for State of local government personnel in the enforcement of DOT pipeline safety regulations, the Secretary may not assess tuition charges. This provision reflects the view of my committee that the cost of training State inspectors to enforce Federal regulations should continue to be the responsibility of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, in closing I want to assure our colleagues that this substitute bill is a good compromise bill. Accordingly, I urge them to support it. I also would note that if the Senate passes the bill, then I would expect the House to do the same in very short order.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the amendment being offered today in the nature of a substitute to S. 2688, the pipeline safety authorization, represents a sound compromise between the House and Senate pipeline safety reauthorization bills. I urge my colleagues to support the substitute, which I understand the House will accept without a conference.

I would like to comment briefly on a provision in the substitute relating to the safety of older pipelines, which is based on a provision in the House bill but also reflects concerns raised in the Senate. Section 4 of the substitute provides for a one-time assessment of the safety of older pipelines. It requires the pipeline companies to identify the location of, evaluate the condition of, and compile the most recent leak information on pipelines constructed prior to 1940, a date which corresponds to the reporting systems of the pipelines. The leak information required by this provision would be the most current annual information gathered by the pipelines for DOT, unless more recent data is available. In addition, any safety assessment made by the pipeline companies of the condition of the older pipes would be based on information prepared in the regular course of business and normally compiled for DOT.

Using the information required from the pipelines under the substitute, DOT is to inspect any pipeline determined pursuant to existing law to be hazardous to life or property. The DOT inspection need not necessarily include physical excavation of pipelines; however, it could include a review of leak survey data, pipeline patroling with leak detectors, and aerial surveys, in addition to excavation where necessary. Also, DOT should report to Congress any actions taken pursuant to this provision where a situation is determined to be hazardous, and any recommendations for further action deemed to be necessary, based on the data compiled and the inspections conducted, to ensure the safety of older pipelines.

Thus, the substitute provides that an assessment be made as to the safety of older pipes, a concern which the House expressed in passing its pipeline safety bill. This assessment would be made on existing and available data so as to minimize any unnecessary and undue burden on the industry, which is of concern to members of the Senate Commerce Committee. Further action is contemplated under this provision if a safety problem is revealed that warrants additional attention by DOT and Congress, so as to ensure that the already limited DOT resources are appropriately allocated to safety problems, which the Senate Commerce Committee continues to seek for all safety matters.

This legislation is intended to continue the positive efforts to maintain the safety of the pipeline industry. The pipeline safety laws established design, construction, operation, and maintenance safety standards, and the DOT regulations require specific testing and inspection procedures. Industry compliance with these laws and regulations has led to an improved pipeline safety record in 1983. Passage of this legislation will continue such improvements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to. The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. CON. RES. 139

Whereas peace in South Africa can be achieved only through addressing the legitimate political aspirations of the nation's black majority;

Whereas no South African Government reform proposal has sought to involve the nation's black majority in the direction of national affairs;

Whereas eligible voter turnout in the recent elections for Asian and "colored" representatives to a minority parliament was extremely low;

Whereas the South African Government has arbitrarily arrested and indefinitely detained approximately two hundred peaceful opponents of the Government's new constitutional arrangements; and

Whereas the South African Government has used extra-legal means to redetain men and women already released from detention by a high ranking South African court of law: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

(1) the United States should not lend its support to any South African constitutional reform arrangements which do not begin to address the legitimate political aspirations of the nation's black majority;

(2) the United States Congress condemns the South African Government's arbitrary arrests and indefinite detention of peaceful opponents to the Government's constitutional arrangements;

(3) the United States Congress is dismayed by the South African Government's decision to defy and to bypass the legal rulings of its own high courts in order to suppress lawful political opposition; and

(4) the South African Government should immediately terminate its practice of arbitrary arrests and detention and should release those men and women who have been arbitrarily imprisoned for having expressed, publicly and peacefully, their political preferences.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I am pleased to welcome this important piece of legislation, S. 32, back to the Senate, following its consideration and approval by the other body. This bill will make a needed reform in the copyright law to protect copyrights in sound recordings. Although the House has modified this bill slightly through a substitute draft, S. 32 remains a timely and effective response to a growing threat to our copyright system.

I want to take this opportunity to compliment Representative KASTENMEIER, the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice; Representative EDWARDS, the chief sponsor of the companion House bill, H.R. 5938; and Representative RODINO, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, for their able work in processing this legislation. Their thoughtful consideration of the issues presented by this bill has been crucial to its forward progress.

Let me briefly review the purpose of this legislation. In April 1983, the Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights, and Trademarks held a hearing on the commercial rental of copyrighted works. At that hearing, we learned that a number of record rental outlets had opened around the country. We also learned about what sort of business these outlets were in: The business of encouraging customers to take records home, tape them, and return them to the rental outlet. The advertisements of some of these outlets made their appeal explicit. One advertised "Never, ever buy another record!" Another touted its "free blank tape policy."

Under the current Copyright Act, these outlets had an arguable defense: the so-called first sale doctrine. Traditionally, this doctrine has insulated the purchaser of a particular copy of a copyrighted work from any copyright liability when he or she disposes of that copy. Although that principle remains a sound one in most instances, the advent of commercial record rental—with its direct link to copying—calls for a modification of that rule. To deal with the dangers posed by record rentals, S. 32 makes a commonsense reform: It requires that one obtain the permission of the copyright owner before one may commercially rent sound recordings.

In most respects, the version of S. 32 approved in the other body is identical to the bill approved by unanimous consent by the Senate in June 1983. However, I want to mention two significant differences between the House and Senate bills. The first is that the House bill contains a sunset provision, making the bill applicable for only 5 years, and requiring reenactment before that time if it is to remain in force. The Senate bill, by contrast, would make a permanent change in the law in this regard. The House committee report states that the sunset provision is designed to "enable the committee to review and reconsider the appropriateness and justification for this legislation at a later time."

In an age of rapid technological change, the legislative agenda concerning intellectual property issues is a crowded one. Only if it is sufficiently likely that circumstances will significantly change in the record rental area in the next 5 years, should we divert ourselves from this agenda and devote more time and effort to reenacting this important reform. The Senate did not find that likelihood. Indeed, the consistent trend of the past 25 years is that unauthorized copying has become steadily easier and more of a threat to traditional copyright principles. But this disagreement should not hold up enactment of this bill. I wish to emphasize, however, that sunset provisions are not necessarily appropriate in connection with other copyright reforms, and that each future bill will need to be evaluated on an individual basis in this regard.

The second significant House amendment to this bill is a provision that precludes the application of criminal penalties for the violation of this act. Under the Senate-passed bill, the criminal penalties that have historically been available under the Copyright Act would apply with full force to the most egregious violations of the record rental right. The House chose to eliminate criminal enforcement in this area, on the ground that the definition of prohibited rental practices might be insufficiently precise to support criminal prosecution.

It is important to be clear about what the criminal exemption in the house bill means. As I read that provision, it bars the application of criminal penalties for the mere unauthorized rental or lending of copyrighted sound recordings. The amendment does not, however, confer immunity from criminal penalties for independent violations of the Copyright Act, merely because one's activity involved the rental or lending of sound recordings. Thus, to take a dramatic example, one whose role in a massive record piracy conspiracy consisted of lending records to the operation, knowing that they would be used as masters to create thousands of illegal copies, would not be exempt from criminal liability merely because his or her activity consisted of lending the recordings to his or her confederates.

It should not be inferred from the Senate's acceptance of this House amendment that we believe that any general retreat from criminal remedies for copyright infringement is warranted. The Copyright Act makes criminal penalties applicable only against persons who infringe copyrights "willfully" and "for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain." Thus, no innocent infringer could ever be liable for criminal copyright infringement. Nor could any individual who simply infringed copyrights for his or her own personal use. Rather, the criminal provisions of the Copyright Act are carefully targeted at "willful infringement for profit." Given this narrow focus on the most egregious violations of the copyright laws, I believe that criminal penalties should continue to play an important role in deterring the outright theft of the labors of creative artists and writers.

The importance of maintaining a meaningful criminal enforcement system is underscored by the fact that, as many have observed, we live in an age in which intellectual property plays an increasingly vital part both in the domestic U.S. economy and in our international trade. Copyrighted works such as books, films, records, and computer software do more than just supply entertainment and needed information—they also provide jobs to millions of Americans. The export of these same goods is an increasingly important part of our international trade. In addition, the United States is a world leader in the creation and marketing of other forms of intellectual property. In particular, American inventors have enriched the world with patented inventions as familiar as from machinery and as novel as man-made forms of bacterial life. In view of the increasing importance of intellectual property within both the national and world economy, it would be highly inappropriate to begin weakening the penalties for egregious violations of intellectual property rights.

I wholeheartedly urge Senators to support this legislation, and I hope that it will be promptly enacted into law.

Mr. BAKER. Mr President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1179.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 435) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of H.R. 5147.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 435

Resolved, That, pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of H.R. 5147. Such waiver is necessary because H.R. 5147 authorizes the enactment of new budget authority which would first become available in fiscal year 1985 and such bill was not reported by the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation on or before May 15, 1984. H.R. 5147 would authorize to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1985 to implement the Eastern Pacific Ocean Tuna Fishing Agreement, signed in San Jose, Costa Rica, March 15, 1983.

The Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation did not consider H.R. 5147 because the bill was not received in the Senate until May 2, 1984, which left inadequate time for thorough consideration of the bill by the committee before May 15, 1984. The bill had been reported by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on April 26, 1984, and passed the House on May 1, 1984.

The authorizations contained in H.R. 5147 are necessary to ensure that sufficient funds are available for various Federal agencies to carry out their activities under such agreement.

EASTERN PACIFIC TUNA LICENSING ACT OF 1984

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1055, which is the measure referred to in the budget waiver.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5147) to implement the Eastern Pacific Ocean Tuna Fishing Agreement, signed in San Jose, Costa Rica, March 15, 1983.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, today the Senate is acting on a bill, H.R. 5147, which implements, for the United States, the Eastern Pacific Ocean Tuna Fishing Agreement [EPOTFA] and its protocol.

The EPOTFA was signed and ratified by the United States to provide a workable international management regime for eastern Pacific tuna resources. The highly migratory nature of tuna, which pass through many coastal jurisdictions, has led the United States to maintain that tuna resources cannot be managed unilaterally by coastal States. Instead, tuna must be conserved and managed cooperatively by the nations bordering on the tuna's migratory range.

In the past, tuna were managed by the Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission [IATTC]. The advent of 200-mile fishery conservation zones and the modernization of tuna fleets by many nations have resulted in claims by certain coastal States of jurisdiction over tuna in their zones. The United States does not recognize these claims, thus leading to seizures of U.S. tuna vessels by nations, specifically, Mexico and Costa Rica. The IATTC was weakened by these changes. In response, a new authority is established under the Eastern Pacific Ocean Tuna Fishing Agreement.

The EPOTFA creates an international authority to issue regional licenses for tuna fishing. The geographic area covered by the license would include from 12 to 200 miles of the coasts of nations party to the agreement, and would cover an ocean area of over 2 million square miles extending from California to Chile and over 1,000 miles seaward.

H.R. 5147 implements an international management regime that will provide stability for a U.S. tuna fleet that harvests over $200 million worth of tuna annually. Specifically, the bill directs the Secretary of State to appoint the U.S. representative and alternates to the international authority, which will issue regional tuna fishing licenses. Further, the bill provides that any U.S. tuna vessel that is seized by a foreign nation pursuant to the provisions of the EPOTFA would be ineligible for compensation under provisions of the Fishermen's Protective Act of 1967. Also, the legislation makes clear that the U.S. Government will not invoke import prohibitions as provided under the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act [MFCMA] against any nation that seizes a U.S. tuna vessel, if the seizure was made in accordance with provisions of the EPOTFA.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to issue regulations to implement the terms of the EPOTFA. The regulations would be applicable to all persons and vessels subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. In addition, H.R. 5147 sets out unlawful acts for persons under jurisdiction of the United States that would violate the regulations implementing the EPOTFA. It is necessary to point out that the committee report mistakenly refers to criminal penalties in detailing the penalties for persons convicted of engaging in acts prohibited by this legislation. For engaging in activities prohibited by this act, only civil penalties are applied.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

COMMENDATION OF SENATOR GOLDWATER AS PRESIDING OFFICER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished occupant of the chair, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER]. He has participated now in handling the passage of bills and resolutions running to a few dozen or more, and that is important to the Senate. It is an essential part of the Senate's business.

As everyone knows, what we did just now was pass a great deal of legislation that had been cleared for action routinely on both sides of the aisle. But it is a special burden on the Presiding Officer to do that, and to do it in rapid-fire order, so to speak; and I wish to express my personal gratitude to the occupant of the chair for putting up with us and handling this matter so very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No need to waste time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
